Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain on the Speaker's table. The Committee on Public Lands has reported identically this bill, and it is on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair would suppose it would be proper to refer it to the calendar.

Mr. MANN. No; just have it lie on the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill S. 7515 may remain on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think it ought to go back to its place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The point is that the bill is in an anomalous position. It was taken from the committee, and it is resting here without any place to go.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order discharging the committee from further consideration of the bill be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EL PASO & ROCK ISLAND RAILWAY CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2278) granting the El Paso & Rock Island Railway Co. a right of way for its pipe lines and reservoir upon the Lincoln National Forest for the carrying and storage of water for railroad purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TREATMENT OF LEPROSY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20040) to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] prepared any amendments to the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have not. I have been waiting for suggestions from the gentleman from Illinois. If the gentleman will permit the bill to proceed, I am perfectly willing to strike out the words "or sites," in line 5, and at such other places in the bill where it is necessary, so as to provide for only one site. I would prefer, of course, to have others.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the authorization of one is enough at this time. I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well; I shall offer that amendment when the time comes.

Mr. MANN. There are several other amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what is the idea of granting ad libitum authority to the Surgeon General to grant allowances to those surgeons assigned to duty at this leprosery?

Mr. ADAMSON. I presume it is on account of the extra hazardous and disagreeable work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should there be unlimited discretion granted to the Surgeon General to grant any allowances to those surgeons?

Mr. MANN. That is the law now. That does not change the law. It provides for one-half of the pay and allowances extra that are granted by the Surgeon General, and while theoretically they are allowed to fix it, practically it is beyond their control.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as one-half increased pay is concerned, I do not believe there is any serious objection to that, because it is a very dangerous and hazardous employment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Where are the particular words to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. MANN. This relates to allowances to the man who goes there. This is not one-half of the allowance.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am directing attention particularly to the phrase in line 13, page 3.

Mr. MANN. I should suppose if they got a permanent surgeon at a leprosy hospital that they would probably have to make him more allowances than the regular allowance.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I think that contemplates legal allowances, and the language proceeds to say "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury." So it is not arbitrary with the Surgeon General.

Mr. MANN. On first reading of the bill I supposed that it meant one-half pay and allowances, but on reading the bill again I concluded it meant to give him extra one-half the pay of his grade; and, then, there should be a comma there; and then the language goes on, "and such allowances as may be provided by the Surgeon General." In other words, it was not to be one-half of the ordinary allowances, but they were to be permitted to make extra allowances for him.

Mr. ADAMSON. I presume it must be the legal allowance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under this phraseology the Surgeon General, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, could grant any allowance he saw fit.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. If you do not think it contemplates a lawful allowance we can say so.

Mr. MANN. That is a lawful allowance. They probably would have to make him an extra allowance. If they wanted me to go to a leprosery they would have to make me an extra allowance, although there are some people I know whom I would be very glad to locate there and pay them a considerable extra allowance.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are a great many on the other side who would like to have that distinction fall on many gentlemen on this side.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not many, only a few.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman does not intend to be personal to anybody. I desire to say in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am not partisan enough to wish that bad luck on any gentleman on that side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not publicly, but maybe privately.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; not privately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to select and obtain, by purchase or otherwise, a site or sites suitable for the establishment of a home or homes for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy, to be administered by the United States Public Health Service; and the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury any abandoned military, naval, or other reservation suitable for the purpose, or as much thereof as may be necessary, with all buildings and improvements thereon, to be used for the purpose of said home or homes.

SEC. 2. That there shall be received into said home or homes, under regulations prepared by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, any person afflicted with leprosy who presents himself or herself for care, detention, and treatment, or who may be apprehended under authority of the United States quarantine acts, or any person afflicted with leprosy duly consigned to said home or any of said homes by the proper health authorities of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is authorized, upon request of said authorities, to send for any person afflicted with leprosy within their respective jurisdictions, and to convey said person to any such home for detention and treatment, and when the transportation of any such person is undertaken for the protection of the public health the expense of such removal shall be paid from funds set aside for the maintenance of said home or homes.

SEC. 3. That regulations shall be prepared by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the government and administration of said home or homes and for the apprehension, detention, treatment, and release of all persons who are inmates thereof.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause the erection upon such site or sites of suitable and necessary buildings for the purposes of this act at a cost not to exceed the sum herein appropriated for such purpose.

SEC. 5. That when any commissioned or other officer of the Public Health Service is detailed for duty at the home or homes herein provided for he shall receive, in addition to the pay and allowances of his grade, one-half the pay of said grade and such allowances as may be provided by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the preparation of said home or homes, including the erection of necessary buildings, the maintenance of the patients, pay and maintenance of necessary officers and employees, until June 30, 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 5, page 1, the words "or sites" and to strike out, in line 6, the words "or homes" and to strike out, in lines 3 and 4, page 2, the words "or homes."

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all right; I am willing to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, in line 5, strike out the words "or sites"; in line 6, strike out the words "or homes"; on page 2, in lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "or homes."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 10, page 1, the word "is" and insert the words "are respectively." It is a grammatical error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, in line 10, strike out the word "is" and insert the words "are respectively."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if that is done we will have to change the connecting word "or" at the beginning of line 10. As it is it is disjunctive; if you are going to make it conjunctive you will have to put the word "and" in the place of "or."

Mr. MANN. I do not think so, but if the gentleman prefers the present grammatical construction, I have no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. It says "and the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to transfer." That is good as it is.

Mr. MANN. All right; I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. This bill was read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent for the following amendments: Page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "or homes"; page 2, line 12, strike out the words "or any of said homes"; page 3, line 6, strike out the words "or sites."

Mr. STAFFORD. And strike out, in lines 21 and 22, the words "or homes."

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And also the word "any," in line 17, page 2. Should not that be stricken out?

Mr. MANN. Do not let the Clerk get it all mixed up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "or homes"; page 3, line 11, strike out the words "or homes."

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. In line 17, should not the word "any" be stricken out? It says, "to any such home." There is only one home. The word "any" presupposes more than one.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all right. All of these changes are mere verbal changes.

Mr. MANN. And strike out the word "any," in line 17, page 2.

Mr. ADAMSON. These are all proper verbal changes to conform with the amendment already agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House agree to the amendments which have been indicated by him.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk had better report them, to see that he gets them correctly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "or homes"; page 2, line 12, strike out the words "or any of said homes"; line 17, strike out the word "any"; in lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "or homes"; page 3, line 6, strike out the words "or sites"; line 11, strike out the words "or homes."

Mr. MANN. And in line 20 strike out the words "or homes."

Mr. STAFFORD. And line 1, page 3, to strike out the words "or homes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 1, page 3, strike out the words "or homes"; line 20, strike out the words "or homes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This section 6—of course I do not know whether this bill is likely to pass, but I do not think you can do anything under section 6. There is a limitation on the appropriation of $250,000 until June 30, 1916. They can not finish a building by that time.

Mr. STAFFORD. They may be able to contract to make the money available two years after that date.

Mr. MANN. There will be no maintenance during the next year.

Mr. ADAMSON. I presume, though, it means that we spend that much in progress up to that time.

Mr. MANN. I think there ought to be a limit of cost. I move to strike out all of the section of the bill after the word "buildings," in line 21, page 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. The idea of the gentleman from Illinois is that it will not be ready for occupancy?

Mr. MANN. It will not be, I think; but if it is, a deficiency appropriation will cover it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the bill after the word "buildings," in line 21.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is this to say about that: I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that if the department should succeed in acquiring a site it is possible it will be ready for occupation and operation at once.

Mr. MANN. All right; I will withdraw the amendment, if I may. If you want to take the chances on it, all right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. The amendment we have made confining it to one would make it easier to secure one than it would be to secure two or more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SITE FOR PUBLIC BUILDING, HARTFORD, CONN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18310) to acquire a site for a public building at Hartford, Conn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BATH, ME.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1702) increasing the limit of cost fixed by act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, for enlargement, extension, etc., of Federal building at Bath, Me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to know what particular work was authorized in the original authorization and was eliminated that necessitates the expenditure of $10,000 additional?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say, Mr. Speaker, the department says it is the approaches and a number of other betterments of that sort, and, I think, a better fireproof construction, that they had to leave out, and they need this much money to complete them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think it is of sufficient importance to pass under the existing condition of the Treasury, and I shall have to object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 1702 be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VALIDATING CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21122) to validate certain homestead entries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill was under consideration on the last unanimous-consent day, and the question arose as to wherein these entrymen did not have the privilege of paying the appraised value in obtaining the lands on which they entered under a misapprehension caused by the public-land officials.

Mr. FERRIS. That is right. I stated at that time, if the gentleman will recall, in the colloquy between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and myself, that I was personally on the ground and saw notices that were published at that time. I did not have them with me then, but since that time I have communicated with the United States commissioner who takes the proof down there and who is still commissioner and has been commissioner for 12 or 13 years. He sends me a copy of the note that was published in the paper inviting the people to come on the land, and I have also here a letter from the department that tells the local land office to give publicity to this opening. I shall be glad to read the letter of the department to the gentleman. It is under the date of March 3, 1911. The letter is from the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office to the register and receiver of the General Land Office, and it reads:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, March 3, 1911.

Restoration near Wichita National Forest, Okla.

Restoration of public lands to settlement and entry. Notation ordered.

REGISTER AND RECEIVER, Guthrie, Okla.

GENTLEMEN: The vacant unappropriated public lands in the following-described areas, which were temporarily withdrawn for forestry purposes on January 29, 1906, and adjoin the Wichita National Forest, Okla., if not otherwise withdrawn or reserved, will be restored to the public domain on May 16, 1911, and become subject to settlement on and after that date, but not to entry, filing, or selection until on and after June 15, 1911, under the usual restrictions, at your office.

In T. 5 N., R. 14 W., NE. ¼ sec. 30, secs. 31 and 32.

In T. 5 N., R. 15 W., sec. 32 and E. ½ sec. 36, Indian meridian.

You will make the proper notations of this restoration to settlement and entry upon your records, post the copy hereof in a conspicuous place in your office, and give as much publicity to the restoration as possible as a matter of news.

This restoration is made upon the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, dated February 14, 1911.

A diagram showing the areas to be restored is hereto attached.

Very respectfully,

S. V. PROUDFIT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Approved March 3, 1911.

FRANK PIERCE,
First Assistant Secretary.

And the diagram shows the land to be restored. Now, let me read the notice to the gentleman that was published in the paper after that letter went out there. It is as follows:

OPENING NEW LANDS SOON.

The vacant unappropriated public lands in the following-described areas, if not otherwise withdrawn or reserved, will be restored to the public domain on May 16, 1911, and become subject to settlement on and after that date, but not to entry and filing or selection until on and after June 15, 1911, under the usual restrictions at the United States land office, Lawton, Okla.

(Then follows description of lands.)

This restoration is made upon the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, dated February 14, 1911. It includes 21,830 acres. The usual restrictions requiring payment of $1.25 per acre when final proof is made will be in force.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA, County of Comanche, ss:

Charles C. Black, being first duly sworn upon his oath according to law, deposes and says that he is the editor of the Lawton News, formerly the Lawton News-Republican, and as such has charge of the records and files of said publication; that he finds in the issue of the daily of the Lawton News-Republican of March 10, 1911, a notice of which the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy.

CHARLES C. BLACK.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of February.

H. R. BLANDING,
United States Commissioner, Lawton, Okla.

Mr. STAFFORD. On the former occasion I did not question that there had been a publication and that these people were led to believe that these lands were open to entry, but at that time I could not see wherein any of these persons had entered under the provisions of the act approved June 30, 1913.

Mr. FERRIS. They entered way prior to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. They entered under the act of March 3, 1911.

Mr. FERRIS. No; they did not. If they had entered, no doubt the gentleman would be entirely correct. The act that the gentleman refers to was an amendment placed upon the Indian appropriation bill, and the General Land Office and the local land office people did not pursue the provisions of that act, but instead of that they went ahead and provided for the opening of the land. No doubt it was an oversight. No doubt they did not see the amendment in the appropriation bill. They have now paid $1.25 an acre for it. They did exhaust their homestead right. Forty-two of them have entered and complied with the homestead law. Now we ask that they be permitted to do the thing they started out to do, and the thing which they had a right to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why do they ask to be relieved of the provisions of the act of 1913?

Mr. FERRIS. Because the later act provides that they shall pay the highest price for this land, under rules and regulations such as the department prescribes. After a man is permitted to homestead, and after he has filed on the land and exhausted his right and proved it and sold his land, it is preposterous for the Government to come along and say, "I will take it away from you and sell it to somebody else, or else make you pay full value for it."

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand, the only people to whom this bill applies are those who took advantage under the erroneous publication?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely.

Mr. STAFFORD. And no one who entered by reason of the act of June 30, 1913, is affected?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no. They did not enter under the act of June 30, 1913. They bought. They did not make homestead entries at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says here in the bill, "All homestead entries erroneously allowed for unused and unreserved lands authorized to be sold under section 6 of the act of March 3, 1911, and under the provisions of the act approved June 30, 1913."

Mr. FERRIS. But the point is that the lands that were sold were not entered at all. They put them up and sold them to the highest bidder. Some very valuable lands were sold in that way. But some of these entrymen have proved up and made leases on the land and moved away. It is a clear case of a mistake made by the Land Office, and they ask that it be corrected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only 44 of them——

Mr. FERRIS. Fifty-six of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Twelve of them are not affected by these patents?

Mr. FERRIS. They say, "Unless you get relief from Congress you can not hold these lands."

Mr. STAFFORD. That applies only to the 12?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all homestead entries heretofore erroneously allowed for the unused, unallotted, and unreserved lands of the United States in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservations, which lands were authorized to be sold under section 16 of the act approved March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 1069), and under the provisions of the act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 92), are hereby ratified and confirmed.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, insert the following: "Provided, That in addition to the land-office fees prescribed by statute for such entries the entryman shall pay $1.25 per acre for the land entered at the time of submitting final or commutation proof."

Mr. MANN. There is a duplication there, Mr. Speaker, of the word "proof." One of them should be stricken out.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the duplication of the word "proof" be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that the duplication of the word "proof" be stricken out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER BETWEEN MINNESOTA AND WISCONSIN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5325) authorizing the county of St. Louis to construct a bridge across St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER, MINN. AND WIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15727) authorizing the county of St. Louis to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman would like to have this go over——

Mr. MILLER. What would be the object in letting it go over? The gentleman has just objected to the consideration of a Senate bill on the same subject.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is the author of this House bill.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, well, we are not going to quibble about the thing. If the gentleman wants to pass his bill, let us pass it, and I will pass mine. That is fair.

Mr. LENROOT. I told the gentleman that if he desired to have it passed without prejudice I am willing. Otherwise——

Mr. MILLER. What is the use of passing it without prejudice, when in all probability this is the last time that the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be called during this Congress? I do not think we ought to take up the time of the House——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

INTERSTATE TRANSFER RAILWAY CO. BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17762) to amend an act approved February 20, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the Interstate Transfer Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been read once. Reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of the gentleman from Wisconsin to pass this bill, may I inquire?

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman does not object, I expect it will be passed.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman saw fit to object to a perfectly meritorious, absolutely proper bill in which neither he nor his district is interested in the remotest degree, but in which the whole people of the State of Minnesota are interested, because it is a Minnesota project, a good-roads project, a farmers' market project——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, unless I can have an opportunity to reply to the very inaccurate statements that are being made by the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. FOSTER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FOSTER. Regular order!

Mr. LENROOT. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. FOSTER. These two gentlemen have had their day in court——

Mr. MILLER. No; we have not. I have been a very patient and silent sufferer under a long-continued persecution, and the long suffering is going to end.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is called for.

Mr. MILLER. Then I object.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not call for the regular order, but I shall have to unless I can have an opportunity to reply to the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

TEMPE, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11253) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the town of Tempe, Ariz., a tract of land containing road-making material.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how much land there is, what the price of it is going to be, and what the value of the land is?

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill describes a tract containing 40 acres of rough land, to be sold to the town of Tempe for $1.25 an acre.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman let me explain the situation? If he will hear my explanation, I am sure that he will not object.

The SPEAKER. But he has already objected.

Mr. MADDEN. I am willing to withhold the objection to allow the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say for the information of the gentleman from Illinois that this tract of land adjoins the north boundary of the town of Tempe, Ariz. I am personally familiar with the situation, because I was born within a mile of the land in question. It has absolutely no value for any purpose except for the road-making material that is contained in it. The town desires to purchase this rough, hilly tract in order to secure a convenient supply of road-making material for the improvement of its streets.

Mr. MADDEN. The value of land for road-making material may be fabulous.

Mr. HAYDEN. Not in Arizona.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, in Arizona; if it has any road material on it, it is certainly worth more than $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the value that is put upon all public land that is sold to other towns in other States.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the material?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is caliche, a lime formation suitable for use on roads.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

VALIDATING CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3878) to validate certain homestead entries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. STOUT. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. There is no information in the report on this bill, and I do not think reports of this kind ought to be brought in.

Mr. MONDELL. I can give the gentleman information on the subject.

Mr. STOUT. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STOUT. This is really a very important bill. I will plead guilty to the charge made by the gentleman from Illinois, that of not making as full and complete and comprehensive report as the importance of the measure might suggest. I plead guilty to that. I will simply say that it was due largely to my inexperience in this body. I put as much in the report as I thought would be necessary for information. But for the further information of the gentleman from Illinois, although I think he perhaps is pretty well aware of the purpose of the bill, this is to permit people who have gone out into the public-land States of the West and filed upon less than 160-acre tracts and proved up on them to avail themselves of the advantage of the enlarged homestead act.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to make a brief statement?

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a similar bill was reported out of the committee two years ago, when I was a member of the Committee on the Public Lands. I think it passed the House, but for some reason or other failed in the Senate at the end of the session. The enlarged homestead act provides that those who are qualified homestead entrymen may take advantage of that act. At the time the act was passed the department was holding, and had held for 40 years, that anyone who had not taken four subdivisions approximating 160 acres was a qualified entryman, and therefore unless a man had taken such tracts he was qualified to take 320 acres. That ruling was modified by the department until they held that if a homestead, although it contained four subdivisions, was in fact less than 160 acres he could make an entry of 320 acres. After the department had held that for some time it suddenly reversed the ruling of 40 years and held that anyone who had made a homestead entry, even if it was only 40 acres, and had proved up on it, was not a qualified homestead entryman and could not make an entry under the 320-acre law.

In that interim, particularly in Montana, there were a number of entries made. I do not think the bill ought to be brought down to date. I think if we provide as the Senate bill did for cases before January 1, 1914, we would have provided for all of the meritorious cases.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that he reported a bill when he was chairman of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. I will not say that I reported it.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman have a bill like this when he was chairman of the committee?

Mr. MONDELL. No; not when I was chairman of the committee, but when I was a member of the committee.

Mr. STOUT. In the last Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. I remember the legislation very well, because I had many interviews with the department officials as to what the words "qualified entrymen" meant.

Mr. MANN. This bill the gentleman speaks of in the last Congress was intended to cover suspensions of applications down to what date?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not remember.

Mr. MANN. Was it not 1912?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so.

Mr. MANN. Now we have a bill coming down to January, 1915. Why stop there? Why come down to that? Nobody has explained or pretended to explain that. We can not pass bills here by unanimous consent with no information whatever.

Mr. MONDELL. In some of the districts it appears the register and receiver continued to allow these entries, even after the department had held that a man who had made a homestead entry, even of small acreage, was not a qualified entryman.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that we are entitled to information upon the point of why this was done?

Mr. MONDELL. I was familiar with the situation in every detail when I was a member of the committee. Of course, there may have been some developments since that time necessitating the bringing of the legislation down to date.

Mr. MANN. I remember the original bill. We passed it in the House as I recall, coming down to a certain date, because it was said that people had been taking these claims without knowledge and the department had been advising them that they could do so. Then they were advised not to, but they paid no attention to that. The Senate proposed to bring this relief down to January 1 last year, and the House committee proposes to bring it down to January 1 this year. Why stop there if you come down that far?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall have to object, or the gentleman can ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5734) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to the State of Kansas.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are not the provisions of this bill practically covered by the Fergusson bill?

Mr. FERRIS. The Fergusson bill goes even farther than this.

Mr. LENROOT. It does not cover it.

Mr. FERRIS. The Fergusson bill authorized a 640-acre homestead, along the line of the Kinkaid bill. This merely authorizes them to take a 320-acre homestead, as we have done in all those States.

Mr. MANN. In the arid regions; but under the Fergusson bill would it not also apply?

Mr. FERRIS. No.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the Fergusson bill has not yet passed; but in order to come under the Fergusson bill the land must be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as being arid. The Kinkaid 640-acre homestead law applies to western Nebraska, just north of this Kansas land. For South Dakota, the other day, by amendment, we made this 320-acre homestead law applicable, and we have made it applicable to those Western States; but before they can enter any of this land under the enlarged-homestead act the Secretary of the Interior must designate the land as being nonirrigable and nontimbered. This will help settle and populate western Kansas. They have needed this for a long time. Eastern Kansas is all settled and is good land, but western Kansas is arid, and this law is needed to settle it up. It is like western Nebraska, and they were given a 640-acre homestead about 10 years ago. If it was advisable to give Nebraska a 640-acre homestead 10 years ago, when land was plentiful, surely it is advisable now to give Kansas a 320-acre law.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but if he so designates, if the Fergusson bill becomes a law, they could take the 640 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. LENROOT. Under the Fergusson bill the Secretary of the Interior will not be authorized to designate any lands 320 acres of which, in his opinion, would support a family.

Mr. MANN. Nobody would ever claim that 320 acres of this land would support a family, because it will not. This is the same character of land.

Mr. MADDEN. How is the Secretary of the Interior going to decide what it takes to support a family?

Mr. MANN. Of course it is impossible under the Fergusson bill to ever comply with its terms and do anything, but according to its intent, it covers this case.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will not do that. We have made this applicable to all those Western States. That is the only way they can get this western sand-hill country settled.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know the specific reason for opening up the public domain in this wide way before granting unanimous consent.

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to apply particularly to the seventh district of Kansas, although it may apply to some small degree to the sixth district also. We have there, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Interior, about 92,000 acres of unentered land at this time, and in addition to that there are approximately 200,000 acres known as the Kansas National Forest Reserve, soon to be thrown open to homestead entry. The experience of the past 25 years has shown that it is impossible for an average family to make a living on 160 acres of this land. It is the rejected land of the State. It is either sandy, rough, full of soap weed, or there is some other good reason why industrious husbandmen feel that they can not make a living and support themselves on a quarter section of it, with the result that it has remained idle and wild all these years, and will continue to be unproductive unless Congress enacts some such legislation as is here proposed.

The people who live on the entered or deeded lands in the neighborhood of these vacant lands feel that if Congress would amend the law so that the entryman could file on a half section instead of a quarter section that this would result in attracting persons of thrift from other sections of the country who could, by growing dry-land crops adapted to that section and by raising cattle, make a sort of dairy country out of it and bring it to a condition where it will be entirely self-supporting and peopled by contented home owners.

This land is now nontaxable and by reason of this fact it imposes an added burden upon those counties within which the land is located. The most of these counties are sparsely populated, generally having from 700 to 800 people and running from this up to 1,500 or 2,000 population, and in only one or two instances exceeding these figures; so that you can readily see that this is a matter of no small concern to the interested persons.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much of this same character of land has been settled in 160-acre tracts?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Well, practically none. Unless the homesteader was fortunate enough to have sufficient means of his own to enable him to purchase adjoining lands he simply could not make a living on a single quarter section, and the result has been that this is the refuse part of all the public lands yet remaining in Kansas and is of such poor quality that no one has felt justified in using a homestead right and taking the chances of being able to establish a home there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have there been any entries on lands of the same character within recent years?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Practically none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have there been any?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Well, I would not want to say there have not been any. It is altogether probable that there have been isolated instances where entries have been made, but the part remaining is the residue after all that appeared to be fit for homestead purposes had been taken. About two years ago President Taft, just before the end of his term, withdrew some forty or fifty thousand acres of the land embraced in this same forest reserve and subjected it to homestead entry. Owing to the fact that it was one of the few remaining bodies of public land subject to entry anywhere in the central portion of the country, the opening was extensively advertised in the newspapers of Kansas and adjoining States for many weeks, and a paper published near the land is my authority for the statement that, notwithstanding all this advertising, not a single homestead entry had been made there within the first three weeks succeeding the opening. This, I believe, will give you a pretty good idea of the desirability of the land under the restrictions of our present law.

Mr. STAFFORD. For my part, I wish to say to the gentleman and to the committee and the House that I am not in sympathy with giving up the public domain when there are so many of our urban population who are desirous of obtaining the public lands to make a livelihood. Now, if some of this land had been opened to entry and settled upon, I can not see any reason for increasing the size of the unit.

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. I agree with the gentleman if the quality of the land and the location, and so forth, were such that a family could make a living on this land, but time and repeated trials have demonstrated that this can not be done with this land. I hope the gentleman will not object, and that this measure may meet with the approbation of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I think this may appeal to the gentleman. This is the situation: Ten years ago Congress thought it was necessary, and did pass what was called the Kinkaid Act. That act applies to the sand-hill country of western Nebraska, and they gave them there 640 acres. This merely makes the general enlarged-homestead law applicable which gives 320 acres. This western Kansas sand-hill land is just the same as that which 10 years ago we gave 640 acres. If 10 years ago it was thought advisable, in view of the development of that country, to give 640 acres, surely with the remnants which are left in Kansas, just over the State line, it would not be improper to give them 320 acres.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the information as to whether the same character of lands have been entered upon in recent years under the 160-acre unit?

Mr. FERRIS. Like the gentleman from Kansas, I think you will find that once in a great while a man will find a little head of a valley with water and make there a pond or a tank, and probably make an entry; but otherwise there has been practically no development of that country in 25 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the provisions of this bill it will enable those who have already entered on the 160-acre limit to obtain the additional 160 acres?

Mr. FERRIS. No; it does not renew any homestead right.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Fergusson bill gave former homestead entrymen the right to take additional arid land.

Mr. FERRIS. It did; but it was more liberal than this. This merely makes the same law apply to western Kansas that we recently applied to Dakota.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will yield, I recollect very well the conditions that existed at the time of the passage of the enlarged-homestead law. The only reason we did not apply it to Kansas was that Kansas at that time had practically no public lands. These lands that the law will now apply to were at that time held in a reservation as a forest reserve. There was no forest on them, but the Forestry Bureau had reserved quite a considerable acreage there with a view to utilizing some of it in the growing of trees. They are reserving the part now that they think they can grow the trees on and restoring the balance to the public domain. That leaves this area similar to areas in surrounding States to which we have heretofore made the homestead laws apply.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not safe to assume that the Federal forest, which comprises 200,000 acres, comprised a better character of land than the remnants of the arid lands outside the forest reserve?

Mr. MONDELL. They were worse. The only reason it was reserved as a national forest was that it was the remnant—that it was what was left. Nobody would take it, and they were looking for homestead land in Kansas——

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman said there were persons down here in Washington looking for forest reserves.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The State of Colorado, as you know, joins the State of Kansas for 400 miles. This enlarged homestead law which the gentleman from Wyoming put through applies to the State of Colorado, right along by the side of this very Kansas land, for 400 miles. We have demonstrated in our State that those people can not live on 160 acres, the same as they have in western Kansas, but they will live on 320 acres. They will go and take it and have a few cows and settle up that country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas whether the land in the forest reserve is of superior quality to that outside?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. It is infinitely inferior. The gentleman from Wyoming hit the question all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield just for a minute? I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] may have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. There will be no trouble about his getting five minutes. Is there objection to the bill being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the bill. Then the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will be recognized for five minutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 639), as modified and amended, including section 6 thereof, are hereby extended and made applicable to the State of Kansas.

Also, the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "provisions," insert the words "of sections 1 to 5, inclusive."

Line 7, same page, strike out the words "including section 6 thereof."

Mr. SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is recognized.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] made certain remarks in respect to the War Risk Insurance Bureau and criticized the administration about its policy of insuring vessels going into the dangerous war zone across the Atlantic. This afternoon he made another speech along the same line. Unfortunately I was out of the Chamber when the gentleman spoke this afternoon. I read from the RECORD of his speech of yesterday. He said:

O Mr. Chairman, I wish somebody would rise now and explain why we ventured upon this hazardous business. Why was this War Risk Bureau established at the expense of the people of the United States to protect speculators?

I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, for whom I have a very high regard, that before this War Risk Insurance Bureau was established there was practically no sale for the cotton and lumber of the South and the many products of other parts of the country. Our cotton was stored in the warehouses or piled upon the docks of the South, and it was impossible to sell it to any appreciable extent to Germany, England, or other warring nations. Since the War Risk Insurance Bureau was established by the Government, up to date the statistics show that we have sold to Germany about as much cotton as was sold during the corresponding period of last year. And the facts about this War Risk Insurance Bureau that my friend criticizes are that it has been one bureau of the Government that has made money. It has been a paying business for the Government and of incalculable benefit to the business interests as well as the farmers of the country. What are the facts?

There have been 961 insurance policies issued since September 2, 1914. That was the day on which the bureau was organized and began business. The total amount insured has been $56,645,084. The premiums on the policies have amounted to $1,502,302.99. Of the above amount, the earned premium—that is, the policies that have been canceled—have amounted to $640,848.

The expenses of running this department have been only $6,766. If you count the loss to the Government of the Evelyn and Carib, the two vessels recently sunk, on which insurance was carried, we are still to the good by several hundred thousands of dollars. As I stated, the premiums that have been paid up until to-day have been $1,502,000, and we have earned the canceled premiums to the amount of $640,848. The Secretary of the Treasury and the directors of the bureau deserve great credit for the economical and yet efficient and able way in which this bureau has been conducted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman give us the amount of the loss on the two vessels that have just been destroyed?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The Carib, that was destroyed yesterday, carried $22,253 insurance on the hull of the vessel, and on the cargo there was an insurance of $235,850. On the Evelyn, that was destroyed the other day, there was $100,000 carried on the vessel.

Mr. MOORE. On the hull of the vessel?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; on the hull of the vessel, and $301,000 was carried on the cargo.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. HELGESEN. Are these the amounts that were carried by the Government?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; these are the amounts that were carried by the Government War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman's figures are correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House whether there was any insurance carried by private insurance companies on the vessels and cargoes?

Mr. HARRISON. There was no war-risk insurance by private insurance companies carried on the cargoes or the vessels, but under the policies that the Government issues they will not issue a policy on the cargo unless the owners carry marine insurance. And in the face of the policy when it is issued the policyholder agrees that there shall be marine insurance carried to an amount at least equivalent to the war-risk insurance that the Government issues.

And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, in this connection that——

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, there was insurance other than the Government insurance?

Mr. HARRISON. There was marine insurance on the cargo.

Mr. MOORE. I think there was some insurance outside of the cargo, was there not?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the marine insurance. Now, Mr. Speaker, the facts show further that before September 2, when this bureau was established, the insurance on many articles was 25 to 30 per cent, and because of the creation of this bureau the insurance rates established by it forced the other war-risk insurance companies to reduce their rates to a very great extent. For instance, for the period immediately following August 1, last year, the war-risk insurance through the North Sea was 25 per cent. Now it is only 3 per cent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to impose at this late hour on the generosity and patience of the House, and so I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this subject in the RECORD.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have three minutes more.

Mr. MOORE. I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] may proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] probably wants to use it himself, I suppose.

Mr. BORLAND. No; I do not want to use it myself. I only want to use about half a minute myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I am going to make a point of no quorum at half-past 5.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman from Missouri want to ask me a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. I want to ask the gentleman a question in regard to rates. The first rate that the Government put on cotton, as I understand, was 5 per cent. That forced the private companies to reduce their rates, and they were reduced to 3 per cent, and now it is 2 per cent on cotton. Is not that a fact?

Mr. HARRISON. That is my information.

Mr. BORLAND. Under this bill 129 vessels have been transferred to the American flag and are now carrying American products that otherwise would not be carried?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; under the new registry law that was passed, and encouraged by this bill. I want to say, now, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] made some suggestions yesterday that were good, although I heartily disapprove of gentlemen on either side of this aisle criticizing and finding fault with the administration at this most inappropriate time about its foreign policy. It is a time when partisan politics should be brushed aside, and if we disapprove of some little event or happening, we should remember the inopportuneness of the time to so express ourselves and remember that it should be a time when "silence is golden."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bureau has done a great service to the country and it should not be abolished as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I do think, however—and I make the suggestion in the friendliest feeling, and perhaps the plan is already being considered—that the Government issue no more policies without a clause being incorporated in them that the owners of vessels and cargoes shall follow the instructions of the belligerent nations respecting their course in the war zone. In other words, that the insurance policy should be invalidated if they go outside of that course the belligerent nations say is safe to follow. I do not believe they should be permitted to assume unnecessary and unreasonable risk and recover from the Government in case of damage or loss. These details I am sure will be worked out by the board of directors in charge of this bureau, as under the law they are empowered to do.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. While the gentleman is discussing cotton, I want to make this inquiry of him, partly by way of explanation of what I have said. Is it not true that during the month of January, 1915, the cotton exports vastly exceeded those of January, 1914?

Mr. HARRISON. I understand so. If the gentleman investigates, I think he will find that we have shipped to Germany up to now about as much cotton as we shipped to that country up to this time during the preceding year and, I might repeat, up to September 2, 1914, when the War Risk Insurance Bureau was established, we had shipped practically none.

Mr. MOORE. In January, 1915, you had sent out 3,000 bales more than in January, 1914; but at the same time the number of spindles in use in the United States had been reduced 500,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the gentleman is diverting from the subject under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by submitting a statement in regard to the congressional service of Judge HENRY M. GOLDFOGLE, who on March 4 next will have rounded out 14 years of service in this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a review of the services of Judge HENRY M. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A review of his services in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Yes; a review of his services in Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Speaker put my request for an extension of remarks?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did, but perhaps it was not acted on. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the pending question is on the adoption of the first committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration does not involve directly the question now being very widely discussed as to the dictation by the President in legislative matters, but that is a lively and important question just at this time nevertheless, and I avail myself of the opportunity to have inserted in the RECORD a very able editorial on the subject which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning and which is as follows:

PRESIDENTIAL DICTATION.

Within two weeks after President Wilson was inaugurated stories of Executive pressure began to come out of the congressional cloakrooms; and before the extraordinary session was six weeks old, reputable men were asserting, more or less openly, that every measure represented the judgment of the President rather than the judgment of Congress. For a time these stories made no impression on the public mind, because the country had grown accustomed to exaggerations for political purposes, and for that reason those stories were taken with many grains of salt. Then, too, the newspapers friendly to him and his more active partisans everywhere denied the President's interference, and a large majority of the people accepted the denials. Besides, many of those who knew that the President had gone far beyond any of his predecessors in an effort to coerce a legislative acquiescence in his personal opinions refused to join in the criticism against him, hoping that the occasion for it would pass.

But the last caucus held by the Democrats of the House makes it plain that patriots can not hope to see the House and Senate released from the presidential grip unless the President is brought to understand that the country disapproves his methods of dealing with a coordinate branch of the Government. It is said—and the report comes in such a way that no reasonable man can doubt it—that a spokesman of the President carried into that caucus a ship-purchase bill which he boldly represented as the demand of the President, and declared that it must be accepted without change. The Democratic caucus was not only commanded to approve the President's bill, but was commanded to approve it without amendment.

Can anybody justify, or even excuse, such a flagrant violation of every principle of this Government? All of the fathers believed that when the President was authorized to recommend such laws as he thought necessary or expedient, and to veto such laws as he thought unnecessary or inexpedient, he was clothed with as much power as any man ought to possess over the legislation of a free people; and many of the wisest among them thought that too much. If, however, the President can add to his power of recommendation and veto the secret power—the more dangerous because it is secret—of compelling the Congress to pass laws according to his judgment rather than according to its own, the constitutional separation and independence of the three great departments will soon be utterly destroyed.

Many Democrats, though protesting against the President's interference, yield to him upon the ground that they fear a disruption of the party such as occurred under Mr. Cleveland's last administration. It is entirely praiseworthy for Democrats to avoid a division where they can do so without sacrificing their self-respect or transgressing the principles of the Constitution; but the disasters which followed the factional quarrels under Mr. Cleveland are not the only disasters which a party should fear. The trouble in Mr. Cleveland's time was that Democrats did not submit to a sufficient party discipline, while the trouble in this time is that Democrats are not allowed a sufficient liberty of thinking for themselves. One was political anarchy, the other is political despotism; and the effect of the last is certain to be as serious as the effect of the first.

Indeed, the effect must in the end be very much worse. Party demoralization, though it arise from an opposite cause, is inevitable and can not be less. It can not be possible to force Democrats, in the face of all they have ever taught, to favor the governmental ownership and operation of business enterprises, and the attempt to do so will not only alienate thousands of the most thoughtful and substantial men from the party, but it will moderate the zeal of hundreds of thousands who will remain in it, though they will have no sympathy with this departure from its established policies. Nothing so vitalizes party strength as the consciousness that the party is united in sentiment; and nothing so dissipates party strength as a feeling that the party is being driven by one man. Such a feeling must ultimately culminate in a revolt which will hopelessly divide the party, or in an abject submission which will reduce it to but a feeble shadow of its former self.

But the effect upon the Government will be more injurious even than the effect upon party organization. Such methods as those employed to force the ship-purchase bill through the Democratic caucus not only exhibit a lack of decent respect to which the individual opinion of every Democrat is entitled, but they violate the very foundation principles of this Government. If the Congress should cheerfully and of its own motion abandon the time-honored theory that the Government shall confine itself to the soverign duty of governing, leaving all business enterprises to individuals and corporations, that alone would introduce a dangerous innovation; and when that dangerous innovation is forced on an unwilling Congress it thus sets at naught that other essential principle of this Government, which requires that the legislative department shall be coordinate with and independent of the executive department.

The President may think that in driving his party he is serving his country; but he is mistaken. No man can serve his country except through an ungrudging obedience to the great principles upon which this Republic was founded; and no man can serve his party except by adhering to the principles which underlie its organization. Though the President's more partisan friends regard every criticism as an unfriendly one, he will find in time that those who tell him the truth, even when the truth is disagreeable, are his safest counselors. Sycophants may be able to mislead the President as to the sentiment of the country, but they can not in the end mislead the country as to the conduct of the President.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on what subject?

The SPEAKER. It is too late to inquire now.

Mr. FERRIS. The question is on agreeing to the next amendment.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, February 25, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and requesting appropriation for representation of interests of foreign Governments growing out of existing hostilities in Europe and elsewhere be extended and made available during fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1616), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HENRY, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) creating a commission and authorizing said commission to acquire, by purchase, the property known as Monticello, and embracing the former home of Thomas Jefferson and the park surrounding the same, consisting of 700 acres of land, all of said property being located in Albemarle County, Va., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1441), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 25, 1915.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 19, 1915.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission transmitting in response to a resolution of August 6, 1913, the report of the commission relative to the financial relations, rates, and practices of the Louisville & Nashville, and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, and other carriers. The report already has been printed, and the communication and accompanying paper will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17869) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of Georgia, requests a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCGILLICUDDY, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. VOLSTEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6631) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poison in the consular districts of the United States in China with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5734) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to the State of Kansas with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 20040. An act to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States; and

H. R. 21122. An act to validate certain homestead entries.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion; to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea.

SPIRITS USED IN FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

Mr. STONE. I have been directed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12303) to amend section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879, with the recommendation that it pass, and I submit a report (No. 1035) thereon. It is a unanimous report of the committee. It is a House bill which has been sent over here, and the committee thinks it important that it be passed at once. At the instance of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the bill, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary had better read the bill so that the Senate may understand what it is.

The Secretary read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879 (20 Stats., p. 327), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Nor shall any special tax be imposed upon manufacturing chemists or flavoring extract manufacturers for recovering tax-paid alcohol or spirituous liquors from dregs or marc of percolation or extraction, if said recovered alcohol or spirituous liquors be again used in the manufacture of flavoring extracts."

So that said section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall read as follows:

"SEC. 3246. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to impose a special tax upon vintners who sell wine of their own growth, or manufacturers who sell wine produced from grapes grown by others, at the place where the same is made or at the general business office of such vintner or manufacturer: Provided, That no vintner or manufacturer shall have more than one office for the sale of such wine that shall be exempt from special tax under this Act; nor shall any special tax be imposed upon apothecaries as to wines or spirituous liquors which they use exclusively in the preparation or making-up of medicines.

"Nor shall any special tax be imposed upon manufacturing chemists or flavoring extract manufacturers for recovering tax-paid alcohol or spirituous liquors from dregs or marc of percolation or extraction if said recovered alcohol or spirituous liquors be again used in the manufacture of flavoring extracts."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE RICHARDSON.

Mr. MYERS. I report back from the Committee on Public Lands favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 17812) for the relief of George Richardson; and I submit a report (No. 1036) thereon.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, that is a bill to correct the title of 160 acres of land in Mississippi, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill; but I shall object to the consideration of any other bill this morning.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is a very inconsequential matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title of George Richardson in and to the northwest quarter of section 33, township 15, range 16, Noxubee County, Miss., as assignee of the conveyance of John Victor, be, and the same is hereby, quieted and confirmed, and patent therefor shall issue to the said George Richardson.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARROW COUNTY, GA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to dispose of two bills locating three new counties in Georgia in their proper judicial districts. I report back favorably both bills from the Committee on the Judiciary. The first is House bill 20688, to place Barrow County, Ga., in the eastern division of the northern district of Georgia, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Barrow, in the State of Georgia, is hereby attached to and made a part of the eastern division of the northern judicial district of said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The other bill is upon the same subject. It is simply to place new counties in their proper judicial district. The Senate Judiciary Committee authorized the House bill to be reported back favorably with an amendment taking care of two more counties. (S. Rept. 1039.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20814) to place Candler, Jenkins, and Evans Counties, Ga., in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the counties of Bacon and Thomas, in the State of Georgia, are hereby attached to and made a part of the southwestern division of the southern judicial district of said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to place Candler, Jenkins, and Evans Counties in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia and to place Bacon and Thomas Counties, Ga., in the southwestern district of the southern district of Georgia."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. NORRIS it was

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of the bill (S. 6455) admitting to citizenship and fully naturalizing Edward D. Cohota, of Valentine, Nebr., no adverse report having been made thereon.

On motion of Mr. SHIVELY it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of the bill (S. 4372) for the relief of Joseph Heaton, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PRISONERS' MAIL.

Mr. ASHURST. I have a copy of an article, or rather a pamphlet, written by Hon. J. J. Sanders, parole clerk of the Arizona State prison, on Prisoners' Mail, being a summary showing medieval custom being practiced in the restriction of the mail of the inmates of most American State prisons. I desire to have the article printed as a public document and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for action as soon as possible. This article, written by Mr. Sanders, has attracted wide and favorable notice throughout the length and breadth of our land. I have had many requests for copies of the same and I earnestly hope the Committee on Printing will act favorably on this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Arizona that the Committee on Printing will have a meeting to-morrow morning.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator from Utah will see that this article is ordered to be printed, as it is a very valuable document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have an article from the District of Columbia Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

We desire to present some facts as to the pernicious effect of woman suffrage in the States where it now exists. There has been many theories on this subject presented by the suffragists. It is our purpose to present facts and figures showing that woman suffrage, where it has been tried, not only does not better conditions but actually tends to have the reverse effect from a practical standpoint. Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, has said that he concedes that woman suffrage has not and maintains that it will not change conditions. We agree with the distinguished Senator up to a certain point, but we believe that we can show positively that woman suffrage will in many instances change conditions for the worse. We will first present some figures which will prove conclusively that women do not vote as generally as men where the franchise has been given them.

In the six suffrage States of California, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, and Washington—Oregon, Arizona, and Kansas did not have woman suffrage till voted on at election November 5, 1912—the Abstract of United States Census of 1910, pages 110 and 118, shows there were in April, 1910, 3,170,153 men and women over 21 years of age, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese. The total vote actually cast for President November 5, 1912, in the six woman-suffrage States was 1,521,590, so 47.9 per cent of the men and women, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, over 21 years of age (in April, 1910) actually voted.

In the six adjoining and neighboring States of Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon, Nevada, South Dakota, and Missouri, where men alone voted, the total number of men 21 years of age and over, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, was (in April, 1910; Abstract of Census, p. 110) 2,295,119; total vote in the six male-suffrage States for President November 5, 1912, 1,587,984; 69.1 per cent of the men over 21 years of age, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, actually voted, or about 45 per cent more of the possible voters in the male-suffrage States voted than did the possible voters of the six adjoining woman-suffrage States. If 69.1 per cent of the men voted in the woman-suffrage States—as men in the adjoining male-suffrage States did vote—then an analysis of the figures show that only 19.1 per cent of the women over 21 years of age in the suffrage States actually voted. If more than 19.1 per cent of women did vote in the six woman-suffrage States, then less than 69.1 per cent of the men voted, so it is impossible to escape one or the other conclusion—that the women either do not vote as generally as the men when given the ballot, or if they do their voting does cause less interest to be taken in politics by men, and in either event the suffrage cause is harmful to the Republic.

According to advice from Secretary of State Jordan's office at Sacramento, Cal., where the names and addresses of all registered voters are sent in order that sample ballots can be mailed them according to law, 807,633 men and 180,000 women registered in California to vote at election November 5, 1912. (See Los Angeles Times, Oct. 27, 1912.)

This shows that about 93 per cent of the men in California registered and only about 27 per cent of the women. The total vote for President November 5, 1912, all candidates in California, was 673,527; total registration, 984,633. Sixty-eight and four-tenths per cent of men and women who registered voted. If 68.4 per cent of the registered women actually voted, which is not likely, as women do not register as generally as men—it is not to be supposed that they voted as generally—then only 18.3 per cent of women over 21 years of age in April, 1910, voted November 5, 1912, in the State of California.

In San Francisco, in the latter part of 1912, at a local-option election, out of 120,859 women over 21 years of age in the city, 40,655 women and 80,023 men registered, yet only 15,087 votes all told were cast for local option, and it is estimated that approximately 1 woman in 8 who was interested enough to register took the trouble to go to the polls.

At a city election in San Francisco November 11, 1913, 49,833 women registered and 19,678 voted, about one-quarter of the votes at this election being cast by women. In 3 precincts no women voted; in 49 out of 673 precincts there was an average of less than 10 votes per precinct by women. (Analysis of vote by registrar of elections, Zemansky. See Los Angeles Times, Nov. 20, 1913.) Census of 1910 shows there were 120,859 women over 21 years of age in San Francisco, so only 16.2 per cent voted in election of November 11, 1913.

At an election March 24, 1913, in Los Angeles, Cal., involving radical changes in the city charter, only 31,000 voters, men and women, out of 222,817 cast their ballots, this, too, after a citizens' committee of 1,000 advocated in all the newspapers the adoption of certain propositions and the defeat of others; 9 out of 10 of the reform measures were defeated. The Los Angeles Times of March 26, 1913, says:

"The vote of the women was disappointing. In some precincts it was a negligible quantity, while in others it was only about one-third of the total, yet suffragists carried on an active campaign, attended and spoke at all-day meetings, and even worked at their headquarters on Easter Sunday."

At an election June 3, 1913, in Los Angeles, for mayor, Rose was elected by 8,037 majority over Shenk. Los Angeles had "good-government" officials for several years before women had the ballot. Rose ran on the "open-town" platform and Shenk on "good-government." Every newspaper and practically every minister in the city was for Shenk, and asked the voters to elect Shenk and have a clean city in the interest of the young men and women of Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles Times of June 5, 1913, gives the total vote as 84,055, nearly 100,000 under registration. The Times further says that in spite of the excellent organization of Mrs. John S. Myers and her corps of assistants the women did not turn out in any large numbers, and of those who did a considerable percentage appeared to favor the election of Rose. As there were 222,877 men and women over 21 years of age in Los Angeles (census of 1910), only 38.2 per cent of the men and women of voting age voted. The Los Angeles Express, June 4, 1913, had an editorial on the disgrace of electing Rose.

At an election in Chicago April 7, 1914, with the strenuous efforts of the suffragists to get out the female vote, only 158,686 women voted. Chicago had in 1910 626,629 women over 21 years of age. (Letter from Director of Census Feb. 28, 1914.) About 25 per cent of the women of Chicago over 21 years of age voted. More than double that number of men did vote at the same election.

Most of the women who do vote in the woman-suffrage States do so in self-defense, or at the earnest appeal of the male members of their families, and not because they want the ballot, for if such women did not vote they would lose their own and their husband's political status, with which they were satisfied under male suffrage, and must either vote or live under laws to which they are opposed and made by noisy, ranting suffragettes. For this reason it is unjust to place the burden on a majority of women in order that the few aggressive, forward, notoriety-seeking women can break into politics, some of whom resent the fact that they were created women and not men.

An editorial in the San Francisco, Cal., Chronicle, January 3, 1915, says—

"In this and other States the franchise was given without waiting for the request of a majority of the sex, and as the event has shown, without the desire of a majority. It is more than probable that were the question of the withdrawal of the right submitted to vote in this State, with the women voting, the right would be withdrawn. There are multitudes of women who would register for such an election for the sole purpose of getting rid of a duty they detest and whose obligations they refuse to fulfill."

The suffragists having taken the slogan used by the men of our Colonies, "Taxation without representation is tyranny," utterly fail in endeavoring thereby to show a parallel between women without the ballot to-day and the condition of the Colonies in 1775. The men (the British Parliament), who voted the taxes on the Colonists paid no part of the taxes they laid, and the more taxes they could extort from the American Colonies the less the Englishmen would have to pay themselves; whereas to-day in the United States the men voting the taxes pay the larger part of the same. Only about one-eighth of the women of voting age pay taxes, direct or indirect, so if women had the ballot the women who pay the taxes would not be as fairly and justly treated as they are now, for then seven-eighths of the women who would vote the tax pay no taxes, while with men alone voting about seven-eighths of the taxes paid are paid by the men who vote the taxation. No injustice is possible when the taxes are laid by the voters who pay the larger part of the amount. Most of the property on which women pay taxes is the fruits of the labor of male members of their families, acquired by gift, will, or placed in the names of women for some other reason.

We deny the claim of the suffragists that the men of this country have made a failure of government or that men have become such "mollycoddles" or so weak that it is necessary to place the burden of government upon women, most of whom are opposed to having the additional responsibility imposed upon them.

We are told that the men of the country can not be trusted to make the laws for the women and children, yet an average of four-fifths of the earnings of the man, over and above the necessities of the family, is spent on the women and children.

Woman suffrage would increase the negro's power in politics, as the per cent of negro women to all women over 21 years of age is 9.9 per cent (Census of 1910), while the per cent of negro men to all men is only 9.1 per cent. In the 11 Southern States the per cent of negro women to all women is 35.3 per cent, while the percentage of negro men to all men is 33.6 per cent.

Who would doubt that a larger per cent of negro women would vote than white women?

So many of our people are being misled on the liquor question by the suffragists that it is well to submit some facts on that subject. Prior to November 3, 1914, no State in which women have voted on the question had State-wide prohibition ever been adopted. Ten States where men alone vote had State-wide prohibition. November 5, 1912, Colorado voted on State-wide prohibition; 75,877 votes were cast for the measure and 116,774 against it. (See p. 159, Abstract of Votes, compiled from official returns by James B. Pearce, secretary of State, Denver, Colo.) If 58 per cent of the women over 21 years of age in Colorado had voted for prohibition the measure would have become a law by 7,012 majority, without a single male vote being cast for prohibition, there being 213,425 women over 21 years of age in Colorado. (P. 118, Abstract of Census, 1910.)

Wyoming legalized gambling for about forty years after women had the ballot, and had neither State-wide prohibition nor local option laws.

About six years prior to the adoption of woman suffrage in California, Los Angeles voted on local option, and the measure was defeated nearly 2 to 1. About a month after women had the ballot in Los Angeles, the question was again voted on and the saloons won by nearly 3 to 1.

December, 1912, Los Angeles voted on the question of abolishing free lunches in saloons, but the measure was defeated and lunches are still free in Los Angeles saloons. Missouri and Connecticut have State-wide laws prohibiting free lunches in saloons. Pasadena, Cal., for many years—in fact, practically for its entire history—had been a dry city, but soon after the women had been given the franchise the sale of liquor was legalized. Pasadena had in 1910, 2,688 more women than men over 21 years of age—about 29 per cent.

December 2, 1913, Santa Monica, Cal., voted wet, ballots nearly 3 to 1, for liquor, to be sold on Sundays and nights. The Los Angeles Times of December 3, says: "The triumph of 'demon rum' and the sparkling cabaret is attributed to the women who voted 2 to 1 against a Sunday drought." Total vote for the saloons and Sunday liquor 2,173, against 814. Letter under date of December 13, 1913, from Director of the United States Census, shows that in 1910, Santa Monica had 2,462 males and 2,748 females over 21 years of age—286 more women than men, yet we have the sale of liquor legalized in cafés all night and on Sundays in a city of homes of less than 8,000 (7,847) people, and we doubt that a parallel can be found in any State where the franchise is limited to men.

Redondo, Cal., voted on local option October 14, 1913. The saloons won. Los Angeles Times, October 15, says: "That both sides claim the result was due to women's votes."

Anaheim, Cal. (population 2,628), voted on local option November 6, 1913. The saloons won (see Los Angeles Times, Nov. 7, 1913).

San Bernardino, Cal., voted for the saloon January 30, 1914 (see Los Angeles Times, Jan. 31, 1914). Watts, Cal., voted wet September 8, 1914 (Los Angeles Times, Sept. 9).

At an election in California, April 13, 1914, out of 13 cities and towns voting on the liquor question, 9 voted "wet" and 4 small towns "dry." Hanford, population 4,829, and Merced, population 3,102, both of which had been dry, returned to the wet column (see Los Angeles Times Apr. 14, 1914). Only one small county—Lake County—is dry, and only 10 counties out of 62 in Colorado were dry.

In Colorado Springs, Colo., where the sale of liquor was prohibited for many years, women voted on the question about two years ago, and liquor selling was legalized. Colorado Springs had 819 more women than men over 21 years of age in 1910 (letter of Director of Census, Feb. 28, 1914).

On pages 208–209, Annual Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, you will find that in the eight States that had woman suffrage, January 1, 1913—California, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Utah, Washington Arizona, and Oregon—there were 28,108 liquor dealers paying special license to the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914. From page 24, Abstract of United States Census, 1910, you will see that the eight suffrage States above mentioned had a population of 6,040,592, one liquor dealer for every 211 people for the eight States. For the remaining 40 States and District of Columbia, there were 225,299 liquor dealers paying license for the same period. The 40 States and the District of Columbia had a population of 85,931,674, or one liquor dealer for every 381 people, or about one-half the number of dealers, per capita, that the woman-suffrage States require, and then we are told by the suffragists that they are not favorable to the liquor interests.

At local-option elections in Illinois, April 27, 1914, about 1,100 saloons out of 3,000, where elections were held, were abolished; 12 dry counties were added to the 30 already dry, making 42 dry counties of the 100 counties in Illinois.

Kentucky, where men alone vote, has 105 dry counties out of the 120 in the State, and Missouri has 65 no-license counties out of 114 in that State.

Iowa has 77 dry counties out of 99 counties in the State; and in Minnesota, at election April 7, 1914, two-thirds of the counties where local-option elections were held voted dry, and towns that had licensed saloons for 60 years voted dry by men's votes.

Eight out of twelve counties in Michigan that voted on the liquor question April 6, 1914, voted dry, including Lansing, the capital of the State, by men's votes; while in Springfield, the capital of Illinois, where there are 205 more women than men over 21 years of age, voted to retain the saloons.

Eugene W. Chafin, former candidate on the Prohibition ticket for President, said at Long Beach Cal., February 15, 1914, that "the support expected by prohibitionists in California from women had not developed." (See Los Angeles Times, Feb. 16, 1914.)

During the suffrage campaign in Ohio Miss Margaret Foley, in addressing a meeting of union labor men, said: "Don't be afraid, boys; we're not going to take your beer away from you."

One hundred women working effectually against prohibition amendment, making house to house canvass of Los Angeles. (See Los Angeles Times, Oct. 30, 1914.)

In Cleveland many of the suffragists insisted that it was only their enemies who said of them that they would vote against the saloons. In the recent campaign in Chicago, February, 1914, Miss Marion H. Drake, who was nominated for alderman in the first ward, was quoted in the newspapers as standing for "free lunch and saloons."

Mrs. Crystal Eastman Benedict, a prominent woman suffragist of Wisconsin, made before the Manufacturers and Dealers' Club of Milwaukee, in addressing the assembled brewers, the statement: "Why all this hue and cry about woman suffrage injuring the brewing industry? Isn't it a little foolish?" Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, in an address, said she would welcome the support of the brewers and praised Mrs. Benedict for her work among the representatives of that interest.

Mrs. Minnie Reynolds, for the National Suffrage Association, recently challenged anyone to find a word concerning prohibition among the pamphlets issued by the association.

Hugh Fox, secretary of the United Brewers' Association, in a letter printed in the report of the hearing in December, 1913, before the Committee on Rules of the House on the resolution establishing a Committee on Woman Suffrage, said: "The United Brewers' Association states that the antisuffragists have never received nor asked for contributions from them, although," he adds, "we have had appeals from the other side."

May Wright Sewall said, October 30, 1913, in Milwaukee: "Votes for women will no more prohibit drink than they will prohibit food."

Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association and one of the leaders in the lobby at Springfield which brought about the enactment of the suffrage bill, said:

"It is a great pleasure to remember that some of the firmest supporters of the suffrage measure in the forty-eighth general assembly were some of the so-called wets."

Suffragists have said the reason the woman-suffrage States had not adopted prohibition was because there were so many miners in those States, and that the men outnumbered the women so greatly. The six States that had woman suffrage November 1, 1912—California, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Washington—had in December, 1909, 78,565 wage earners engaged in mining industries. (Abstract of Census, 1910, p. 561.) Total number of men over 21 years of age in the six States, 1,911,518 (Abstract of Census, 1910, p. 107), or about 1 man of every 24 a miner. West Virginia, a prohibition State, had 78,404 wage earners in the mining industry, and had in 1910, 338,349 men over 21 years of age, or about one man out of every four a miner. Alabama, that voted State-wide prohibition, had about 1 man out of every 16 engaged in mining, and Kansas (Kansas adopted prohibition about 30 years ago) had only a few less per cent per capita engaged in mining than the six woman-suffrage States, and yet West Virginia, with nearly six times the number of men per capita over 21, and Alabama, with one-third more per capita, and Kansas, with only a few less per capita of miners than the woman-suffrage States—all three really mining States—voted State-wide prohibition with men's votes only.

Santa Monica and Pasadena, Cal., and Colorado Springs, Colo., all of which have more women than men over 21 years of age, voted to legalize the sale of liquor, so some other reason than miners and more men than women in suffrage States must be found for the suffrage States being "wet" States until some of which voted "dry" last November. In November, 1912, Colorado voted "wet" by about 40,000 majority; last November it voted "dry" by 11,572. As there were more men over 21 in Colorado, as well as other suffrage States, than women, the men undoubtedly voted the State dry, as the proportion of men to women has changed but little in the last two years. California, with 137 men to 100 women of voting age, defeated prohibition by 169,245, while Washington, with 158.9 men to 100 women, adopted prohibition by over 18,000 majority, and Oregon, with 152.8 men to 100 women, by 36,480. Taking the vote collectively of the five woman-suffrage States that voted on prohibition in 1914, the majority against prohibition was 99,416; population of the five States, 5,195,682. Taking the vote of the two male-suffrage States that voted on prohibition—Ohio and Virginia; population, 6,828,733—in 1914, the majority against prohibition was only 53,787. Ohio, which has very large brewing distilling, wholesale and retail liquor interests, voted against prohibition by only 84,152, while California, whose wine and liquor interests are probably very much less, computed in dollars and cents, voted against prohibition by 169,245, and California has only about half the population of Ohio. So anyone who will make an investigation of female suffrage and the liquor question will find that it is not women's votes that bring prohibition, but a general sentiment being worked up against the liquor business.

It is admitted that a prohibition law is the hardest of all laws to be enforced, even when a majority of men in a State vote for it. What chances would there be for the enforcement of such a law if the majority of men were against prohibition and such a law was enacted by women's votes?

Virginia adopted prohibition in 1914 by men's votes. Ohio defeated it the same year. Four women-suffrage States voted prohibition in 1914, but California, a suffrage State, with nearly as large a population as all four women-suffrage States combined that adopted prohibition (and had more women proportionately than the four suffrage States that abolished the liquor traffic) voted overwhelmingly against prohibition. California also voted that the people of that State should not be permitted to vote on the liquor question for eight years. The liquor dealers certainly have nothing to fear from woman suffrage in California.

It has been charged that the liquor interests defeated woman suffrage in the five States that rejected it on November 3, 1914, yet the only two States that adopted it at the same time were Montana and Nevada, two of the "wettest" States in the Union, and States where there never was any territory voted "dry," while North Dakota, a prohibition State, South Dakota, 68 per cent, Nebraska, 56 per cent, and Ohio, 52 per cent "dry," all defeated woman suffrage last year. The cities of Lincoln, Omaha, and Fremont, Nebr., cities with large brewing and liquor interests, collectively gave a majority for woman suffrage, while the country districts of that State (in which are many dry counties) gave over 10,000 majority against it.

The suffragists tell us on all occasions that if women had the ballot much better laws for the education and welfare of the child and youth of our country will be enacted. Let us cite a few instances to disprove such a theory:

At Berkeley, Cal., April 12, 1913, for the issuance of bonds for playgrounds, which were defeated, only about 1,500 of the 8,000 women of the city voted. The mayor, who has been a zealous worker for woman suffrage, reprimands the women for their negligence of this particular issue, which of all others should interest them. In a newspaper article he asks, "Where were the mothers?" Berkeley has 1,301 more women than men over 21 years of age (letter Feb. 28, 1914, Director of United States Census).

At Pasadena, Cal., where there was 2,688 more women than men of voting age, the playgrounds that were the pride of Pasadena, and were established before women had the ballot, were discontinued July, 1912, on account of the failure of the voters to vote money for the purchase of the grounds. (Los Angeles Times, July 27, 1913.) No other playgrounds have been purchased or provided for the children.

At an election November 12, 1913, Pasadena, Cal., failed to vote bonds to repair leaky roofs and make sanitary repairs on schoolhouses, to complete new schoolhouses under construction, and to make it possible to provide schools for the entire school year. The superintendent of schools said the school year would have to be cut a month or two, and that some schools would have to close when rains begin. (Los Angeles Times, Nov. 13, 1913.)

It happened to rain November 12 in Pasadena, and some thought the bonds might have carried had the vote been taken on a fair day when the ladies could more conveniently get to the polls, so it was decided to have another election to vote for bonds in a less amount than was voted on November 12. So on January 16, 1914, a fair day, another election was held and the bonds were again defeated. So the voters of Pasadena decided at two elections that the repair of leaky roofs, and sanitary improvements, etc., of schoolhouses, as well as playgrounds, are to be indefinitely postponed. A letter dated January 12, 1914, from the Director of the United States Census states that there were in 1910, 9,262 males and 11,950 females over 21 years of age. The total vote for and against the bonds was 4,832. Only 22.7 per cent of the voters of Pasadena—population, 30,291—was interested enough to go to the polls at election of January 16.

At an election September 11, 1914, at Pasadena, to vote bonds for about $12,000, to pay school-teachers the balance of their salaries due for teaching the previous school year, the bonds were defeated. (Los Angeles Times, Sept. 12, 1914.)

Much has been said by suffragists about the recall of a mayor in Seattle—who has since been renominated and elected—and the abolishing of the Barbary coast at San Francisco. Mayor Harper was recalled at Los Angeles about four years before women voted, on account of not enforcing the law against vice, and more than 50 cities in the country have abolished segregated vice districts in the past two years. Los Angeles abolished the segregated vice districts about six years before women had the ballot, but it took Denver nearly 20 years after women voted to do away with its segregated vice district. An abatement law was passed in the District of Columbia by men, and such a law has been passed or is pending in several male suffrage States.

Helen M. Foster, in Los Angeles Times, November 7, 1913, under head of "Woman lectures woman," commends Senator WORKS for daring to call attention to the neglect of citizenship by women voters, which, she says, are facts backed up by data and registration lists.

Denver Post, October 17, 1913, report of Mrs. Stewart Walling and Dr. Elizabeth Cassidy: "Colorado reformatory rotten. Nothing but filth and graft found at Buena Vista. Merely a preparatory school for the penitentiary. The reformatory, submerged in politics, is a monument to graft, ignorance, stupidity, extravagance, and mismanagement. Building so infested with vermin that only fire could purify it."

The Daily News, of Denver, of October 13, 1913, says the Rev. A. E. Shattuck, of Grand Junction, has stirred up the animals in fine shape by public denunciation of conditions which he alleges exists in Grand Junction, Colo.

Here are a few of the opinions he expresses:

"Lawlessness is pronounced among us.

"Illicit liquor selling is notorious.

"Gambling joints are in full swing.

"Boys and girls roam our streets late at night in unrestrained violation of the curfew ordnance. (The mothers are possibly away from home attending to political affairs.)

"Officials who hate unjust gain we need."

It has been said that women working in stores and factories need the ballot to increase their wages and for bettering their condition generally. Of the 8,075,773 female workers over 10 years of age only 4,436,804 are employed outside their home and home farms; 1,346,905 are under 21 years of age, leaving only 3,088,899 to vote—only about one-eighth of the women of voting age in the United States, there being many times more workingmen than working women in the country. Why have not men increased their wages by the ballot, as men have had the vote for over 100 years? If the ballot can increase wages and produce wealth and make equal pay for equal work, why do different wage scales obtain in different parts of this country, and why do laboring men rely on labor unions instead of the ballot for better wages and working conditions. No woman-suffrage State can show better laws than can be shown in male-suffrage States, and it is acknowledged that Nebraska, Wisconsin, Ohio, Michigan, and Missouri, which recently defeated woman suffrage overwhelmingly, and New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Indiana, etc., all male-suffrage States, are in the forefront with good laws for women and children and years ahead of woman-suffrage States in this regard. In most States where men make the laws a woman can desert her husband, and all he can do is to ask her to come back to him, while men can be imprisoned for deserting their wives. In many male-suffrage States women can sell and convey their real estate without the husband signing the deed, while men must have their wives' signatures in order to convey their own lands.

At the election November 3, 1914, California defeated an eight hour law and 48 hours per week, and Oregon defeated an eight-hour day and room-ventilation law for women by a large majority.

Suffragists continually tell us that if women had the ballot wars and internal strife would be a thing of the past, yet Colorado, which has had woman suffrage for a generation, was in the throes of civil war nearly all the past year. The State had become so weakened in its fabric that it could not keep order and protect life and property within its borders, but was compelled, through the State authorities, to call upon the President of the United States to send Government troops to administer affairs and bring order out of chaos. This is another proof of the failure of woman suffrage in the model State of Colorado, and refutes beyond any possibility of controversy the suffragists' claim.

The European war came suddenly and, as with most wars, there was no time for men to vote whether war should or should not be declared. Should a foreign foe invade our country and the women of our land vote to offer no resistance, but decide to surrender our liberty and property and submit with humiliation to the yoke of a foreign despot rather than consent to the men defending our homes and firesides by going to war, and the men of our Nation decided to fight for the honor and well-being of our country, how could the women prevent them? Could an army of women in a contest at arms defeat their husbands, fathers, sons, and brothers? Would it be right for women to vote that our men should not defend our homes and country?

On the other hand, would it be just and right for the women of our country to vote that our men should go to war, when the women would be unable to do their share of the fighting?

Abstract of census 1910, page 107, shows there were in the United States 26,999,151 men over 21 years of age and 24,555,754 women. So the women could not vote any laws that the men opposed.

Woman suffrage is undemocratic—

First. Because the leaders will not leave the question to the women to decide, but would have men force suffrage on women 80 per cent of whom do not want the ballot.

Second. As has been proven beyond a doubt, which any one can verify by United States census and Secretary of State reports, women will not vote, relatively, as generally as men of the different classes, and can never do so, however much they might desire to, on account of their duty of motherhood; consequently the will of the majority is often set aside and defeated where women vote and the political status of both men and women changed and laws representing the will of the minority enacted. This is one of the great injustices of women suffrage, for laws representing the will of the minority are dangerous to our free institutions.

Third. As the Father of our Country truly said, "Government without force is a nullity," and it is not just nor democratic for women to vote laws unless they can fulfill all the functions of government. As they can not serve in the Army and Navy, assist the officers in arresting criminals and in putting down riots, etc., it can not be said they have a right to vote laws which they can not enforce and which would not be enforced unless the men of the country desired they should be.

The women of Colorado or Arizona might say that as men had always held the offices for the enforcement of laws against crimes, such as train robbing, cattle stealing, etc., that it was a right for women to be placed in those offices; but who would say that women could arrest criminals and enforce the laws as well as men? And as they could not, who would say it was a right that they should be given such offices? The same is true of voting; as women only perform the duty of voting to a much less degree than men, and thereby the will of the people is not so well expressed at the polls, it can not be a right, nor is it justice for women to vote.

We believe that you will all agree with us that the main object of voting is to register the will of the majority; that it may be crystallized into the law of the land; that any propaganda that tends to and does, in some instances, defeat the will of the majority is inimical to our form of government.

We think from the instances cited we have shown beyond question that women when given the ballot do not vote as generally as men. When a man votes in a male-suffrage State his vote counts one, but in a woman-suffrage State, unless his wife votes, his vote only counts one-half. If a single man, if the women of his class do not vote relatively as generally as men of his class and opinions, his vote is of less effect than if women were not enfranchised. The fact that the different classes of women do not vote relatively in so large a proportion as men of the different classes in the suffrage States tends to, and in many instances does, defeat the will of the majority, and the registration of the will of the majority is the cornerstone of democratic government. No cause can be just or right that defeats this end. Women's failure to vote as generally as men, where they have been given the ballot, in many cases causes laws to be enacted that are the will of the minority; and that is one of the greatest injustices of woman suffrage, for the laws made by minorities are injurious to our free institutions.

As an illustration of how the will of the minority controls an election on account of women failing to vote relatively in as large numbers as men, in San Francisco County, Cal., where the sentiment was not favorable to woman suffrage, only 35.5 per cent of the men and women over 21 years of age voted for President November 5, 1912, while in Los Angeles County, Cal., which had, in 1910, 346,158 men and women over 21 years of age, which gave a large majority for woman suffrage, 48.5 per cent of the men and women of voting age voted for President in November, 1912. The vote for Wilson in San Francisco County, which had, in 1910, 297,269 men and women over 21 years of age, was 48,965; Roosevelt, 38,610; Debbs, 15,354. Had 48.5 per cent of the men and women in San Francisco County voted, as did in Los Angeles County, there would have been cast 144,175 votes for the presidential candidates instead of 105,646, the actual number cast; and if 144,175 votes had been cast in the same proportion as the 105,646 votes were cast, Wilson would have received 18,288 more votes than he did and Roosevelt 14,478 more.; and instead of Roosevelt carrying California by 174 votes, Wilson would have had the State by 3,636 plurality.

Forty-three per cent of the men and women over 21 years of age, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, voted in California November 5, 1912.

Another of the many instances that could be cited to show the injustice of giving women the ballot is the fact that it would reduce the power in politics of that great independent vote of the rural communities, which is the larger part of our population. The women in the rural communities, living farther from polling places, would not vote as generally as city women, who reside a few blocks from where they cast their ballots; consequently a smaller per cent of women in the country would vote than city women, and as country women could not vote as generally as the men, then the power in politics of our rural communities would be lessened by woman suffrage. Also, in our big cities, wherever liquor interests are large, the saloons, breweries, hotels, and cafes that sell liquor, property owners who rent property to such interests, all allied trades and business, as well as gamblers, etc., see that their women go to the polls on election day nearly as a unit, besides inducing their women friends to vote, it being to their interest financially to do so, while women with no monetary interests in the election would fail to vote as generally as men of their class and opinions do. So the will of the majority in such an election may often be defeated and the liquor interests win, while if men alone voted the saloon might be abolished. As before mentioned, when men alone voted on local option in Los Angeles the saloon won by about two to one, while with women voting the saloons won by nearly three to one. The same applies to any political machine that seeks to gain ascendancy for graft, organized socialism, etc., that really want to gain an advantage and defeat the will of the majority.

Under caption "What freaks do to California," the Los Angeles Times of September 26, 1914, prints in a dispatch from Sacramento: "California citizens will pay approximately $1,637,500 for the privilege of exercising the right of suffrage this year. This is an increase of 133⅓ per cent since 1910. Above amount is exclusive of city, county, and special elections." Women were given the ballot in California October 10, 1911.

But if women could ever vote as generally as men, there would be little or no change in our laws, for even if a wife once in a while voted in opposition to her husband and canceled his vote—in which event the family would have no voice in the laws at all—the final result of the whole vote would rarely be changed, and we would have the absurd spectacle of two people doing what one alone could accomplish as well, and waste all the effort expended in the study of politics by women and the enormous expense the doubling the vote would entail.

The foundation of every government is the family, and the large majority of men and women of voting age are married. If a wife voted in opposition to her husband, there would be no necessity for either to vote, while if they voted alike her vote would be useless.

Our Government is in part one great business concern; and what business man or factory owner would not consider a proposition childish to use for part of his work double the number of people, at double the cost, to do something that would be of absolutely no profit? Yet it has been proven that woman suffrage does not better conditions or laws, and still suffragists ask men to give women the ballot when it would double the cost of elections and double the number of people to do the voting with no good whatever accomplished.

Five States defeated woman suffrage at the polls in 1914. The wave of hysteria is passing, and instead of woman suffrage growing it is on the decline, as is shown by the vote in Michigan, where it was defeated in 1912 by about 700 majority and in 1913 by over 96,000. In Ohio in 1912 woman's suffrage was defeated by 87,455 majority and in 1914 by 182,905. In the two small States—Nevada and Montana—which enfranchised women in 1914 there were 99,881 women given the ballot; at the same rate of progress it would take 224 years to enfranchise all the women in the United States, as there are over 22,000,000 women that have not yet been given the privilege of voting at all elections.

The more women go out into the rough world to do men's work the greater the loss to the home and the more she loses her delicate charm and sympathy, which is distinctly feminine; and, in the language of the late Senator Vest, of Missouri, "What man would care to go home after the strife, struggle, and worry of the day in the business world and fall into the arms of a constitutional lawyer or a politician for rest, consolation, and comfort?"

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ASSOCIATION OPPOSED TO WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

CHARLESTON (S. C.) DRY DOCK (S. DOC. NO. 957).

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a copy of the report of the commandant of the Charleston Navy Yard on dredging for the dry dock at the Charleston Navy Yard. I ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LABOR EXCHANGES (S. DOC. NO. 956).

Mr. KERN. I have a copy of an article by John B. Andrews, secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, on a national system of labor exchanges. An estimate has been made for the printing of the article as a public document, and I find that it will cost less than the amount required by law. I ask that the article may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DISTRICT JUDGE FOR GEORGIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17869) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. CLARK of Wyoming conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5734) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to the State of Kansas, which were, in line 3, after "provisions," to insert "of sections 1 to 5, inclusive," and, in line 7, to strike out "including section 6 thereof."

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF POISON.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6631) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poison in the consular districts of the United States in China, which was, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The only amendment made by the House of Representatives is one which changes the date of the year from 1915 to 1916. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 20040. An act to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy of in the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

H. R. 21122. An act to validate certain homestead entries was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

JOSEPH ELIOT AUSTIN.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2642) authorizing the President to reinstate Joseph Eliot Austin as an ensign in the United States Navy, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the new matter inserted in the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "To appoint Joseph Eliot Austin an ensign in the United States Navy and after one year's service as ensign he shall be promoted to the grade of lieutenant, junior grade, as an additional number in that grade and in any grade to which he may thereafter be promoted, to take rank with and next after the officer at the foot of the list of lieutenants, junior grade, at the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That the said Joseph Eliot Austin, after one year's service as ensign, shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, by examination pursuant to law, his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy"; and the Senate agree to the same.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEORGE C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. A. WITHERSPOON,
S. J. TRIBBLE,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

THE SEAMEN'S BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a conference report on the seaman's bill. It is scarcely necessary to have it printed, because the committee has already had a number of copies printed. I will ask to have them distributed on the desks of Senators.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will allow it to go over and be printed?

Mr. FLETCHER. I stated that I thought it was hardly necessary to have it printed again.

Mr. LODGE. It has been printed?

Mr. FLETCHER. There are already printed copies to be obtained.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Senator will let it go over?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I am merely submitting the report at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 136), "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

That section 4516 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4516. In case of desertion or casualty resulting in the loss of one or more of the seamen, the master must ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same or higher grade or rating with those whose places they fill, and report the same to the United States consul at the first port at which he shall arrive, without incurring the penalty prescribed by the two preceding sections. This section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels or yachts."

SEC. 2. That in all merchant vessels of the United States of more than 100 tons gross, excepting those navigating rivers, harbors, bays, or sounds exclusively, the sailors shall, while at sea, be divided into at least two and the firemen, oilers, and water tenders into at least three watches, which shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel. The seamen shall not be shipped to work alternately in the fireroom and on deck, nor shall those shipped for deck duty be required to work in the fireroom, or vice versa; but these provisions shall not limit either the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, the whole or any part of the crew are needed for the maneuvering of the vessel or the performance of work necessary for the safety of the vessel or her cargo, or for the saving of life aboard other vessels in jeopardy, or when in port or at sea from requiring the whole or any part of the crew to participate in the performance of fire, lifeboat, and other drills. While such vessel is in a safe harbor no seaman shall be required to do any unnecessary work on Sundays or the following-named days: New Year's Day, the Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day, but this shall not prevent the dispatch of a vessel on regular schedule or when ready to proceed on her voyage. And at all times while such vessel is in a safe harbor, nine hours, inclusive of the anchor watch, shall constitute a day's work. Whenever the master of any vessel shall fail to comply with this section, the seamen shall be entitled to discharge from such vessel and to receive the wages earned. But this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, or yachts.

SEC. 3. That section 4529 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4529. The master or owner of any vessel making coasting voyages shall pay to every seaman his wages within two days after the termination of the agreement under which he was shipped, or at the time such seaman is discharged, whichever first happens; and in case of vessels making foreign voyages, or from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, within 24 hours after the cargo has been discharged, or within four days after the seaman has been discharged, whichever first happens; and in all cases the seaman shall be entitled to be paid at the time of his discharge on account of wages a sum equal to one-third part of the balance due him. Every master or owner who refuses or neglects to make payment in the manner hereinbefore mentioned without sufficient cause shall pay to the seaman a sum equal to two days' pay for each and every day during which payment is delayed beyond the respective periods, which sum shall be recoverable as wages in any claim made before the court; but this section shall not apply to masters or owners of any vessel the seamen of which are entitled to share in the profits of the cruise or voyage."

SEC. 4. That section 4530 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4530. Every seaman on a vessel of the United States shall be entitled to receive on demand from the master of the vessel to which he belongs one-half part of the wages which he shall have then earned at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the voyage is ended and all stipulations in the contract to the contrary shall be void: Provided, Such a demand shall not be made before the expiration of nor oftener than once in five days. Any failure on the part of the master to comply with this demand shall release the seaman from his contract and he shall be entitled to full payment of wages earned. And when the voyage is ended every such seaman shall be entitled to the remainder of the wages which shall then be due him, as provided in section 4529 of the Revised Statutes: Provided further, That notwithstanding any release signed by any seaman under section 4552 of the Revised Statutes any court having jurisdiction may upon good cause shown set aside such release and take such action as justice shall require: And provided further, That this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States, and the courts of the United States shall be open to such seamen for its enforcement."

SEC. 5. That section 4559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4559. Upon a complaint in writing, signed by the first and second officers or a majority of the crew of any vessel, while in a foreign port, that such vessel is in an unsuitable condition to go to sea because she is leaky or insufficiently supplied with sails, rigging, anchors, or any other equipment, or that the crew is insufficient to man her, or that her provisions, stores and supplies are not or have not been during the voyage sufficient or wholesome, thereupon, in any of these or like cases the consul or a commercial agent who may discharge any of the duties of a consul shall cause to be appointed three persons of like qualifications with those described in section 4557, who shall proceed to examine into the cause of complaint and who shall proceed and be governed in all their proceedings as provided by said section."

SEC. 6. That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to navigation," approved March 3, 1897, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That on all merchant vessels of the United States the construction of which shall be begun after the passage of this act, except yachts, pilot boats, or vessels of less than 100 tons register, every place appropriated to the crew of the vessel shall have a space of not less than 120 cubic feet and not less than 16 square feet, measured on the floor or deck of that place, for each seaman or apprentice lodged therein, and each seaman shall have a separate berth and not more than one berth shall be placed one above another; such place or lodging shall be securely constructed, properly lighted, drained, heated, and ventilated, properly protected from weather and sea, and, as far as practicable, properly shut off and protected from the effluvium of cargo or bilge water. And every such crew space shall be kept free from goods or stores not being the personal property of the crew occupying said place in use during the voyage.

"That in addition to the space allotment for lodgings hereinbefore provided, on all merchant vessels of the United States which in the ordinary course of their trade make voyages of more than three days' duration between ports, and which carry a crew of 12 or more seamen, there shall be constructed a compartment, suitably separated from other spaces, for hospital purposes, and such compartment shall have at least one bunk for every 12 seamen, constituting her crew, provided that not more than six bunks shall be required in any case.

"Every steamboat of the United States plying upon the Mississippi River or its tributaries shall furnish an appropriate place for the crew, which shall conform to the requirements of this section, so far as they are applicable thereto, by providing sleeping room in the engine room of such steamboat, properly protected from the cold, wind, and rain by means of suitable awnings or screens on either side of the guards or sides and forward, reaching from the boiler deck to the lower or main deck, under the direction and approval of the Supervising Inspector General of Steam Vessels, and shall be properly heated.

"All merchant vessels of the United States the construction of which shall be begun after the passage of this act having more than 10 men on deck must have at least one light, clean, and properly ventilated washing place. There shall be provided at least one washing outfit for every two men of the watch. The washing place shall be properly heated. A separate washing place shall be provided for the fireroom and engine-room men, if their number exceed 10, which shall be large enough to accommodate at least one-sixth of them at the same time, and have hot and cold water supply and a sufficient number of wash basins, sinks, and shower baths.

"Any failure to comply with this section shall subject the owner or owners of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $50 nor more than $500: Provided, That forecastles shall be fumigated at such intervals as may be provided by regulations to be issued by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Department of Commerce, and shall have at least two exits, one of which may be used in emergencies."

SEC. 7. That section 4596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4596. Whenever any seaman who has been lawfully engaged or any apprentice to the sea service commits any of the following offenses, he shall be punished as follows:

"First. For desertion, by forfeiture of all or any part of the clothes or effects he leaves on board and of all or any part of the wages or emoluments which he has then earned.

"Second. For neglecting or refusing without reasonable cause to join his vessel or to proceed to sea in his vessel, or for absence without leave at any time within 24 hours of the vessel's sailing from any port, either at the commencement or during the progress of the voyage, or for absence at any time without leave and without sufficient reason from his vessel and from his duty, not amounting to desertion, by forfeiture from his wages of not more than two days' pay or sufficient to defray any expenses which shall have been properly incurred in hiring a substitute.

"Third. For quitting the vessel without leave, after her arrival at the port of her delivery and before she is placed in security, by forfeiture from his wages of not more than one month's pay.

"Fourth. For willful disobedience to any lawful command at sea, by being, at the option of the master, placed in irons until such disobedience shall cease, and upon arrival in port by forfeiture from his wages of not more than four days' pay, or, at the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not more than one month.

"Fifth. For continued willful disobedience to lawful command or continued willful neglect of duty at sea, by being, at the option of the master, placed in irons, on bread and water, with full rations every fifth day, until such disobedience shall cease, and upon arrival in port by forfeiture, for every 24 hours' continuance of such disobedience or neglect, of a sum of not more than 12 days' pay, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, at the discretion of the court.

"Sixth. For assaulting any master or mate, by imprisonment for not more than two years.

"Seventh. For willfully damaging the vessel, or embezzling or willfully damaging any of the stores or cargo, by forfeiture out of his wages of a sum equal in amount to the loss thereby sustained, and also, at the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not more than 12 months.

"Eighth. For any act of smuggling for which he is convicted and whereby loss or damage is occasioned to the master or owner, he shall be liable to pay such master or owner such a sum as is sufficient to reimburse the master or owner for such loss or damage, and the whole or any part of his wages may be retained in satisfaction or on account of such liability, and he shall be liable to imprisonment for a period of not more than 12 months."

SEC. 8. That section 4600 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4600. It shall be the duty of all consular officers to discountenance insubordination by every means in their power and, where the local authorities can be usefully employed for that purpose, to lend their aid and use their exertions to that end in the most effectual manner. In all cases where seamen or officers are accused, the consular officer shall inquire into the facts and proceed as provided in section 4583 of the Revised Statutes; and the officer discharging such seaman shall enter upon the crew list and shipping articles and official log the cause of such discharge and the particulars in which the cruel or unusual treatment consisted and subscribe his name thereto officially. He shall read the entry made in the official log to the master, and his reply thereto, if any, shall likewise be entered and subscribed in the same manner."

SEC. 9. That section 4611 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4611. Flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment are hereby prohibited on board of any vessel, and no form of corporal punishment on board of any vessel shall be deemed justifiable, and any master or other officer thereof who shall violate the aforesaid provisions of this section, or either thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than two years. Whenever any officer other than the master of such vessel shall violate any provision of this section, it shall be the duty of such master to surrender such officer to the proper authorities as soon as practicable, provided he has actual knowledge of the misdemeanor, or complaint thereof is made within three days after reaching port. Any failure on the part of such master to use due diligence to comply herewith, which failure shall result in the escape of such officer, shall render the master or vessel or the owner of the vessel liable in damages for such flogging or corporal punishment to the person illegally punished by such officer."

SEC. 10. That section 23 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended as regards the items of water and butter, so that in lieu of a daily requirement of 4 quarts of water there shall be a requirement of 5 quarts of water every day, and in lieu of a daily requirement of 1 ounce of butter there shall be a requirement of 2 ounces of butter every day.

SEC. 11. That section 24 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. That section 10 of chapter 121 of the laws of 1884, as amended by section 3 of chapter 421 of the laws of 1886, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10 (a) That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order, or note, or other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages. Any person violating any of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100, and may also be imprisoned for a period of not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court. The payment of such advance wages or allotment shall in no case except as herein provided absolve the vessel or the master or the owner thereof from the full payment of wages after the same shall have been actually earned, and shall be no defense to a libel suit or action for the recovery of such wages. If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

"'(b) That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of any portion of the wages he may earn to his grandparents, parents, wife, sister, or children.

"'(c) That no allotment shall be valid unless in writing and signed by and approved by the shipping commissioner. It shall be the duty of the said commissioner to examine such allotments and the parties to them and enforce compliance with the law. All stipulations for the allotment of any part of the wages of a seaman during his absence which are made at the commencement of the voyage shall be inserted in the agreement and shall state the amounts and times of the payments to be made and the persons to whom the payments are to be made.

"'(d) That no allotment except as provided for in this section shall be lawful. Any person who shall falsely claim to be such relation, as above described, of a seaman under this section shall for every such offense be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

"'(e) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels while in waters of the United States, as to vessels of the United States, and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

"'The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel of the United States, or of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States, shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance, and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

"'(f) That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce the Commissioner of Navigation shall make regulations to carry out this section.'"

SEC. 12. That no wages due or accruing to any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and every payment of wages to a seaman or apprentice shall be valid in law, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment of wages or of any attachment, encumbrance, or arrestment thereon; and no assignment or sale of wages or of salvage made prior to the accruing thereof shall bind the party making the same, except such allotments as are authorized by this title. This section shall apply to fishermen employed on fishing vessels as well as to seamen: Provided, That nothing contained in this or any preceding section shall interfere with the order by any court regarding the payment by any seaman of any part of his wages for the support and maintenance of his wife and minor children. Section 4536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed.

SEC. 13. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seaman. Every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified for service as such on the seas, who is 19 years of age or upward, and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels or coast guard vessels; and every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified to serve as such on the Great Lakes and on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, who is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least 18 months' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or coast guard vessels; and graduate of school ships approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea: Provided, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition, such persons or graduates are found to be competent: Provided further, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship a person found competent may be rated as able seaman after having served on deck 12 months at sea, or on the Great Lakes; but seamen examined and rated able seamen under this proviso shall not in any case compose more than one-fourth of the number of able seamen required by this section to be shipped or employed upon any vessel.

Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit and examination, under rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality and age of the applicant and the vessel or vessels on which he has had service and that he is entitled to such certificate under the provisions of this section, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued and shall keep on file the affidavits upon which said certificates are issued.

The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs, or is scheduled to depart: Provided further, That any person that shall knowingly make a false affidavit for such purpose shall be deemed guilty of perjury and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court. Any violation of any provision of this section by the owner, master, or officer in charge of the vessel shall subject the owner of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $500: And provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and nothing herein shall be held or construed to prevent the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, from making rules and regulations authorized by law as to vessels excluded from the operation of this section.

SEC. 14. That section 4488 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding thereto the following: "The powers bestowed by this section upon the Board of Supervising Inspectors in respect of lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, and other life-saving appliances and equipment, and the further requirements herein as to davits, embarkation of passengers in lifeboats and rafts, and the manning of lifeboats and rafts, and the musters and drills of the crews, on steamers navigating the ocean, or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States, on and after July 1, 1915, shall be subject to the provisions, limitations, and minimum requirements of the regulations herein set forth, and all such vessels shall thereafter be required to comply in all respects therewith: Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same."

REGULATIONS.

LIFE-SAVING APPLIANCES.

STANDARD TYPES OF BOATS.

The standard types of boats classified as follows:

Class.	Section.	Type.
I. Entirely rigid sides	A. Open	Internal buoyancy only.
	B. Open	Internal and external buoyancy.
	C. Pontoon	Well deck; fixed water-tight bulwarks.
II. Partially collapsible sides.	A. Open	Upper part of sides collapsible.
	B. Pontoon	Well deck, collapsible water-tight bulwarks.
	C. Pontoon	Flush deck; collapsible water-tight bulwarks.

STRENGTH OF BOATS.

Each boat must be of sufficient strength to enable it to be safely lowered into the water when loaded with its full complement of persons and equipment.

ALTERNATIVE TYPES OF BOATS AND RAFTS.

Any type of boat may be accepted as equivalent to a boat of one of the prescribed classes and any type of raft as equivalent to an approved pontoon raft if the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is satisfied by suitable trials that it is as effective as the standard types of the class in question, or as the approved type of pontoon raft, as the case may be.

Motor boats may be accepted if they comply with the requirements laid down for boats of the first class, but only to a limited number, which number shall be determined by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

No boat may be approved the buoyancy of which depends upon the previous adjustment of one of the principal parts of the hull or which has not a cubic capacity of at least 125 cubic feet.

BOATS OF THE FIRST CLASS.

The standard types of boats of the first class must satisfy the following conditions:

1A.—OPEN BOATS WITH INTERNAL BUOYANCY ONLY.

The buoyancy of a wooden boat of this type shall be provided by water-tight air cases, the total volume of which shall be at least equal to one-tenth of the cubic capacity of the boat.

The buoyancy of a metal boat of this type shall not be less than that required above for a wooden boat of the same cubic capacity, the volume of water-tight air cases being increased accordingly.

1B.—OPEN BOATS WITH INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL BUOYANCY.

The internal buoyancy of a wooden boat of this type shall be provided by water-tight air cases, the total volume of which is at least equal to 7½ per cent of the cubic capacity of the boat.

The external buoyancy may be of cork or of any other equally efficient material, but such buoyancy shall not be secured by the use of rushes, cork shavings, loose granulated cork, or any other loose granulated substance, or by any means dependent upon inflation by air.

If the buoyancy is of cork, its volume, for a wooden boat, shall not be less than 0.033 of the cubic capacity of the boat; if of any material other than cork, its volume and distribution shall be such that the buoyancy and stability of the boat are not less than that of a similar boat provided with buoyancy of cork.

The buoyancy of a metal boat shall be not less than that required above for a wooden boat of the same cubic capacity, the volume of the air cases and external buoyancy being increased accordingly.

1C.—PONTOON BOATS, IN WHICH PERSONS CAN NOT BE ACCOMMODATED BELOW THE DECK, HAVING A WELL DECK AND FIXED WATER-TIGHT BULWARKS.

The area of the well deck of a boat of this type shall be at least 30 per cent of the total deck area. The height of the well deck above the water line at all points shall be at least equal to one-half per cent of the length of the boat, this height being increased to 1½ per cent of the length of the boat at the ends of the well.

The freeboard of a boat of this type shall be such as to provide for a reserve buoyancy of at least 35 per cent.

BOATS OF THE SECOND CLASS.

The standard types of boats of the second class must satisfy the following conditions:

2A.—OPEN BOATS HAVING THE UPPER PART OF THE SIDES COLLAPSIBLE.

A boat of this type shall be fitted both with water-tight air cases and with external buoyancy, the volume of which, for each person which the boat is able to accommodate, shall be at least equal to the following amounts: Air cases, 1.5 cubic feet; external buoyancy (if of cork), 0.2 cubic foot.

The minimum freeboard of boats of this type is fixed in relation to their length; it is measured vertically to the top of the solid hull at the side amidships, from the water level when the boat is loaded.

The freeboard in fresh water shall not be less than the following amounts:

Length of the boat.	Minimum freeboard.
Feet.	Inches.

The freeboard of boats of intermediate lengths is to be found by interpolation.

2B.—PONTOON BOATS HAVING A WELL DECK AND COLLAPSIBLE BULWARKS.

All the conditions laid down for boats of type 1C are to be applied to boats of this type, which differ from those of type 1C only in regard to the bulwarks.

2C.—PONTOON BOATS, IN WHICH THE PERSONS CAN NOT BE ACCOMMODATED BELOW DECK, HAVING A FLUSH DECK AND COLLAPSIBLE BULWARKS.

The minimum freeboard of boats of this type is independent of their lengths and depends only upon their depth. The depth of the boat is to be measured vertically from the underside of the garboard strake to the top of the deck on the side amidships, and the freeboard is to be measured from the top of the deck at the side amidships to the water level when the boat is loaded.

The freeboard in fresh water shall not be less than the following amounts, which are applicable without correction to boats having a mean sheer equal to 3 per cent of their length:

Depth of boat.	Minimum freeboard.
18	3½
20	5½

For intermediate depths the freeboard is obtained by interpolation.

If the sheer is less than the standard sheer defined above, the minimum freeboard is obtained by adding to the figures in the table one-seventh of the difference between the standard sheer and the actual mean sheer measured at the stem and sternpost. No deduction is to be made from the freeboard on account of the sheer being greater than the standard sheer or on account of the camber of the deck.

MOTOR BOATS.

When motor boats are accepted, the volume of internal buoyancy and, when fitted, the external buoyancy, must be fixed, having regard to the difference between the weight of the motor and its accessories and the weight of the additional persons which the boat could accommodate if the motor and its accessories were removed.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CLEARING PONTOON LIFEBOATS OF WATER.

All pontoon lifeboats shall be fitted with efficient means for quickly clearing the deck of water. The orifices for this purpose shall be such that the water can not enter the boat through them when they are intermittently submerged. The number and size of the orifices shall be determined for each type of boat by a special test.

For the purpose of this test the pontoon boat shall be loaded with a weight of iron or bags of sand, equal to that of its complement of persons and equipment.

In the case of a boat 28 feet in length 2 tons of water shall be cleared from the boat in a time not exceeding the following: Type 1C, 60 seconds; type 2B, 60 seconds; type 2C, 20 seconds.

In the case of a boat having a length greater or less than 28 feet the weight of water to be cleared in the same time shall be, for each type, directly proportional to the length of the boat.

CONSTRUCTION OF BOATS.

Open lifeboats of the first class (types 1A and 1B) must have a mean sheer at least equal to 4 per cent of their length.

The air cases of open boats of the first class shall be placed along the sides of the boat; they may also be placed at the ends of the boat, but not in the bottom of the boat.

Pontoon lifeboats may be built of wood or metal. If constructed of wood, they shall have the bottom and deck made of two thicknesses with textile material between; if of metal, they shall be divided into water-tight compartments with means of access to each compartment.

All boats shall be fitted for the use of a steering oar.

PONTOON RAFTS.

No type of pontoon raft may be approved unless it satisfies the following conditions:

First. It should be reversible and fitted with bulwarks of wood, canvas, or other suitable material on both sides. These bulwarks may be collapsible.

Second. It should be of such size, strength, and weight that it can be handled without mechanical appliances, and, if necessary, be thrown from the vessel's deck.

Third. It should have not less than 3 cubic feet of air cases or equivalent buoyancy for each person whom it can accommodate.

Fourth. It should have a deck area of not less than 4 square feet for each person whom it can accommodate and the platform should not be less than 6 inches above the water level when the raft is loaded.

Fifth. The air cases or equivalent buoyancy should be placed as near as possible to the sides of the raft.

CAPACITY OF BOATS AND PONTOON RAFTS.

First. The number of persons which a boat of one of the standard types or a pontoon raft can accommodate is equal to the greatest whole number obtained by dividing the capacity in cubic feet, or the surface in square feet, of the boat or of the raft by the standard unit of capacity, or unit of surface (according to circumstances), defined below for each type.

Second. The cubic capacity in feet of a boat in which the number of persons is determined by the surface shall be assumed to be 10 times the number of persons which it is authorized to carry.

Third. The standard units of capacity and surface are as follows:

Units of capacity, open boats, type 1A, 10 cubic feet; open boats, type 1B, 9 cubic feet.

Unit of surface, open boats, type 2A, 3½ square feet; pontoon boats, type 2C, 3½ square feet; pontoon boats, type 1C, 3¼ square feet; pontoon boats, type 2B, 3¼ square feet.

Fourth. The Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, may accept, in place of 3¼, a smaller divisor, if it is satisfied after trial that the number of persons for whom there is seating accommodation in the pontoon boat in question is greater than the number obtained by applying the above divisor, provided always that the divisor adopted in place of 3¼ may never be less than 3.

CAPACITY LIMITS.

Pontoon boats and pontoon rafts shall never be marked with a number of persons greater than that obtained in the manner specified in this section.

This number shall be reduced—

First. When it is greater than the number of persons for which there is proper seating accommodation, the latter number being determined in such a way that the persons when seated do not interfere in any way with the use of the oars.

Second. When in the case of boats other than those of the first two sections of the first class, the freeboard, when the boat is fully loaded, is less than the freeboard laid down for each type, respectively. In such circumstances the number shall be reduced until the freeboard, when the boat is fully loaded, is at least equal to the standard freeboard laid down above.

In boats of types 1C and 2B the raised part of the deck at the sides may be regarded as affording seating accommodation.

EQUIVALENTS FOR AND WEIGHT OF THE PERSONS.

In test for determining the number of persons which a boat or pontoon raft can accommodate each person shall be assumed to be an adult person wearing a life jacket.

In verifications of freeboard the pontoon boats shall be loaded with a weight of at least 165 pounds for each adult person that the pontoon boat is authorized to carry.

In all cases two children under 12 years of age shall be reckoned as one person.

CUBIC CAPACITY OF OPEN BOATS OF THE FIRST CLASS.

First. The cubic capacity of an open boat of type 1A or 1B shall be determined by Stirling's (Simpson's) rule or by any other method, approved by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, giving the same degree of accuracy. The capacity of a square-sterned boat shall be calculated as if the boat had a pointed stern.

Second. For example, the capacity in cubic feet of a boat, calculated by the aid of Stirling's rule, may be considered as given by the following formula:

$$\text{Capacity}=\frac{l}{12}(4A+2B+4C),$$

l being the length of the boat in meters (or feet) from the inside of the planking or plating at the stem to the corresponding point at the stern post; in the case of a boat with a square stern, the length is measured to the inside of the transom.

A, B, C denote, respectively, the areas of the cross sections at the quarter length forward, amidships, and the quarter length aft, which correspond to the three points obtained by dividing l into four equal parts. (The areas corresponding to the two ends of the boat are considered negligible.)

The areas A, B, C shall be deemed to be given in square feet by the successive application of the following formula to each of the three cross sections:

h being the depth measured in meters (or in feet) inside the planking or plating from the keel to the level of the gunwale, or, in certain cases, to a lower level, as determined hereafter.

a, b, c, d, e denote the horizontal breadths of the boat measured in feet at the upper and lower points of the depth and at the three points obtained by dividing h into four equal parts (a and e being the breadths at the extreme points, and c at the middle point, of h).

Third. If the sheer of the gunwale, measured at the two points situated at a quarter of the length of the boat from the ends, exceeds 1 per cent of the length of the boat, the depth employed in calculating the area of the cross sections A or C shall be deemed to be the depth amidships plus 1 per cent of the length of the boat.

Fourth. If the depth of the boat amidships exceeds 45 per cent of the breadth, the depth employed in calculating the area of the midship cross section B shall be deemed to be equal to 45 per cent of the breadth; and the depth employed in calculating the areas of the quarter-length sections A and C is obtained by increasing this last figure by an amount equal to 1 per cent of the length of the boat, provided that in no case shall the depths employed in the calculation exceed the actual depths at these points.

Fifth. If the depth of the boat is greater than 4 feet, the number of persons given by the application of this rule shall be reduced in proportion to the ratio of 4 feet to the actual depth, until the boat has been satisfactorily tested afloat with that number of persons on board all wearing life jackets.

Sixth. The Board of Supervising Inspectors shall impose, by suitable formulæ, a limit for the number of persons allowed in boats with very fine ends and in boats very full in form.

Seventh. The Board of Supervising Inspectors may by regulation assign to a boat a capacity equal to the product of the length, the breadth, and the depth multiplied by six-tenths if it is evident that this formula does not give a greater capacity than that obtained by the above method. The dimensions shall then be measured in the following manner:

Length. From the intersection of the outside of the planking with the stem to the corresponding point at the sternpost or, in the case of a square-sterned boat, to the afterside of the transom.

Breadth. From the outside of the planking at the point where the breadth of the boat is greatest.

Depth. Amidships inside the planking from the keel to the level of the gunwale, but the depth used in calculating the cubic capacity may not in any case exceed 45 per centum of the breadth.

In all cases the vessel owner has the right to require that the cubic capacity of the boat shall be determined by exact measurement.

Eighth. The cubic capacity of a motor boat is obtained from the gross capacity by deducting a volume equal to that occupied by the motor and its accessories.

DECK AREA OF PONTOON BOATS AND OPEN BOATS OF THE SECOND CLASS.

First. The area of the deck of a pontoon boat of type 1C, 2B, or 2C shall be determined by the method indicated below or by any other method giving the same degree of accuracy. The same rule is to be applied in determining the area within the fixed bulwarks of a boat of type 2A.

Second. For example, the surface in square feet of a boat may be deemed to be given by the following formula:

$$\text{Area}=\frac{l}{12}(2a+1.5b+1c+1.5d+2e),$$

l being the length in feet from the intersection of the outside of the planking with the stem to the corresponding point at the sternpost.

a, b, c, d, e denote the horizontal breadths in feet outside the planking at the points obtained by dividing l into four equal parts and subdividing the foremost and aftermost parts into two equal parts (a and e being the breadths at the extreme subdivisions, c at the middle point of the length, and b and d at the intermediate points).

MARKING OF BOATS AND PONTOON RAFTS.

The dimensions of the boat and the number of persons which it is authorized to carry shall be marked on it in clear, permanent characters, according to regulations by the Board of Supervising Inspectors approved by the Secretary of Commerce. These marks shall be specifically approved by the officers appointed to inspect the ship.

Pontoon rafts shall be marked with the number of persons in the same manner.

EQUIPMENT OF BOATS AND PONTOON RAFTS.

First. The normal equipment of every boat shall consist of—

(a) A single-blanked complement of oars and two spare oars; one set and a half of thole pins or crutches; a boat hook.

(b) Two plugs for each plug hole (plugs are not required when proper automatic valves are fitted); a bailer and a galvanized-iron bucket.

(c) A tiller or yoke and yoke lines.

(d) Two hatchets.

(e) A lamp filled with oil and trimmed.

(f) A mast or masts with one good sail at least, and proper gear for each. (This does not apply to motor lifeboats or lifeboats on the Great Lakes or other inland waters.)

(g) A suitable compass.

Pontoon lifeboats will have no plug hole, but shall be provided with at least two bilge pumps.

In the case of a steamer which carries passengers in the North Atlantic, all the boats need not be equipped with masts, sails, and compasses, if the ship is provided with a radiotelegraph installation.

Second. The normal equipment of every approved pontoon raft shall consist of—

(a) Four oars.

(b) Five rowlocks.

(c) A self-igniting life-buoy light.

Third. In addition, every boat and every pontoon raft shall be equipped with—

(a) A life line becketed around the outside.

(b) A sea anchor.

(c) A painter.

(d) A vessel containing 1 gallon of vegetable or animal oil. The vessel shall be so constructed that the oil can be easily distributed on the water and so arranged that it can be attached to the sea anchor.

(e) A water-tight receptacle containing 2 pounds avoirdupois of provisions for each person, except on vessels navigating fresh water.

(f) A water-tight receptacle containing 1 quart for each person, except on vessels navigating fresh water.

(g) A number of self-igniting "red lights" and a water-tight box of matches.

Fourth. All loose equipment must be securely attached to the boat or pontoon raft to which it belongs.

STOWAGE OF BOATS—NUMBER OF DAVITS.

The minimum number of sets of davits is fixed in relation to the length of the vessel; provided that a number of sets of davits greater than the number of boats necessary for the accommodation of all the persons on board may not be required.

HANDLING OF THE BOATS AND RAFTS.

All the boats and rafts must be stowed in such a way that they can be launched in the shortest possible time and that, even under unfavorable conditions of list and trim from the point of view of the handling of the boats and rafts, it may be possible to embark in them as large a number of persons as possible.

The arrangements must be such that it may be possible to launch on either side of the vessel as large a number of boats and rafts as possible.

STRENGTH AND OPERATION OF THE DAVITS.

The davits shall be of such strength that the boats can be lowered with their full complement of persons and equipment, the vessel being assumed to have a list of 15°.

The davits must be fitted with a gear of sufficient power to insure that the boat can be turned out against the maximum list under which the lowering of the boats is possible on the vessel in question.

OTHER APPLIANCES EQUIVALENT TO DAVITS.

Any appliance may be accepted in lieu of davits or sets of davits if the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is satisfied after proper trials that the appliance in question is as effective as davits for placing the boats in the water.

DAVITS.

Each set of davits shall have a boat of the first class attached to it, provided that the number of open boats of the first class attached to davits shall not be less than the minimum number fixed by the table which follows.

If it is neither practicable nor reasonable to place on a vessel the minimum number of sets of davits required by the rules, the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, may authorize a smaller number of sets of davits to be fitted, provided always that this number shall never be less than the minimum number of open boats of the first class required by the rules.

If a large proportion of the persons on board are accommodated in boats whose length is greater than 50 feet, a further reduction in the number of sets of davits may be allowed exceptionally, if the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is satisfied that the arrangements are in all respects satisfactory.

In all cases in which a reduction in the minimum number of sets of davits or other equivalent appliances required by the rules is allowed, the owner of the vessel in question shall be required to prove, by a test made in the presence of an officer designated by the Supervising Inspector General, that all the boats can be efficiently launched in a minimum time.

The conditions of this test shall be as follows:

First. The vessel is to be upright and in smooth water.

Second. The time is the time required from the beginning of the removal of the boat covers, or any other operation necessary to prepare the boats for lowering, until the last boat or pontoon raft is afloat.

Third. The number of men employed in the whole operation must not exceed the total number of boat hands that will be carried on the vessel under normal service conditions.

Fourth. Each boat when being lowered must have on board at least two men and its full equipment as required by the rules.

The time allowed for putting all the boats into the water shall be fixed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

MINIMUM NUMBER OF DAVITS AND OF OPEN BOATS OF THE FIRST CLASS—MINIMUM BOAT CAPACITY.

The following table fixes, according to the length of the vessel—

(A) The minimum number of sets of davits to be provided, to each of which must be attached a boat of the first class in accordance with this section.

(B) The minimum total number of open boats of the first class, which must be attached to davits, in accordance with this section.

(C) The minimum boat capacity required, including the boats attached to davits and the additional boats, in accordance with this section.

Registered length of the ship (feet).	(A) Minimum number of sets of davits.	(B) Minimum number of open boats of the first class.	(C) Minimum capacity of lifeboats.

When the length of the vessel exceeds 1,030 feet, the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, shall determine the minimum number of sets of davits and of open boats of the first class for that vessel.

EMBARKATION OF THE PASSENGERS IN THE LIFEBOATS AND RAFTS.

Suitable arrangements shall be made for embarking the passengers in the boats, in accord with regulations by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

In vessels which carry rafts there shall be a number of rope or wooden ladders always available for use in embarking the persons onto the rafts.

The number and arrangement of the boats, and (where they are allowed) of the pontoon rafts, on a vessel depends upon the total number of persons which the vessel is intended to carry: Provided, That there shall not be required on any voyage a total capacity in boats, and (where they are allowed) pontoon rafts, greater than that necessary to accommodate all the persons on board.

At no moment of its voyage shall any passenger steam vessel of the United States on ocean routes more than 20 nautical miles offshore have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board.

If the lifeboats attached to davits do not provide sufficient accommodation for all persons on board, additional lifeboats of one of the standard types shall be provided. This addition shall bring the total capacity of the boats on the vessel at least up to the greater of the two following amounts:

(a) The minimum capacity required by these regulations.

(b) A capacity sufficient to accommodate 75 per cent of the persons on board.

The remainder of the accommodation required shall be provided, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, either in boats of class 1 or class 2, or in pontoon rafts of an approved type.

At no moment of its voyage shall any passenger steam vessel of the United States on ocean routes less than 20 nautical miles offshore have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board. The number and type of such lifeboats and life rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 15 to September 15, inclusive, any passenger steam vessel of the United States, on ocean routes less than 20 nautical miles offshore, shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 70 per cent of the total number of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than 50 per cent shall be in lifeboats and 50 per cent may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

At no moment of its voyage may any ocean-cargo steam vessel of the United States have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats on board. The number and types of such boats shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

At no moment of its voyage may any passenger steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, except over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, have on board a total number of persons, including passengers and crew, greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board. The number and types of such lifeboats and lift rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 15 to September 15, inclusive, any such steamer shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 50 per cent of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than two-fifths shall be in lifeboats and three-fifths may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided further, That all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes, from September 15 to May 15 on the Great Lakes or for service on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry, and shall carry, enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew: And provided further, That not more than 25 per cent of such equipment may be in pontoon life rafts or collapsible lifeboats.

At no moment of its voyage may any cargo steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats on board. The number and types of such boats shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

The number, types, and capacity of lifeboats and life rafts, together with the proportion of such accommodation to the number of persons on board which shall be carried on steam vessels on the Great Lakes, on routes 3 miles or less offshore or over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, and on all other lakes, and on rivers, bays, and sounds, shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

All regulations by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, authorized by this act, shall be transmitted to Congress as soon as practicable after they are made.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized in specific cases to exempt existing vessels from the requirements of this section that the davits shall be of such strength and shall be fitted with a gear of sufficient power to insure that the boats can be lowered with their full complement of persons and equipment, the vessel being assumed to have a list of 15°, where their strict application would not be practicable or reasonable.

CERTIFICATED LIFEBOAT MEN—MANNING OF THE BOATS.

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified as follows: If the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 1; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 2; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 61 persons the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 3; if the boat or raft carries from 61 to 85 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be four; if the boat or raft carries from 86 to 110 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 5; if the boat or raft carries from 111 to 160 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 6; if the boat or raft carries from 161 to 210 persons, the minimum number of certified lifeboat men shall be 7; and, thereafter, 1 additional certificated lifeboat man for each additional 50 persons: Provided, That if the raft carries 15 persons or less a licensed officer or able seaman need not be placed in charge of such raft: Provided further, That one-half the number of rafts carried shall have a capacity of exceeding 15 persons.

The allocation of the certificated lifeboat men to each boat and raft remains within the discretion of the master, according to the circumstances.

By "certificated lifeboat man" is meant any member of the crew who holds a certificate of efficiency issued under the authority of the Secretary of Commerce, who is hereby directed to provide for the issue of such certificates.

In order to obtain the special lifeboat man's certificate the applicant must prove to the satisfaction of an officer designated by the Secretary of Commerce that he has been trained in all the operations connected with launching lifeboats and the use of oars; that he is acquainted with the practical handling of the boats themselves; and, further, that he is capable of understanding and answering the orders relative to lifeboat service.

Section 4463 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is hereby amended by adding the words "including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated," to the word "crew" wherever it occurs.

MANNING OF BOATS.

A licensed officer or able seaman shall be placed in charge of each boat or pontoon raft; he shall have a list of its lifeboat men and other members of its crew, which shall be sufficient for her safe management, and shall see that the men placed under his orders are acquainted with their several duties and stations.

A man capable of working the motor shall be assigned to each motor boat.

The duty of seeing that the boats, pontoon rafts, and other lifesaving appliances are at all times ready for use shall be assigned to one or more officers.

MUSTER ROLL AND DRILLS.

Special duties for the event of an emergency shall be allotted to each member of the crew.

The muster list shows all these special duties, and indicates, in particular, the station to which each man must go, and the duties that he has to perform.

Before the vessel sails the muster list shall be drawn up and exhibited, and the proper authority, to be designated by the Secretary of Commerce, shall be satisfied that the muster list has been prepared for the vessel. It shall be posted in several parts of the vessel, and in particular in the crew's quarters.

MUSTER LIST.

The muster list shall assign duties to the different members of the crew in connection with—

(a) The closing of the water-tight doors, valves, etc.

(b) The equipment of the boats and rafts generally.

(c) The launching of the boats attached to davits.

(d) The general preparation of the other boats and the pontoon rafts.

(e) The muster of the passengers.

(f) The extinction of fire.

The muster list shall assign to the members of the stewards' department their several duties in relation to the passengers at a time of emergency. These duties shall include—

(a) Warning the passengers.

(b) Seeing that they are dressed and have put on their life jackets in a proper manner.

(c) Assembling the passengers.

(d) Keeping order in the passages and on the stairways, and, generally, controlling the movements of the passengers.

The muster list shall specify definite alarm signals for calling all the crew to the boat and fire stations, and shall give full particulars of these signals.

MUSTERS AND DRILLS.

Musters of the crews at their boat and fire stations, followed by boat and fire drills, respectively, shall be held at least once a week, either in port or at sea. An entry shall be made in the official log book of these drills, or of the reasons why they could not be held.

Different groups of boats shall be used in turn at successive boat drills. The drills and inspections shall be so arranged that the crew thoroughly understand and are practiced in the duties they have to perform, and that all the boats and pontoon rafts on the ship with the gear appertaining to them are always ready for immediate use.

LIFE JACKETS AND LIFE BUOYS.

A life jacket of an approved type, or other appliance of equal buoyancy and capable of being fitted on the body, shall be carried for every person on board, and, in addition, a sufficient number of life jackets, or other equivalent appliances, suitable for children.

First. A life jacket shall satisfy the following conditions:

(a) It shall be of approved material and construction.

(b) It shall be capable of supporting in fresh water for 24 hours 15 pounds avoirdupois of iron.

Life jackets the buoyancy of which depends on air compartments are prohibited.

Second. A life buoy shall satisfy the following conditions:

(a) It shall be of solid cork or any other equivalent material.

(b) It shall be capable of supporting in fresh water for 24 hours at least 31 pounds avoirdupois of iron.

Life buoys filled with rushes, cork shavings, or granulated cork, or any other loose granulated material, or whose buoyancy depends upon air compartments which require to be inflated, are prohibited.

Third. The minimum number of life buoys with which vessels are to be provided is fixed as follows:

Length of the vessel under 400 feet, minimum number of buoys, 12; length of the vessel, 400 and under 600 feet, minimum number of buoys, 18; length of the vessel, 600 and under 800 feet, minimum number of buoys, 24; length of the vessel, 800 feet and over, minimum number of buoys, 30.

Fourth. All the buoys shall be fitted with beckets securely seized. At least one buoy on each side shall be fitted with a life line of at least 15 fathoms in length. The number of luminous buoys shall not be less than one-half of the total number of life buoys, and in no case less than 6. The lights shall be efficient self-igniting lights which can not be extinguished in water, and they shall be kept near the buoys to which they belong, with the necessary means of attachment.

Fifth. All the life buoys and life jackets shall be so placed as to be readily accessible to the persons on board; their position shall be plainly indicated so as to be known to the persons concerned.

The life buoys shall always be capable of being rapidly cast loose, and shall not be permanently secured in any way. The owner of any vessel who neglects or refuses to provide and equip his vessel with such lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, line-carrying projectiles, and the means of propelling them, drags, pumps, or other appliances, as are required under the provisions of this section, or under the regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, authorized by and made pursuant hereto, shall be fined not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, and every master of a vessel who shall fail to comply with the requirements of this section, and the regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, authorized by and made pursuant hereto, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $50, nor more than $500. Section 4489 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

SEC. 15. That the owner, agent, or master of every barge which while in tow through the open sea has sustained or caused any accident, shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of sections 10, 11, 12, and 13 of chapter 344 of the Statutes at Large, approved June 20, 1874, and the reports therein prescribed shall be transmitted by collectors of customs to the Secretary of Commerce, who shall transmit annually to Congress a summary of such reports during the previous fiscal year, together with a brief statement of the action of the department in respect to such accidents.

SEC. 16. That in the judgment of Congress articles in treaties and conventions of the United States, in so far as they provide for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of the United States in foreign countries, and for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and the Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment and any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act, ought to be terminated, and to this end the President be, and he is hereby, requested and directed, within 90 days after the passage of this act, to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, that so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign Governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions.

SEC. 17. That upon the expiration after notice of the periods required, respectively, by said treaties and conventions and of one year in the case of the independent State of the Kongo, so much as hereinbefore described in each and every one of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and to be of no force and effect, and thereupon section 5280 and so much of section 4081 of the Revised Statutes as relates to the arrest or imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment, shall be, and is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 18. That this act shall take effect, as to all vessels of the United States, 8 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except that such parts hereof as are in conflict with articles of any treaty or convention with any foreign nation shall take effect as regards the vessels of such foreign nation on the expiration of the period fixed in the notice of abrogation of the said articles as provided in section 16 of this act.

SEC. 19. That section 16 of the act approved December 21, 1898, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," be amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, and under such regulations as he may prescribe, if any seaman incapacitated from service by injury or illness is on board a vessel so situated that a prompt discharge requiring the personal appearance of the master of the vessel before an American consul or consular agent is impracticable, such seaman may be sent to a consul or consular agent, who shall care for him and defray the cost of his maintenance and transportation, as provided in this paragraph."

SEC. 20. That in any suit to recover damages for any injury sustained on board vessel or in its service seamen having command shall not be held to be fellow servants with those under their authority.

And the House agree to the same.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following act:

S. 5629. An act for the relief of certain persons who made entry under the provisions of section 6, act of May 29, 1908.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20415) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the appeal taken by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] from the ruling of the Chair on the last clause of the amendment to the bill, on page 66. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Gronna	Nelson	Smoot
Brady	Hardwick	Newlands	Sterling
Brandegee	Hollis	Norris	Stone
Bryan	James	O'Gorman	Swanson
Burleigh	Johnson	Page	Thomas
Burton	Jones	Perkins	Tillman
Catron	Kern	Pittman	Townsend
Chamberlain	La Follette	Pomerene	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Robinson	Walsh
Culberson	Lodge	Shafroth	Warren
Dillingham	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
du Pont	McLean	Shields	White
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Works
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.

Mr. BRADY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BORAH] is detained from the Senate to-day on account of illness.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] on account of illness; and I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] for the same reason.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] on account of serious illness in his family. This announcement may stand for the day.

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on account of illness. He is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. This announcement also may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on the appeal of the Senator from Connecticut from the decision of the Chair on the point of order that the last clause of the amendment on page 66 is general legislation, the Chair having decided that it was not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to say in advance that when I took the appeal from the ruling of the Chair last evening I was in no sense hostile to the provision of the bill upon which the ruling had been made. Personally I care nothing whatever whether 8,000 copies of this report are printed or not. It is simply a question of principle with me; and, inasmuch as the Chair had ruled that it was not legislation I did not like that to stand as a precedent, because it would justify what I think is clearly legislation upon an appropriation bill, which is obnoxious to the rule.

I will be very brief. We are all familiar with the rule, which provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

This is a general appropriation bill and nothing else. It is supposed to appropriate the moneys for the Agricultural Department and to provide how the moneys shall be used.

This amendment, on page 66, from line 1 to line 20, inclusive, was divided into two parts at the request of a Senator, and the Chair announced that the first part of the amendment, from line 1 down to and after the word "Agriculture," in line 16, in his opinion, was clearly general legislation and would be subject to a point of order; but that after the word "Agriculture," in line 16 and down to the end of line 20, the provision was not legislation. It seems to me there can not possibly be any distinction between those two parts. The first part of the amendment commences:

That hereafter there be prepared by the Department—

That looks to the contemplation of a law which shall stand forever hereafter until repealed, while the whole force and effect of the appropriation bill expires with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. If that be correct, it is equally correct that, on line 16, it starts right off and says:

And that there be printed annually 8,000 copies of said report—

The word "annually," applied to the future, is equally continuous and operates to make a law which shall be in effect long after the effect of this appropriation bill and the money appropriated under it shall have expired. It seems to me to be a clear case of general legislation to provide that 8,000 copies of a report shall be printed each year hereafter. I thought it was a clear case of general legislation, and so made the point of order; but, as I have said, I have no other interest in it, except that, if the ruling be wrong, it should not stand as a precedent to justify other legislation upon appropriation bills. However, if the Senate think that it is not legislation and that the ruling was correct, of course they may vote to sustain the ruling of the Chair, and personally I do not care which they do.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I made the ruling as the occupant of the chair when the question arose. As I understand, this is an appropriation to print a specific report. The only thing that could possibly make the amendment subject to the point of order was the word "annually" in it; but I do not think it is general legislation under that term, as it is usually employed. The appropriation is for a specific item, one specific proposal. The first part of it had been adopted under the rules of the Senate. A new item of appropriation recommended by the direction of a standing committee of the Senate is in order, and my impression was that, if the first part of the provision was adopted, the second part was an item of appropriation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, just a word——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator desire to debate this appeal?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Rule XVI, which he invoked, provides:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is not the rule to which I referred. That is one rule, but not the one under which I made my point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. At any rate, I want to call attention to that rule, and also to point out to the Senator that the existing law provides—

That there be printed 8,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Office of Experiment Stations, prepared under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

That is the existing law. This provision does not change that law; it does not enact any general legislation; it simply transfers from the report of the Director of the Office of Experiment Stations certain items that have been provided for by the law with reference to the State-relations service. It is the same report for the same service, only under another name; that is all. The other name has been created by a recent act, but it is the identical report provided for in the existing law to which I have just referred—Thirty-third Statutes at Large, 590, passed April 27, 1904. That law provides that 8,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Office of Experiment Stations shall be printed. This item provides for 8,000 copies of the same report for the same service, only a new name is given it under the recent act; that is all. I move to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold the motion, so as to allow me to reply to the point he has just raised.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will if the Senator so desires.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the point of order is not that this amendment changes existing law. That would be a point of order in the House of Representatives, but is not known under the rules of the Senate. The point of order is that it is general legislation. It is no less legislation on an appropriation bill because we have changed the name of some service. The point of order is made under clause 3, of Rule XVI, which says:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

This is clearly general legislation. General legislation does not mean, in my opinion, that it must be anything more than legislation. An appropriation bill is a legislative measure. In order to become a law it has to be signed; and anything that is legislation on an appropriation bill is general legislation and contravenes, in my opinion, the rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I renew my motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it—the ayes have it; and the appeal is laid on the table. If there be no further objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment found on page 82, beginning on line 19.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was read last night. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 10, to insert:

The north half of the south half of section 19, township 2 north, range 11 west, Indian meridian, Oklahoma, formerly a part of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation, is hereby set aside for use of the Department of Agriculture for experimental purposes; and the sum of $200 is hereby appropriated to pay the Indians therefor, which sum shall be placed on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the fund "Interest on Apache, Kiowa, and Comanche 4 per cent fund (benefits)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 21, after the word "Agriculture," to strike out "$22,627,716" and insert "$23,193,817," so as to make the clause read:

Total carried by this bill for the Department of Agriculture, $23,193,817.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendments passed over.

The SECRETARY. The first committee amendment in the bill passed over is on page 12, in the item "For all necessary expenses for the eradication of southern cattle ticks," where the committee proposes to strike out "$398,800" and in lieu of that sum to insert "$498,800."

The VICE PRESIDENT. This amendment was passed over on the suggestion of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this amendment went over on the urgent request of the junior Senator from Massachusetts, who was in the Chamber just a moment ago, and has stepped out. I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed over until his return to the Chamber, which will be very soon.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next committee amendment passed over is on page 19, line 25, relative to the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production. In the total the committee proposes to strike out "$139,505" and to insert "$142,005."

The VICE PRESIDENT. This amendment was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. In that case, Mr. President, I offered an amendment of $2,500, intended to cover the experimental station that has been started at Waterville, in the semiarid section of our State.

Mr. FLETCHER. What line is that?

Mr. JONES. Line 25, page 19. I see that the committee has increased the amount by just the amount of my amendment. I wanted to understand, if I could, whether it was intended to cover the feature of my amendment by that increase.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will state that the amount of the increase reported by the committee corresponds to the amount involved in the amendment of the Senator from Washington, and as the amount corresponds, I assume it was for the reason which he indicates. I can not answer with absolute certainty, because there are so many of these amendments; but that is my impression, and the department has expressed an interest in the work proposed to be conducted under this item.

Mr. JONES. That is satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee passed over is on page 23, at the instance of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds. The Senate committee proposes to strike out all that item on page 23, beginning with line 2, down to and including line 15 on page 25.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I trust that that amendment may not prevail. I believe the distribution of seeds and plants by the department has been of great service and of great value to this country, and I should look upon it as being a calamity if that habit should cease. I know it would meet with disapprobation by 90 per cent, I believe, of the people of this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have heretofore contended that this seed distribution was of value to the country. The appropriation is not very large; and while it has been the habit in certain quarters to sneer at it and belittle it, yet, according to my observation, it has been a very desirable thing.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether he is having the experience that I am now having in this matter, of getting a great many letters from schools asking that a considerable quantity of seeds be sent to the school to be distributed among the children, in order that they may be encouraged to plant the garden and to cultivate the soil, and in that way become interested in this matter. I ask the Senator whether he is in receipt of letters of that sort?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will respond that my experience in that direction has been very like that of the Senator from New Hampshire. Two years ago, when I first came here, I felt that that was a fit and proper field for the distribution of seeds. I started in my own home town, and with results that to me were remarkable, and much comment was made in the State papers upon the satisfactory results. Since that time I have received letters from the principals of various schools, not only in my own State but over in New York State, urging that I send them seeds and stating that they were endeavoring to inculcate the habit of culture of plants and seeds with their scholars, with most beneficent results. But in a larger field I know the habit has been to sneer at seeds and say that it is the opportunity for Congressmen and Senators to make themselves "solid" with their constituency. I have listened to that for many years. Twenty-odd years ago I received a package containing about a quart of wheat. We were afflicted with that which is known as rust in wheat in our section of the State to such a degree that it became most alarming. The rust would attack the straw just beneath the head and the grain and head would shrivel, to the detriment of the crop. I planted this quart of seed in a choice little bit of ground in drills, and ultimately continued to replant and replant its production until I planted an area of over 20 acres. The result was the development of a class of wheat that I spread as seed all over my section of the State. This was about 22 years ago, and was the means of introducing and inducting a new class of wheat that was a positive benefit in the increase of the quantity, and at the same time it was utterly free from the attacks of rust and blight.

I cite that instance as being one of the evidences of the great benefit that came to me from the distribution of seed. It was a foreign seed that had been brought here. I have communications innumerable from very many of my constituents that attest the value of garden plants and floral display as being a thing of beauty and a joy forever. I do not look at this as being merely æsthetic, but I think there is something of real value in beautiful blooms; and I should view as a matter of calamity and disaster the striking out of this provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this matter has been discussed so often and so elaborately that I am not going to take any of the valuable time of the Senate beyond making a suggestion or two in regard to it.

My observation has been that a great deal of good has come to the people, especially in the villages and rural districts, from the seed distribution of the Government. It has encouraged them to plant their gardens, which otherwise they might not do. It has been said that a farmer can write a letter, and for 5 cents he can get the seeds from some seed establishment; but the farmer does not write the letter. It is quite a task for the average farmer to write a letter, and he neglects to do it. Now, if in addition to that a custom is being developed whereby the schools and churches and Sabbath schools are becoming interested in this matter and calling for seeds to encourage the children to plant the gardens, it seems to me it is a very desirable thing.

In this very morning's mail I received two letters from principals of schools, and one letter from a clergyman, asking for a quantity of seed to be distributed among the children. I really feel that this is not a very large contribution to the agricultural interests of the country, and especially to encourage the children to become interested in this matter, and I hope the amendment of the committee will not prevail.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there is another feature of this seed distribution to which I wish to call attention, and that is that connected with it for several years there has been an endeavor on the part of the Agricultural Department to promote, as far as possible, the cultivation of our arid lands that are not susceptible to irrigation; in other words, the dry-farming process. The Department of Agriculture has been busily and profitably engaged in experimenting with the finding the sort of seed, grass and otherwise, that is best adapted for farming where there is no irrigation and not sufficient rainfall for the ordinary crops. My experience has been, both from observation and from information, that this part of the distribution has been remarkably beneficial in that respect.

It is said by some that the old system of distributing seeds amounted to nothing, and that it was taken as a matter of course, and the farmers took no interest in it. That has not been my experience. Within the last two months I have received more than 2,000 letters from farmers in my part of the country in regard to this seed distribution. They are particularly anxious to get those seeds, both garden and field, that can be well grown, due regard being had to the climate and the soil in their particular localities. The reports from those localities have indicated that this is money well expended if any money at all in the Agricultural appropriation bill is well expended.

I hope the amendment proposed by the committee will be rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word on this subject. We are expending many hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of farm-extension work and to give information in the matter of the production of all kinds of farm products. I know no better way to carry on anything of that character and to secure the right spirit and energy back of it than to get the children of the country interested in it. Most of the letters I am receiving from my own State relative to these seeds are from school children, my State being wholly agricultural, and great interest is taken in our schools and among the school children themselves in their contests to produce the best character of any vegetable or fruit. I am certain that the seeds which are sent out to those children and to their homes are producing a greater interest in agricultural pursuits, a greater interest in an effort to produce the best possible results from the soil, than anything that has been done.

I sincerely hope that with all the ridicule which has been thrown around the distribution of seeds we will not be taken off our feet and that our judgment will not be thrown to the winds, but that we will continue in doing just what we have been doing in the past, engendering an interest on the part of the young people upon the farms to produce good results from the sowing of seeds that are sent to them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the past I have felt myself like it was a waste of public money in appropriating for the purchase and distribution of seeds and plants. I partook of the same feeling that was quite general throughout the country, that it was unnecessary and no good came from it. But in the last few years I have changed my opinion in this regard, and that opinion has been changed from the results I have seen not only in my own State, but in other States as well. To-day the school children are more interested in the receiving of these seeds and in planting them than ever the farmer was in the past. There is not a Western State a Senator can go in where he will not see the results of the flowers that are planted in the front yards of homes that perhaps would never have had flowers unless the seeds had been sent there.

The school-teachers are taking an interest in it and they are seeing that these seeds are placed in the hands of children who will take an interest in planting them. I may say that in the last month I have sent at least 5,000 packages of seeds to school children in my own State. I received letters from them from all parts of the State requesting that they be sent these seeds; and not only that, Mr. President, I have received from last year's distribution thousands of letters acknowledging them and giving the results of the planting. It is doing an immense amount of good.

This appropriation of $252,540 is a mere bagatelle compared with the good that it is accomplishing in the different States, particularly in inspiring young men and young women in the schools to plant them and attend to them and enjoy the results that come from them.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the committee and the plans we have had in the past of distributing these seeds will continue. I know that many people who used to scoff at the idea of the distribution of these seeds, many people who claimed that it was only paying off a political debt and making a Senator or a Representative solid with his constituents, have changed their minds entirely.

I hope and trust, Mr. President, that this amendment striking the provision from the bill will not prevail in the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I feel like indorsing every word that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said upon this subject. I think there has been some criticism of the seed proposition in the past, but I believe that the department was unfortunate in the character of some of the seeds that it had been able to get for distribution, and whatever criticism has come to this proposition has come from that fact, and not because of the distribution of good seeds.

My experience in the distribution of these seeds has been practically a duplicate of what the Senator from Utah has just given to the Senate. I know that great good is coming from it. I know that the people generally are very much interested in the subject, and I think it would be a very great disappointment to the rural people if they did not have these seeds. It is a mere bagatelle, but I am quite sure that if the various expenditures contained in the bill were submitted to a referendum there would be more votes in favor of this proposition than of any other proposition in the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say first, in response to the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], that I think he is under an erroneous impression as to what this item involves. He seemed to be under the impression that it involves a testing and distribution of drought-resistant seed. That item is carried on page 22; and that is a subject of considerable importance.

With respect to the pending amendment, I will say that on two previous occasions, after full and elaborate debate, the Senate solemnly decided to eliminate this seed provision from the Agricultural appropriation bill. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry felt itself bound to respect the expressed sense and will of the Senate on these two previous occasions. Of course the Senate is at liberty to reverse itself at its pleasure.

It may be true that a quarter of a million of dollars is a mere bagatelle. I do not know how many bagatelles it takes to constitute a substantial appropriation. It may be, at least in the judgment of Senators, that the addition of any number of bagatelles results in a bagatelle as the addition of zeros results in zero. I do not know what standard they employ. It seems to be the disposition of some Senators to appropriate money with a degree of liberality in inverse proportion to the amount of money available in the Treasury.

But I have no further concern in this proposition than to justify the action of the Senate committee in showing its deference to the registered will of the Senate on two former occasions.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as the chairman of the committee has said, I do not know how many bagatelles it will take to make a sum, but 10 of these bagatelles make about $2,500,000, and we have appropriated that much for this purpose in the last 10 years.

I have always been opposed to this distribution. I have considered it an absolute waste of the people's money. But I never had any hope of cutting it out. It has been cut out several times, but our friends in another body, especially from certain sections of the country, always insist upon its going back, and it always has gone back.

I think some good has come out of it in the last year or two, and that more good is coming out of it now than ever before, but it is not by virtue of the provisions of the bill or the appropriation at all; it is because of the different methods that are being taken, I think, by Members of Congress and Senators in the distribution of these seeds. The seeds are apparently being distributed more and more to schools throughout the country, and to that extent I approve of it. If we are going to distribute these seeds I think we would get more good by distributing them to the schools than in any other way. If we had a provision in the bill requiring the distribution of the seeds to schools throughout the country, then on the face of it there would be some justification for it; but upon the face of the appropriation it is simply a provision for Senators and Representatives to send out under their frank to whomsoever they please these seeds. The people of the country understand what that is for and what the effect of it has been heretofore.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I do not think I have ever received since I have been in Congress more than 250 personal requests for these seeds from my State. I have received, probably, an equal number of letters from farmers and ordinary citizens denouncing this as a waste of the public money and as a fraud upon the people. I received a letter just a few days ago from some one in my State saying, "I can go to a store and for 5 cents buy all the seeds that are sent out by the Government; I do not want that kind of seed, but I want a certain kind of seed."

What I would like to see would be to have this appropriation provide for rare and valuable seeds, and then the department get rare and valuable seeds and make the distribution of them. I should like to see a provision put into the law that they shall go to schools and educational institutions, so far as requested. Then we would get some real, substantial benefit out of them. But there is not any hope apparently for that. We let the Department of Agriculture buy in the open market from private parties the same seeds that we go to the store and buy for 5 cents a package, and then they hand over 25,000 packages to us and we send them out under our frank and distribute them as we see fit.

I am glad that more of this distribution is going to the schools of the country than heretofore. I will say frankly I distribute those that have come to me in the easiest possible way. I have sent them out in packages of 100 and 150 to the country newspapers throughout the State. Then they have given notice in their columns that certain seeds have come and that those who desire them may get them. That is the way I have distributed them. I have not had time to distribute them one package at a time. I have gotten rid of them just as easily as I could.

But in the last year or two the public schools have been taking up the matter, and instead of sending the seeds out to newspapers I am sending them to public schools. I am trying to get from the county superintendents a list of the schools that they think would use these seeds to the best advantage, and I am sending them out in that way. I think much more good will come from that than from the former way of distributing them. If we have to keep the provision in the bill, and I suppose we will, I hope they will be distributed largely in that way, and then there will some good come from it.

I wish the committee, if we are going to retain this, would provide that the distribution shall come, not through Senators and Representatives but through the Department of Agriculture, and let them handle it, let them take care of it, and let the people of the country know if they want these seeds they can apply to the Secretary of Agriculture; that if a school wants these seeds it shall apply to the Secretary of Agriculture, and he will send them out. Representatives and Senators ought not to have their time taken up, or the time of their secretaries taken up, in sending out these seeds. We ought not to seem to think it will help us a little if they go out under our frank, but let them be distributed through the Department of Agriculture to those who call for them and will make use of them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have hoped ever since I have been in Congress that it might abolish this system of distributing seeds. We are talking about economy, we are looking for some place to economize, and it seems to me that this is a good place to begin.

I believe candidly that a majority of the people who are familiar with this method of seed distribution are opposed to it. To me it is largely a system of political aid to Congressmen. I feel sure that a majority of Congress could be induced to support the proposition for free seeds as it is being followed if it were not for the thought that possibly some political advantage could be obtained for the sender.

The original intention was to distribute rare seeds in localities where the same were not known but where it was thought they might be profitably planted, and I am sure that when that idea was carried out good resulted. But the seed which are now largely distributed are practically the seeds which are bought by the Government in the very locality where Congressmen distribute them, for instance, seeds purchased by the department and which are sent back to that State at Government expense for planting. This is entirely foreign to the original idea.

I am heartily in favor of distribution of new seed. I like the plan that the Secretary of Agriculture has followed of sending out alfalfa seed in packages large enough to test them in the localities where they are not indigenous. This bill provides for that in another section.

I repeat that this is a good time to begin to economize on an item that is not demanded by the people and where no good, as it seems to me, on a large scale can come to the people. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment to strike this provision out.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The trouble is the Senator can find no method by which the people can express themselves in a general way; but if it were submitted to the people, there would be an overwhelming result in favor of retaining this feature rather than abolishing it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I speak from my own correspondence. I have been in the habit, I will say to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], of sending seeds out in bags, as he has. I send them out largely to the schools or to the large manufacturing concerns where they employ a great many men. I send them to the factory superintendent and have him distribute them to the men who have gardens. Now, that, in a way, is a good thing; it saves them from buying a 5-cent package or a 10-cent package of seeds possibly, but I submit it is not the province of the Government to send out seeds or stock or anything else of that kind except as an encouragement to the propagation and use of new and valuable food and forage products.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I think it is a good and proper part of the Government to aid in making a cheaper food supply. I send to a factory. I recall the Taylor Iron Works at Highbridge, N. J. I sent a number of packages of seed to the Taylor Iron Works, and I received the word from Mr. J. Knox Taylor, whom I know very well, telling me that he had made a very liberal distribution of the seeds and that it had induced the clearing up and the planting of back dooryards in vegetables and fruit and inured to the benefit of families to a very remarkable extent. He said, "It astonished me myself to know how much valuable foodstuff can be gotten out of a little garden in the rear that had been long a desolation and waste." So I feel that we have accomplished something in that way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand the Senator's position, but he looks at this question differently from what I do. I do not think it is the business of the Government to clean up any back dooryards and to furnish seed which can be obtained from dealers right there in the local market. The only object that the Government had when it started this plan was to furnish the men in New Jersey and in Michigan seeds that otherwise would not be obtained by them, a new variety of seeds that would develop a new crop.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am very broadly a Democrat, and I do not know but what I am getting to be almost a Socialist. I believe it is the part of the Government to advance the well-being and welfare of the people of the country, and whether they do it with seeds or whether it be by some other process I am not so particular. If you can make cheaper bread and butter and make mankind happier and correspondingly better citizens, then I believe we have advanced the cause of humanity and advanced the cause of our God and advanced and blessed the cause of our country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I thought that the sending out of these seeds would do that I do not know but that I would be induced to support it, but why stop at seeds? Why not send cattle, horses, hogs, sheep, and farm and garden implements?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator has been brought up in a different atmosphere. He has been studying Blackstone. He has been a lawyer——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not enough to hurt me.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been a farmer, and the difference is very wide between the lawyer and the farmer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to address an inquiry to my genial friend from New Jersey, who does not always agree with me——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Not always; but I do most generally.

Mr. GALLINGER. But he sometimes does. We are being told that consumption is rapidly overtaking production in the United States. Can the Senator from New Jersey imagine anything that would do more good to the people of this country than would cultivating the ground that to-day is not used?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No, sir; I can not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Even the little patches in our cities?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Even those little patches; that is the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would tend very largely to solve this problem.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It would solve it very largely; it would tend to induce industry, and, as it is said, "get back to the soil." I am a great believer in that. I do not believe with my friend from North Dakota that we are producing too much; I do not believe we have yet produced enough. I look at the fields in Virginia and in many other parts of the South, also in the New England States and in my own State, and I say we are not half thrifty enough; we are not half industrious enough. If a man is a benefactor who makes two blades of grass to grow where but one grew before, then I desire that the Senate shall be ten times a benefactor by making a thousand blades of grass grow where but one grew before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. I observe that he is not present, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, forgetting that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. May I inquire whether or not he has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I withdraw my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the affirmative). May I inquire if the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY]. If the Senator from Iowa were present, he would vote "yea." I desire this announcement as to the Senator's illness to stand for the day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote, not knowing how that Senator stands on this proposition.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bryan	Lane	Poindexter	Townsend
Burton	Lewis	Ransdell	Weeks
Fall	Lodge	Robinson
Fletcher	Nelson	Root

Crawford	Lee, Md.	Smith, S. C.

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 25, at the end of line 16, to strike out the sum of "$2,131,825" and to insert "$1,896,995," so as to read:

Total for Bureau of Plant Industry, $1,896,995.

Mr. SMOOT. That amendment should now be disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is disagreed to. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 54, line 19, after the word "marten," to strike out the sum "$110,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$300,000," so as to read:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry, and for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearings animals, including mink and marten, $300,000.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope the committee amendment will not prevail in this instance. It must strike everyone familiar with this item that, to say the least, the amount is extremely extravagant in view of the other appropriations made in the bill. It should be borne in mind that the amount heretofore appropriated for this purpose has never exceeded $115,000 in any bill of this character; $110,000 is all that the department has asked for this year, and it is the amount fixed by the other House, but it has been increased by the committee $190,000. In comparison with other items in the bill of greater importance, it does seem to me that the amount is extremely extravagant. Conditions in this country at the present time are certainly such as to justify economy in appropriations. If there is any place in the bill where we can resort to a little economy, it is in items of this character.

If you will refer to page 14 of the bill, you will find that for the important subject of the treatment and eradication of hog cholera, by which millions of dollars are lost by the farmers every year through deaths from this disease in all sections of the country, we have only appropriated $375,000; yet for a mere experiment in the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and prairie dogs the Senate committee proposes to increase the amount of the appropriation of $110,000, as allowed by the other House and as asked for by the department, to $300,000. This is an increase of practically 300 per cent, a larger increase than on any other item in this bill. This paragraph has been in this bill for several years, and like similar appropriations has gradually grown from $25,000 to the present enormous proposal of $300,000. The appropriation for five years last past was as follows: 1911, $25,000; 1912, $23,000; 1913, $40,000; 1914, $60,000; and 1915, $115,000.

The largeness of the proposed increase so challenged my attention that I directed a letter to the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain whether there was any necessity for this great increase, and received the following reply:

I have your letter of February 15 regarding the item in the Agricultural appropriation bill * * * for investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, etc., including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, etc. As a result of our experimental work we have already discovered improved methods of combating the prairie-dog and ground-squirrel pests and in field demonstrations on a large scale have proved that these animals can be destroyed over great areas at much lower cost than heretofore thought practicable. On the public lands of California in 1914 we destroyed over 95 per cent of the ground squirrels on 170,000 acres, at an average cost of about 5½ cents per acre. During the same period on areas infested with prairie dogs we destroyed about 95 per cent of these animals on 360,000 acres, at the same average cost. The department has already made excellent progress in its investigations of the best methods of destroying predatory animals, especially wolves and coyotes, which are so destructive to live stock. The prairie-dog campaign has been carried on over parts of Colorado, Utah, and Arizona. Demonstrations for controlling the jack-rabbit pest have been carried on in Oregon, Washington, Nevada, and Idaho. Experiments and demonstrations for controlling wolves and other predacious animals have been inaugurated in Texas, Colorado, Idaho, and Nevada.

The amount carried in the House bill of $110,000 covers the estimate submitted for the work, and the department does not desire to change its recommendations in the matter at this time.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

It does seem to me that when the department which is charged with the expenditure of this money for this purpose is asking only for $110,000, which amount in itself seems sufficient, the Senate ought not to increase the appropriation to such an extravagant figure, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas if it was not shown to the committee that upwards of $15,000,000 worth of animals were being destroyed annually by wolves and coyotes and other predatory animals, and if that was not the reason why this appropriation was increased?

Mr. THOMPSON. There was some statement or some resolution of that character presented; but the Secretary of Agriculture, who has this matter in charge, says that he can get along, do the necessary work, protect the live stock, and prevent injury with $110,000. It does seem to me that that is a sufficient amount.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not a fact that we had before us concurrent resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Oregon, calling attention to the great number of animals that were being killed every year in the Western States by wolves and coyotes and other predatory animals?

Mr. THOMPSON. There were some resolutions of that character it is true; but I believe that the cattle in these States will be just as fully protected with the amount asked by the department as with a larger amount which is evidently not needed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Wyoming, of course, knows more about the matter than I do, and I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I do not intend to enter into any extended argument on this question, but merely to make a statement and to ask the Senate to vote upon that statement of fact.

We have appropriated heretofore $2,500,000 in this Congress toward eradicating the foot-and-mouth disease in cattle. We are now appropriating by this bill $2,500,000 more for the same purpose, making $5,000,000 within a year that we shall expend to eradicate the foot-and-mouth disease in cattle, to prevent the death of cattle and the decrease of our meat supply. If to that $5,000,000 you add $5,000,000 more, which the States contribute—and they pay a sum equal to that appropriated by the General Government—you have $10,000,000. Then, if you add what the owners of cattle will lose—because the Government does not intend, in the States, to pay full value, for if it did it might be taken advantage of—the amount will total from two to five million dollars more. So that we are expending from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 to eradicate the foot-and-mouth disease, to protect those who are growing cattle, and, what is more to the point, to protect the meat supply and consumers who are those most interested.

Now, so far as the foot-and-mouth disease is concerned, the Government is under no specific or special obligation, except that for the best interests of the public and for the protection of a great product it is deemed expedient that the Government should enter this field and do its share of the work. Take the other side of the question: We have now reached the point where it is claimed—and the claim is very well backed up by argument—that we will lose enormously in live stock because of predatory animals, not of course from prairie dogs and animals of that kind, but from wolves and coyotes, and in connection with this loss and in contradistinction to the losses from foot-and-mouth disease, the Government is directly responsible to the greatest degree if it permits such destruction by wolves and other predatory animals to continue. The Government owns and controls over 200,000,000 acres of land carved out and segregated in United States reservations in the various States. Half, or more than half, of the State from which I come, two-thirds of the adjoining States, and from a quarter to three-quarters of some other States are embraced in various national reservations. The Government is maintaining those great areas, which amount to a large section of the United States, and which practically furnish the breeding grounds for wild animals, which come from there out onto the lands of the settlers and destroy their stock. Now, the United States Government pays no taxes to the States or municipalities. The States make liberal appropriations for the extermination of these wild beasts. They make very large appropriations from State funds; the counties make further appropriations, and live-stock associations and individuals contribute large sums for the destruction of these pests; but, meanwhile, they are surrounded by these United States forests, and so we can spend millions of dollars and hardly make a mark in eradicating these animals, since the Government has taken these great areas, has barred all outsiders, and allows such animals to breed.

Everyone who knows anything about forestry and the western country knows that there is the breeding ground for all the predatory animals. Is it fair that the Government should take the larger part of a State and take the money of cattle and sheep men for pasturage there in those reservations and not properly protect that pasturage against a pest which the States and the people around the reserves are engaged in destroying?

The States have made large appropriations for the purpose. For instance, here are the annual appropriations of a few of them: The State of Montana, $178,047 in one year. And, by the way, these figures merely show what the State itself pays; but counties, associations, and individual stock growers also pay large additional amounts. Indeed, associations pay very large amounts for the same purpose. Texas spends $88,930; Oregon, fifty-two thousand and some odd dollars; Utah, over $54,000; and so on down the list of other Western States, some paying much more and some a little less.

The Government in the first appropriations made heretofore has made some progress, but it devotes its attention to the particular localities in which the live stock of its tenants is confined; but here is all the broad area that is not pastured, the mountains and plains, still remaining the breeding ground for these animals; and others do not go in and destroy the animals, so the Government itself should proceed to do so.

It is said that the department has not asked for quite so much money. That is true; and the department, I am glad to say—I support it therein—so far as I have information, confined its estimates to what was allowed in the appropriation bill of the year before. There is always difficulty in getting the first appropriation for even a small amount. There is twice as much said against it; and all that the department says now is that it has made that certain estimate, and it does not add to it.

In the destroying work that has already been carried on for the last five years in those little restricted areas, it is reported that between 35,000 and 36,000 animals have been destroyed. Over 1,000 were the gray and black wolves, and those who know them know how many farm animals they destroy. They do not stop to eat an animal. They simply throw it down, take its blood, and go on and bring down another. I have known one wolf to destroy scores of young stock, calves or sheep, in a night.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, heretofore this appropriation bill has carried an appropriation of this kind providing for experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves. Now, what have they accomplished? What have they shown to be the best method of destroying wolves, or have they made any demonstrations at all?

Mr. WARREN. I have just stated what the result has been as to destroying these animals and as to the experiments. They have performed their own experiments, and are working under them.

Mr. JONES. I do not understand that this appropriation is simply for the purpose of killing wolves. It is for experimenting and demonstrating the best methods of doing it.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, Mr. President, of course that is a technicality that the Senator, if he reads the appropriation, will understand may not have particular place there. It is, in the first instance, for the establishment of a system, and in the next for destroying the wild animals; because, as I say, with a small appropriation and in a restricted area the agents of the department have destroyed up into between thirty and forty thousand.

Mr. JONES. That is the very point I am coming to—that they are doing what the bill does not authorize them to do. We are not providing this appropriation for the purpose of continuing the destruction of wolves. We are providing this appropriation to make demonstrations.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, if he wants to make an argument, I should be glad if he would allow me to finish. I have very little more to say.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is a member of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. I am.

Mr. JONES. Then I want him to give me whatever information the department have given to the committee as to what experiments and demonstrations they have conducted, and whether or not they have demonstrated any special way of destroying wolves.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, would it not be about the best way to ascertain how to do it by doing it?

Mr. JONES. Well, we know how to do it. All the people out there know how to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We do not know how to do it.

Mr. JONES. I will venture to say that the Senator from Arizona can kill a wolf a good deal better than somebody from the Agriculture Department.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; but you have got to kill a thousand a day.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows, and probably has studied, what might be called the organic act of the Department of Agriculture. It is founded on lines a little different from those of the other departments. He knows that all these appropriations for killing cattle—and he will not deny that they are killing them by the thousand—and killing hogs that are diseased—and he will not deny that they are killing them by the thousand—are made in each and every case along the line of an investigation, followed by the destroying of a curse of that kind.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Washington has suggested to the Senator from Arizona that he knew better than the department how to kill a wolf. The great trouble is that he can not apply his knowledge on any of these Government reserves. The Senator is not allowed to go on one of the Government reserves and display his knowledge of how to get rid of these animals.

If the Senator will allow me for just one moment to make a statement along the lines of his statement, in New Mexico, for instance, we have 11,000,000 acres in reserves, and we can not go upon them to demonstrate the knowledge which we gain by experience in killing these animals. We must leave it to the Government. The consequence is, as the Senator has said, that the reserves themselves are the breeding grounds for these animals. The matter has reached such proportions, I may say to the Snator from Kansas, that the State Department of the United States Government has taken up the matter with foreign Governments. The State Department of this Government has taken up this very question of the destruction of predatory animals with the Mexican Government and with the different governors of the northern States of Mexico because so much destruction was being continually caused by the depredations of these animals in the Southwestern States and along the border.

The Senator is absolutely correct. The breeding grounds for the animals are the Government reserves. In New Mexico we are spending $100,000 or $200,000 a year in the attempt to destroy these animals that are breeding and the stock of which is being continually renewed upon the forest reserves, upon which we can not go.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the department can not use this money, or does not wish to use it, the Congress will have done its part if it provides it. That the department officials will find a way, notwithstanding the fact that investigation is included here, of destroying the animals has been demonstrated, because they have destroyed them, and they have destroyed other animals. That is the only way to eradicate. So the matter of money being lost does not enter into it at all.

I do not stand here pleading for any one interest alone. It is, of course, to the interest of the live-stock growers that the Government shall protect those from whom it gets money through leases of forest reserves, and those around them who pay the taxes, while the Government pays none, in the States; but the great final trouble lies in the question of the meat supply of this country, which must be rapidly diminishing, as shown by the increased price. The societies have sent in the most urgent appeals on this subject, and the legislatures the same way. I send to the desk and ask to have the Secretary read senate joint memorial No. 1, adopted by the State of Oregon, on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 1.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America petitioning the United States Government to appropriate $300,000 for suppressing carnivorous wild animals destructive to live stock in the public-land States of the West.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the governor and Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas in the Western States, known as the public-land States, the losses of live stock and poultry, due to the attacks of coyotes, wolves, wildcats, cougars, and bears, amount to not less than $15,000,000 annually; and

Whereas in these western public-land States the State, county, and stockmen do now, and have for years, paid large bounties and used other means to bring about the eradication of these carnivorous animals; and

Whereas in these western public-land States there is now withdrawn from settlement in some form or other approximately 225,000,000 acres of Federal land, which land constitutes the principal breeding ground and refuge of these carnivorous wild animals, and enables them to increase their numbers in spite of the efforts made by the State, county, and stockmen to exterminate them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Oregon does hereby most respectfully urge and request that Congress immediately appropriate the sum of $300,000, to be used by the United States Department of Agriculture for the destruction of coyotes, wolves, wildcats, cougars, and bears in these western public-land States, in order that the meat supply of the Nation may be increased and the proper development of the West encouraged.

Adopted by the house January 13, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 13, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. One word more and I shall have completed my remarks. That corresponds precisely to the information I get from other States, and especially from those interested in this great industry. I submit that it is simply a question whether the Government will do its part in a small way alongside of the settlers in those States, whom they have encouraged to go there and settle upon the public lands and who are paying the taxes and expenses of the State, to which the Government does not have to contribute.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me right at that point, I will say that the Legislature of Arizona also passed a memorial at the last session very much like that, and I think it was presented to the Senate by the Vice President and inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have not it before me; but I would like to say to the Senate, while I am on the floor for a second, that the people of Arizona living on the edges of these forest reserves are losing enormous amounts of property through the depredations of these animals. They have no right, however, to invade these forest reserves in great numbers and protect themselves. It seems to me that it is absolutely incumbent on the part of the Government, as the Senator is arguing, to give relief to these cases.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is all I have to say. I have stated the case, and I state it in the interest of the entire populace of the United States who are interested in the meat supply. It is true that the losses through foot-and-mouth disease extend over the States that do not have forest reserves; but the forest reserves are nearly all in that mountain country which has been known as a range country, and which in the last three or four decades has contributed so largely to the meat supply and the wool supply for clothing, and from which we are bound to draw very heavily. These statements are not exaggerated as to the losses that occur through these wild animals; and the question is whether all the surrounding States shall continue appropriating money to destroy wolves while the Government locks its reserves in, taking the settlers' money for rentals, and deliberately, if not intentionally—and I do not charge that—breeding these wild animals to turn them out upon the balance of the States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. I wanted to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question about this matter.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, a short article in the Country Gentleman referring to exactly what we have had under consideration. I should like to have it inserted without the illustrations, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the insertion in the RECORD of the article referred to by the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE WOLF AT THE STOCKMAN'S DOOR—SHEEP AND CATTLE KILLERS BREED IN THE NATIONAL RESERVES.

[By S. W. McClure.]

Depredations of carnivorous wild animals annually cause a loss of not less than $15,000,000 to stockmen in the territory west of the Missouri River. This was the conclusion reached at the National Wool Growers' Convention in Omaha some years ago, and after 14 years' residence in the section I am satisfied that it is a conservative estimate. It is important to every consumer as well as to every producer of meat that this menace be removed. For 20 years this territory lying west of the Missouri River has been the chief source of the country's supply of sheep and cattle, and if I am right nature has intended this section to be for all time the breeding ground for the Nation's meat.

The States most affected by the wild-animal menace are public-land States in which the Federal Government still retains enormous areas of land—Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Wyoming, Montana, and South Dakota. These States were originally the home of the buffalo, elk, deer, goat, and mountain sheep. Also they were and still are the home of the bear, wolf, coyote, cougar, and wildcat. As they have been settled, the herbivorous wild animals have been greatly reduced in numbers—in some cases exterminated. The carnivorous animals, however, still remain, and some species exist in greater numbers than ever before. Originally the food supply of these carnivorous animals was limited. Now, with the land filled with poultry and domestic animals, the marauders find an abundant food supply, easily obtainable.

In the order of losses they occasion the importance of these carnivorous animals is about as follows: Coyotes, wildcats, bears, cougars, and wolves. Probably the coyote causes the loss of more stock and poultry than all the others combined, not because he is more vicious and daring, but because he exists in greater numbers and finds the new conditions of living in a semisettled country distinctly to his liking. For downright viciousness the wolf exceeds all our native wild animals, but the lands that he most loves to frequent have been largely settled; hence the number of wolves is not so great as formerly.

The coyote is the most stealthy of all our wild animals. Nature endowed him with wonderful cunning, and 50 years of close association with mankind have added to this store of knowledge. He knows about traps, rifles, and poisonous baits; he seems to take pride in circumventing the hunters. In size the coyote is about as large as a collie dog, though probably a little lighter built and a trifle faster; in color he is a dirty yellow range gray, varying somewhat with the season. In habits he is very versatile, living on the flat plain, the rough mountain, or in the timbered valley. His presence depends not so much upon the climate or topography of the country as upon his ability to obtain a supply of food. Settlement tends to exterminate most of the larger wild animals, but not the coyote. Up to a certain limit settlement stimulates his productiveness as long as he has safe ground upon which to breed.

The coyote prefers a diet of meat, yet in its absence he becomes a vegetarian and lives on prunes, peaches, watermelons, and similar foods. If we are to judge by his tastes, however, the coyote greatly prefers young lambs. In the absence of lamb his choice falls upon chickens, calves, pigs, or full-grown sheep. The coyote seldom sleeps; he is abroad by day and night, prowling in search of food, or, if his appetite is satisfied, still prowling with the fixed purpose of killing each defenseless thing within his reach. The toll he takes is always many times greater than his food requirements. Sheepmen believe that they annually lose from 5 to 10 per cent of the total number of their sheep as a result of the depredations of coyotes.

In the States mentioned all sheep and lambs are herded in bands ranging from 1,200 to 2,000 head. During the summer one herder is in charge of each band, and as the sheep spread out over a considerable area it often happens that they are as far as half a mile distant from the herder. Coyotes follow these bands throughout most of the year. In the daytime the coyotes sit on near-by hillsides out of the range of the herder's rifle or hide in clumps of bushes while the sheep spread out to graze. As a lamb or a sheep strays within reach a coyotte will sally forth, and in a moment or two there is one less sheep. During the night, when the sheep are in the bed ground and the herder is sleeping near by, coyotes may rush into the flock, kill a few and scare the rest so that they do not take on flesh for several days. Day in and day out throughout the year this is the program of the coyote in the sheep country. In some sections these marauders take a sheep a day from each band. It sometimes happens that a bunch of fifty or a hundred head becomes separated from the main band. The loss is not discovered until night, and the next day the herder finds most of these sheep dead, the rest maimed and crippled so they will die in a few days.

But the sheepman is not always the greatest sufferer from the coyote. The farmer produces a part of his food supply in the form of poultry and poultry products. Turkeys, ducks, and chickens all stray from the farmhouse into the field, where the wildcat and the coyote take such a heavy toll that the housewife soon gives up the idea of raising poultry. In the aggregate this loss of poultry is enormous. Then the farmers' calves or young pigs give the coyote a change from mutton and lamb, and he frequently avails himself of it.

On the open ranges, where the cattle run at large, a cow will drop away from the rest of the herd to bring forth her young in some isolated spot. After the calf is born the mother hides it in a clump of bushes or in the tall weeds and goes in search of food. Probably one or two coyotes have observed the hiding place from a neighboring hillside, and the moment the mother is at a safe distance the coyotes rush upon the calf.

Next in destructiveness to the coyote comes the wild cat, which is several times larger than the domestic cat. In cunning and shrewdness he falls far short of the coyote. His distribution is not so wide and he is not given to travel. He finds a satisfactory abode in the rocks along some stream or in the mountains, near a supply of lambs or poultry. In spring, when young lambs and pigs are born, he thrives best. Mostly he goes abroad at night, and few buildings for stock or poultry are so well secured that he does not find entrance. In the course of a year wildcats consume a large quantity of small stock and poultry. What it takes to support them would furnish meat for a fair-sized town.

BEARS PREFER BERRIES.

Then there are the bears, and probably as many of these animals as in the old days. Ordinarily bears attack only sheep and hogs, and in years when the berry crop is short they kill thousands of sheep. This year the huckleberry crop was a total failure, and the bears turned to mutton and lamb, with the result that thousands of sheep have been destroyed in the northwestern mountains during the past few months. Most of the bears live in the national forests or on their borders. Early in spring they locate near some lambing camp and live on lambs until the sheepmen move to a new location.

The cougar, or mountain lion, is a vicious carnivorous animal, found only in the mountains or in the broken lands along rivers. Mostly he preys upon elk and deer, but in the summer and fall it is no unusual thing for him to kill sheep, cattle, and colts while they are being pastured on the mountain ranges.

Last in importance now is the wolf. Originally the West was filled with wolves, and in some parts of the Southwest, notably in Texas, there are still many of them. But the wolf does not relish settlement, and the war that has been waged against him in many Western States has greatly reduced his numbers. However, the loss occasioned in Wyoming, Montana, South Dakota, and New Mexico is considerable and falls heavily upon our beef supply, as the wolf prefers beef to any other food. A single wolf can kill outright a cow of almost any age, although attacks are generally confined to cattle under 2 years of age. Frequently wolves travel in bunches of two or three, and kill out of sheer devilishness. The loss to cattlemen from wolves is great in some sections so great that a bounty as high as $100 may be paid for the destruction of a single wolf that has made a reputation as a killer.

Recently I have talked with stockmen of several States about the losses caused by carnivorous wild animals. Here are a few of their statements:

An Oregon sheep breeder said: "We have lost many sheep and lambs in the mountains this year from bears and coyotes. Several years ago Oregon repealed its bounties and the wild animals increased rapidly. After a few years the bounties were again put on, and thousands of coyotes, cougars, and bears have since been killed."

A Washington stockman said: "In July and August of this year I lost $1,000 worth of sheep by wild animals. One of my neighbors has had greater losses. A few days ago my son came across a heifer that had been killed by a cougar."

An Idaho sheepman said: "In my vicinity alone more than 1,000 sheep were killed by bears early this spring. Those sheep were worth $5 a head, so the loss was considerable. Our loss from coyotes alone is about 6 per cent of our flocks."

A southern Montana stockman said: "Our loss of livestock from wild animals is annually between 5 and 8 per cent. Coyotes are the worst offenders."

A Utah stockman said: "My loss of sheep last summer while I was in the national forest was not less than 300 head. Something must be done to destroy the coyotes if we are to remain in the sheep business."

A small Oregon farmer said: "We were away from our farm for one full day. When we returned we found we had been visited by coyotes, and at least 10 chickens had been killed."

The actual destruction of livestock is not the only loss caused by these pests. In a country abounding with wild animals the expenses of handling stock are materially increased. Sheep must constantly be protected, and western flockmasters annually pay for labor about $1 a head for each sheep they own. This labor charge, the highest in the world, could be reduced 50 per cent if the wild-animal menace was removed. Sheep do not do well when they are constantly herded; if they could be turned loose in a pasture they would produce an average of 1 pound more wool apiece and more and better lambs would be obtained.

Is there a single reason for allowing these predatory wild animals to live? Certainly not. They do not perform a solitary service of value to mankind. Even their hides, in most cases, are inferior to the pelts produced by the domestic animals they destroy. The coyote furnishes a hide of inferior quality and any yellow dog produces better fur. In some sections it is believed that the coyote does some good by killing rabbits, which cause considerable injury to young trees. A fence of wire netting is more effective, because the coyote kills few rabbits; he can not catch them unless the snow is very soft or the rabbit is very young.

A continuous war has been waged against these wild animals in all the western stock States, most of which pay bounties for the destruction of the maranders. Counties have also paid bounties, and the stockmen offer liberal rewards. In the aggregate these bounties have amounted to millions of dollars. * * *

* * * * * * *

MONEY IS NECESSARY.

Why have these animals not been eradicated? Simply because the Federal Government has withdrawn from settlement or development millions of acres of land on which carnivorous wild animals breed by the hundreds of thousands and will continue to breed as long as the land is held as at present. Just look at some of the withdrawals in these 12 States: For national forests, 135,602,892 acres; for national parks, 4,435,143 acres; for game preserves, 1,492,928 acres; for national monuments, 1,962,012 acres; for power sites, 1,991,285 acres; for reservoir sites and water reserves, 221,097 acres; unallotted Indian lands, 32,909,108 acres; oil-land withdrawals, 4,228,513 acres; phosphate-land withdrawals, 2,750,294 acres; potash-land withdrawals, 225,989 acres. In addition the Government has withdrawn 41,041,660 acres of land containing coal. These lands are open to agricultural entry, but the entrymen can secure title only to the surface of the land, and up to the present time there have been very few settlers to take advantage of the openings. Here is a total area withdrawn from settlement in 12 States amounting to 226,860,921 acres, upon which carnivorous wild animals are permitted to breed without molestation. Under such conditions is it any wonder that the States and the stockmen have failed in their efforts to exterminate wild animals?

I have not the slightest complaint about these lands being withdrawn; in fact, I am in full accord with a conservation policy that preserves for the present and for the future. However, with the exception of the lands withdrawn for power sites and water reserves, these withdrawn lands are held for the benefit of the entire Nation as much as for the benefit of the States in which they are located. The Nation, therefore, should assume the obligations which the withdrawals impose, at least to the extent of keeping the lands from becoming a menace to the surrounding country. To do this I believe that Congress should at the earliest moment appropriate $100,000 for the use of the Forest Service in destroying carnivorous wild animals within the national forests and $250,000 for the destruction of these animals outside of the forests. The consumers of the country should understand that there can be no appreciable increase in livestock production in the West until the question of the destruction of these predatory wild animals has been definitely settled.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I sympathize very much with the views of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] regarding this amendment. The House made an appropriation of $110,000 for the purpose. The Senate committee has increased it to $300,000, at the same time adding coyotes to the list of animals to be exterminated. I think it is a fair inference, therefore, that the additional $190,000 is designed for the destruction or extermination of coyotes, and that the original appropriation is sufficient for all the other animals enumerated.

Mr. President, why should the Government of the United States appropriate this enormous sum of money at this time for the purpose of investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals, of destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry, for investigations and experiments in connection with the rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten, for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests, and for investigating the diseases of the wild ducks of Utah? All of these things may be important in themselves, and yet all of them directly concern the States where these animals are found and where these investigations are to be made.

Mr. President, every State in the Rocky Mountain region has legislated against predatory animals, and has exerted its efforts largely, and, I think, successfully, toward their extermination. My own State, for example, offers or did pay bounties upon the scalps of certain animals, and the obtaining of which finally assumed some of the proportions of an organized industry. The natural instincts of the hunter are always turned in the direction of these predatory animals. I recall that some time ago a noted hunter of international reputation came to Colorado, and in the course of two weeks killed about 25 bobcats. I recall that some time afterwards, during his campaign for election to the Presidency, I found a score of Democrats over in one of the western counties of the State all of whom were going to vote for him for President of the United States, although he belonged to a different political party, the reason assigned being his ability to kill bobcats.

Mr. President, the attitude of the State with reference to this matter simply demonstrates the exercise of a power properly belonging to it. So far as I am concerned, I look with some apprehension upon the constant tendency of the States in these days not only to shirk their responsibilities, but to do so with alacrity, and insist that the National Government shall exercise functions with which they are properly clothed and which they only should exercise. I have almost reached the point of believing that any right of a State can be easily overthrown or abandoned by an appropriation designed for expenditure within its boundaries.

Just at present our revenues are deficient, Mr. President. Everybody knows that. Senators upon the other side of the Chamber frequently taunt us—and there is good ground for it—with our extravagance of administration, and never tire of reading our platform pledge upon the subject; yet I notice that, generally speaking, they vote for all appropriations with quite as much unanimity, and support them with quite as much earnestness, as they are voted for and supported on this side of the Chamber.

My distinguished friend the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] always believes in economy when it is wise or politic to criticize Democratic extravagance, but I have not yet noticed that his vote has been cast in favor of the elimination of a single appropriation which makes for economy.

I am aware, Mr. President, of the fact that the forest reserves have eliminated a large amount of territory in the Western States from the jurisdiction of the State governments and that they are supervised, superintended, controlled, inspected, examined, dissected, and guarded by a large army of Government employees at the expense of the Public Treasury. We have just appropriated, or will appropriate in this bill, over five and a half million dollars for the care of our forest reserves. If it is true, as here asserted, that they have become safety places for the predatory animals of the region, which can not be attacked or exterminated by the State authorities, it is very easy to provide in the bill that the forest rangers and the inspectors and supervisors and assistant supervisors and deputy assistant supervisors and deputy inspectors and the other members and attachés of that army of employees who bask in the sunshine of the civil service be required to devote a part of their valuable time in exterminating these animals.

Mr. President, you will notice that of this sum of $300,000, $15,000 is to be used for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests and other public lands. Why can they not be destroyed; why should they not be destroyed without this extra appropriation, all of which means additional agents and representatives of the Government to carry out this work? If this bill passes, we will have a superintendent of coyote destruction and a supervisor of prairie dogs and a bureau of investigation on fur-bearing animals, together with assistants, deputy assistants, and stenographers, with the result that this $300,000 will be expended in the making of investigations accompanied by voluminous reports that will be laid upon our desks at the next session, but which none of us will ever read. It is merely the extension, Mr. President, of office holding and the results will be practically negligible.

It may be that there is an increase in the number of predatory animals out in the public-land States, in spite of State activities. I am obliged to take the word of others for that; but if it be true, then $300,000 is not sufficient for the purpose. And if it be true, then the efforts of the last 25 or 30 or 40 years of the State governments in their work of extermination of these animals goes for nothing.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator expect that those States can be entirely successful when they are surrounded by these great forest reserves, which are continually breeding wolves and coyotes and turning them loose?

Mr. THOMAS. I have just stated that we ought to find something for these forest inspectors and rangers, and so forth, to do. Let us charge them with the duty either of expelling or exterminating these predatory animals that are said now to find a refuge and a haven of safety within the borders of the forest reserves.

If it be true—and I suppose there is some basis for it—that the exclusion from State jurisdiction of these large areas of territory tends to the propagation of predatory wild animals and consequently to the increase of depredations and destructive acts by those animals, there is of course placed upon the country a corresponding duty to bear its share of the burden; but it will not do it by the mere appropriation of $300,000 to be expended under the direction of the Department of Agriculture. We can get at it through the Forest Service if it is good for anything. We can require them to do it and then we can determine by the result whether they are or are not good for anything.

I think, Mr. President, under the circumstances the addition of $190,000 in this item should not at this time be made. I very much question whether the sum of $110,000 is not, under the circumstances, extravagant. I hope the committee amendment therefore will not be agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this is an appropriation for the purpose, among other things, of making experiments and demonstrations in the work of destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other wild animals injurious to agriculture and animal industry. It is intended to aid in the extermination of those pests which make great inroads upon the farmers' flocks and herds in the great West, and often, too, in other sections of the country. The amendment is to increase the appropriation for those purposes from $110,000 to $300,000.

I do not believe there is an appropriation provided for in this bill which is more worthy and meritorious or more founded on reason than this item and this increase of the amount appropriated over the amount estimated by the Agricultural Department. I believe that this appropriation and the increase recommended has substantial merit back of it, which should appeal to Members of this body and to the people of the whole country—to the entire United States. I am sorry to see Senators on this side from great agricultural and stock-raising States oppose this increase, not that I think it will be especially beneficial in any discriminatory way to their States or to the West or to any particular part of the country, for I believe here is an appropriation that is beneficial not alone to any one section of the country, not to any one class of people, but to the whole country and to all the people.

My esteemed friend, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], as is usual with anything he does not like, turns his well-known and well-trained powers of sarcasm and ridicule against this item, and we all know he is an expert with that weapon of argument. But I wish to call attention to the fact that sarcasm, ridicule, and derision may be turned upon a good thing just as strongly as upon a bad one, and sarcasm and ridicule neither prove nor disprove anything. Neither goes to the fact nor the merit of any matter. It has been said that ridicule is the only weapon with which you can fight truth, and I believe it is generally availed of when there is no other weapon which may be used in a controversy.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. My experience is that it falls harmless when directed against an appropriation.

Mr. MYERS. I hope this will prove no exception to the Senator's experience, because I believe there is great merit in this appropriation.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], for whom I have the very highest esteem for his ability and sincerity, seems to have a nightmare of fear that this Government is going to put on a vast army of officials and employees every time a new appropriation is brought before this body. I do not believe there is anything in the fear that we are going to have more officials and employees in this country than private citizens, although that seems to be the Senator's fear.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the fear is pretty well founded. I recall that a few days ago a Senator, referring to this subject, said that office seeking and office holding had become an organized industry of constantly increasing dimensions in his State, a statement which is confirmed by my own experience in other parts of the Union.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Colorado is one of them, and I think ought to be glad to see his own kind increased.

There is, seriously speaking, nothing in this item, neither in the original appropriation nor in the proposed increase, that provides for any inspectors or clerks or bureau officers or any increase of officials or employees whatever. I do not believe that is contemplated. I do not believe there is any reason to apprehend that it will require any more than are now required to administer the expenditure of this fund.

I regard this as a most serious and important matter. I believe that one of the greatest benefits which can be conferred upon the people of the United States is to reduce or at least to keep down the ever-increasing price of meat. The price of meat to the consumer in this country has become a serious matter. The time has come when meat is almost beyond the reach of the ordinary laboring man in this country at the price at which it is retailed. If a man has to go to butcher shops and markets to buy it, the price of meat as a daily article of consumption is far beyond the means of a great many working people in this country. Indeed it may be classed with jewelry in price but not in need. The price of meat, indeed, has become a serious matter with thousands and millions of people in the ordinary walks of life, among the middle classes, fairly well-to-do people, who are earning a modest living; and I say if the Congress of the United States by any legislation or by making a small appropriation or by increasing an appropriation can do anything to keep down the price of meat, it will confer a boon upon the people of this country that can not and will not be surpassed by anything else that Congress may do.

Manifestly the greater the number of live stock in the country the less the price of meat to the consumer ought to be. Manifestly the larger the supply the less ought to be the price, and manifestly the more animals that are saved from destruction the larger is going to be the meat supply of the country, and the more animals that are sacrificed in useless destruction the shorter is going to be the meat supply of the country.

I believe one of the great objects of this country now and from now on should be to increase the meat supply of the country. For many years past the number of cattle in this country has been steadily diminishing and the price of meat has steadily gone onward and upward. I believe one of the most serious duties that confronts this country—not only the Government of the country, but the citizens themselves—is to induce and bring about a larger meat supply in the country.

I am glad to see from statistics recently given out by the Agricultural Department that last year there were a slight number more of cattle in this country than there were the year before; that there was a slight increase. If we can encourage that increase and cause the increase to continue it is bound to result in good to the people of the country, to the consumers of meat; and in what better way can we encourage it, in what better way can we promote it or bring it about, than by stopping the useless destruction of millions of dollars' worth of live stock in the country every year by predatory animals, by wild beasts? Every calf, every sheep, every head of live stock that is destroyed by one of these animals of prey is simply that much taken away from the people of the country. It is meat destroyed that might be consumed by some workingman, by some citizen, and would go to supply food to the people of the country, to make brain and brawn for our workers. These animals destroy millions of dollars' worth of live stock every year. Is it not our duty, is it not a plain and manifest duty, to address ourselves to that subject and stop it, if it may be stopped, and thereby keep the wolf away from the door, as might be suggested?

The results of these experiments by the Agricultural Department, as far as they have been reported, have been substantial and beneficial. If the sum of $110,000 expended in that way has produced good results, I think it is reasonable to believe that a larger appropriation, to a reasonable extent, would accomplish even more good to the people of the country.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] has read here a communication from the Agricultural Department in which the department says that it can get along with the amount of money heretofore appropriated—the sum of $110,000. From my reading of that article, I do not believe it says that a larger amount could not be used with beneficial results. Of course they can get along with $110,000; they could get along without any appropriation and let more calves and sheep be destroyed; but if we believe that $300,000 appropriated for this purpose will result in more good, in saving more animals from destruction and increase the meat supply of the country, then I believe it is our duty to make the appropriation.

I speak not only for the West but for all sections of the country. If this affects the price of meat, it affects every man, woman, and child in the United States. Its benefits will not be confined to the West, but will extend to every section of the country, and especially to the people of the large cities of the country.

It is true that the people in the old States of the North, the East, and the South may not be subject much to the destruction of their live stock by predatory animals, but the effect of this legislation will reach the people in the larger cities of the country—people who do not raise live stock at all—where the greatest consumers of meat are found, as it is retailed over the counters in the butcher shops and markets.

It is not a sectional provision. Its benefits will be felt by all the people of the country. It is not especially for the benefit of stock growers, but is more for the benefit of the great number of people in this country who do not raise live stock but consume meat. It would not be primarily for the benefit of the large stock growers on the plains of the West, but I believe it would apply more directly to the small farmer and live stock grower of the West. The great, extensive live stock grower in the West who runs his thousands of cattle and sheep on the plains can afford to lose a few hundred or a thousand animals.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. The remark made by the Senator a few moments ago concerning other sections of the country inspires the recollection that in the days when the Middle West and South were settled, when the Pacific coast was peopled by that class of immigrants who have made that section one of the greatest and most prosperous of the country, wild animals infested all these regions at that time in numbers and in species greatly beyond that which now exists in our section of the country. We had no Agricultural Department at that time and no Federal Treasury to draw upon for the extermination of those animals. I should like to have the Senator explain how under those circumstances, with a sparse population surrounded by these terrible conditions which he says has resulted in increasing the price of meat, they ever managed to continue the breeding of live stock at all. What has become of those predatory animals which were then quite as fierce and whose depredations were quite as common as they are now?

Mr. MYERS. I do not contend, Mr. President, that the destruction of live stock by these predatory animals is the cause of the high price of meat, but it seems to me that it is manifest that anything which tends to increase the number of live stock in this country tends to lower the price of meat, and anything which tends to decrease the number of live stock in the country must increase the price of meat.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no doubt whatever about that argument; but, Mr. President, the fact is that during the era of this country's development and actual settlement, when the pioneer farmer and miner and business man relied upon his own strong arm and his own resources, without calling upon a Government bureau to aid him, he overcame this difficulty and this danger and removed it. Since that time the Western States have taken it in hand, and, of course, that work has been carried on together with the individual efforts of each man for the protection of his own property. What has come over the spirit of American manhood and energy and resourcefulness in these days, when we are obliged to call upon the Government of the United States for $500,000 to do the thing which our ancestors did for themselves before governmental instrumentalities had been extended to this branch of industrial activity?

Mr. WALSH. If my colleague will yield to me, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado how those distinguished gentlemen, for whom he has spoken with such great reverence, got along without any of the activities of the Agriculture Department? Would not the argument of the Senator signify that we ought to abolish the whole thing?

Mr. THOMAS. It merely signifies that we ought to abolish a great many of the activities, not only of this but of some of the other departments, which go away beyond their legitimate scope. But I do not think that conclusion follows at all. It clearly demonstrates that in those days the people of the country got along very well without so much governmental assistance.

Mr. WALSH. Without any at all from the Agriculture Department.

Mr. THOMAS. And they got along until a few years ago without any at all from the Agriculture Department. Now, the activities of the Agriculture Department in proper directions are not only to be approved but encouraged; but they are misdirected when they are used for appropriations, of which this is not the only one, for this bill and other bills teem with appropriations of many sorts that are really designed to spend the public money in different localities of this country, which depend upon each other for passage. We have here an establishment of the old principle, "You scratch my back and I will scratch yours," which makes the aggregate of these bills so enormous, and which encourages appropriations that otherwise would not be thought of.

Mr. MYERS. The live-stock industry at the time of which the Senator from Colorado speaks so highly did not perish; it survives now, and it would survive without this appropriation. But I think it is evident that it would get along a great deal better with the appropriation than without it. In the days of which the Senator from Colorado speaks there was more live stock per capita to the people of this country than there is to-day. There was more live stock and fewer people than to-day. At present there are more consumers and there is less live stock, which makes of this a very serious question which addresses itself to us.

As I was saying, I do not think this will primarily benefit the large stockmen with extensive ranches in the West. They can lose hundreds of animals just as they lost thousands in the early days. They calculate to lose a certain percentage of their flocks and herds as a part of the profits and a loss of their business. But if we are to increase the number of live stock in this country we must encourage the small farmer to go into the business of farming in Montana and Colorado and all the Western States—men who can conveniently keep on hand half a dozen or a dozen or a couple of dozen head of cattle and who can incidentally keep a few sheep. Those are the men to whom the depredations of wild animals mean something. Wolves and coyotes come in the night; they come down from the mountains and kill two or three or half a dozen of their domestic animals. If the wild animals do that once or twice or thrice during a season, these people will quit raising or keeping live stock; they will become discouraged; they can not afford to stand such losses; and they are the ones whom we must encourage. The great live-stock baron of the West is passing away; the vast free ranges are disappearing; the public domain is being rapidly settled and fenced. It is to the small farmer and stock grower we must look for our future meat supply, and working people must eat meat to keep strong and well.

If we are to have an adequate meat supply in this country and keep down the price of meat, it is to the great West that we must look for that supply. Of course, the people of the old States, in the East and South, may raise enough for their own local consumption, but to supply the markets of the great cities of the country we must look to the country west of the Missouri River and to Texas in which to find that supply.

As far as extravagance or waste is concerned, I am opposed to that as much as anybody can be, but that does not frighten me in the face of duty. I believe in looking into the merits of each proposed appropriation, and if the expenditure of money is needed, if it would be beneficial, if it would result in a great saving to the people of the country, if it would result in benefit to the people for whom it is expended—if the expenditure of $300,000 may be the means of saving many hundreds of thousands of dollars or saving millions of dollars to the people of this country, if it is to be well spent, if there is need for it, if there is good reason to spend it, and if it comes back to us manyfold—I say then the money is not wasted, it is not misspent, and it is not extravagance. I believe such items are the last which should be attacked in appropriation bills for the purpose of keeping down the maximum appropriation of which we hear much and which we should ever keep well in mind.

The expenditure of this money, I believe, is needed. It has been prayed for by western legislatures. Western States are supplementing it. Montana is doing her part by expending in one year the sum of $178,000 for this same purpose; and if Montana can expend $178,000 for this purpose and if other Western States do likewise, can not the Federal Government, in the interest of the whole people, afford to contribute the sum of $300,000 to that purpose? To my mind it would not be wasteful, it would not be extravagant, and I believe it ought to be appropriated. I believe the increase ought to be made. I believe there is good ground for it, and I hope it will be made. It will be money well expended. It will furnish meat to hungry mouths. By it we can feed the hungry. Let no child go hungry for meat if we can help it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I sympathize a good deal with the position taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] respecting the tendency of the present time to aid States by the appropriation of money in carrying on their affairs. There is just one thing that appeals to me in favor of this appropriation, and that is the fact mentioned by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that the Government owns millions of acres of land, most of it wild land, within the States that are untaxable. I think the injustice of that condition of things ought to appeal to every Senator. Just now we are proposing by legislation that is pending before this Senate to perpetuate that condition of affairs by absolutely withdrawing these lands from sale, legislation that will prevent the passing of the title into the hands of private owners or the States themselves and make them perpetually nontaxable by a leasing system that is proposed, which will retain the title in the Government and thereby prevent the taxing of the lands by the States. This condition of affairs, it seems to me, imposes some obligation on the part of the Government to protect the owners of domestic animals from the ravages of wild animals that are propagated and find their habitat on these lands owned by the Government. How far that obligation should extend may be a matter of question. The appropriation here is not a very large one. I know that practically all of the Western States are expending money for the purpose that is intended to be met by this appropriation. It seems to me to be an act of justice on the part of the Government to bear its share of the losses that may result, or to endeavor on its behalf to prevent such losses by some appropriation of this kind for the reasons that I have stated.

If these lands were in the hands of private individuals, if they were taxable, if the Government itself was not the owner of a large portion of the lands within the Western States, then I should be opposed to this sort of appropriation. I look with a good deal of apprehension upon the tendency of the present time to make this a paternal Government. The people of this country have come to look to the National Government for help upon all occasions where the expenditure of money seems to be necessary for the purpose of their protection. I think that is an unfortunate condition of things. It takes away the independence and the initiative of the private citizen; it teaches him to lean upon the Government for help when he should help himself. It is a condition that I think should be corrected, but the tendency, I am sorry to say, Mr. President, at the present time is the other way. We are increasing rather than diminishing these appropriations. We are reaching out in all directions in our efforts to help men who should help themselves and be independent, and, generally speaking, I am opposed to this kind of legislation. It is only for the reason that I have suggested that there seems to be an obligation resting upon the Government that I should be in favor of any legislation of this kind.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I would not feel justified in saying a word in addition to what has been offered in this discussion were it not for the fact that the State which I have the honor in part to represent is spending annually two-thirds as much as the appropriation asked here for the extermination of predatory carniverous animals.

Mr. President, this appropriation does not stand on the narrow basis, if there be any basis at all, upon which many appropriations in this bill stand. Even the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] freely admits that, in view of the conditions that exist, an obligation does rest upon the National Government to contribute something toward the extermination of these animals that find their breeding places upon the forest reserves that are maintained by the National Government and which are maintained for a national purpose. Those forest reserves are not maintained for the exclusive benefit of the people who live within the States wherein they are found.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. If I remember correctly, my suggestion was that the large force of men engaged in the work of looking after these reserves should be required, among other things, to exterminate these animals, as far as possible, that find their refuge upon these large forest reserves.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct; that is to say, the Senator admits that the obligation, to some extent, at least, rests upon the National Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Not to the extent of making an appropriation to employ a whole lot of other people in addition to do something that should be done by them.

Mr. WALSH. I want to call special attention to the fact that admission is made that obligation rests upon the National Government to take care of this matter to some extent. The Senator from Colorado proposes simply that it be taken care of by adding to the duties of the present force, without an additional appropriation. As a matter of course, that is a very convenient way to dispose of this matter; but presumably every man who is now in the Forestry Service is doing something; presumably he has something to do. Is the Senator from Colorado able to tell us, from any knowledge about the matter, originating from any official source, that it will be possible to utilize the present force of the Forestry Service for this purpose? I feel like the Senator does, that there are a great many of these men; I oftentimes wonder what they do, as does the Senator; but I am not yet prepared to say, Mr. President, that they can be employed for this purpose.

Mr. President, I want to speak in that connection in answer to an inquiry addressed to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. What character of experimentation, the Senator asked, would be done under this appropriation? Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that the State of Montana expends almost $200,000 annually to abate this serious menace to the stock interests of our State, the evil continues to grow upon us. We do not perceive that we are making any substantial progress at all toward the alleviation of the heavy burden upon this industry. Some years ago a veterinary surgeon of our State suggested that the inoculation of the wolves and coyotes with the mange would be a very effective way of ridding the State of this pest. That has been extensively pursued. Many coyotes have been caught and have been inoculated with the mange.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WALSH. I trust the Senator will pardon me a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I merely wish to say that the results of that experiment, of that test, nobody can tell anything about except by something in the nature of an exhaustive investigation. It may be demonstrated that that is not a successful method of coping with the evil, but, Mr. President, can it be said that we shall make no progress in this matter at all? Can not science bring some means to aid us in this matter? Must we still resort to the gun, to which our people a hundred years ago resorted, and to no other method of eliminating this trouble?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator suggests that, notwithstanding all the efforts that have been made, the pest continues. That is equally true of other things. We are appropriating money annually to destroy the brown-tailed gypsy moth of New England, which are ravaging our forests. We have not as yet exterminated them; but we have made reasonable progress. That is equally true as to the boll weevil in the South. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that this appropriation is justified by the fact that we should have a much worse condition existing if this appropriation were not made.

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Wolves and coyotes and other predatory animals that have been destroyed as a result of our appropriations doubtless have greatly lessened the destruction that would have ensued had nothing been done. So I, knowing nothing about this matter, except what I read and hear in this discussion, am very warmly in favor of liberal appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad to hear the Senator say so; and the position he takes is undoubtedly correct.

I submit, Mr. President, that we ought to get the benefit of the scientific investigation of this subject so as to determine whether or not there is some method that science can bring to our aid in the elimination of these animals by some other method than the old system of either trapping them or shooting them. As a matter of course, these animals are especially wild. They propagate in this way and increase in number by reason of the fact that they are altogether too shrewd even for the cunning hunter who is trained in their destruction.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Montana that I am very much interested in this item. It reminds me strikingly of the splendid results of the efforts in the South to eradicate the cattle tick, the awful pest we have down there, different, of course, in kind, but very similar, I should say, in degree.

I wish to testify to the wonderful results that have come from the efforts of the National Department of Agriculture in eradicating the cattle tick. It has been completely driven out of a great many thousands of square miles of area, and the cattle industry is rapidly spreading over the South now with every hope of prosperity and success. We could not have done it to have saved our lives without the help of the National Department of Agriculture. It has cost a good deal of money; but let me say, the department had to educate the farmers in these methods of tick eradication. They first found out for themselves how to eradicate the tick, and then they taught the farmers. I have no doubt that better methods can be found for eradicating this awful animal pest which the Senator describes than by merely going out and killing them when you catch them. I am in hearty sympathy with the effort. I think it is very similar to that which has worked so successfully in regard to the eradication of the cattle tick in the South.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the illustration given by the Senator from Louisiana undoubtedly has much force. There is just another idea to which I desire to advert. One of the purposes for which large areas of land were included within the forest reserves—oftentimes, as we have repeatedly complained, of the immense areas that were treeless, that were not properly included within forest reserves at all—one of the purposes avowed for the inclusion in these great areas within forest reserves was to preserve them to homesteaders, who were to be invited, and were by the act invited, to go within such forest reserves and make their homes, to take the areas that were within those forest reserves that were susceptible to tillage, that were capable of cultivation, and appropriate them under the homestead law. We have often felt that that act was not carried out in the spirit in which it was enacted, that the proper encouragement was not given by the Forestry Serv-lce and its officials to homesteaders to go within the limits of the forest reserves and take up these lands. Whatever repression there was, however, Mr. President, great numbers of people have gone within those forest reserves and have taken up their homes there.

Furthermore, Mr. President, everybody recognizes that the great ranges of the West have practically passed away and that the ground that was once occupied by the great cattle kings is being taken by the settler. There were 19,000 homestead entries in my State last year. Every available tract is being taken up by homesteaders; and, Mr. President, every agency of the Government, every agency of the State, every commercial body is organizing in urging him to give up the attempt to make a living by raising grain, and, as speedily as he can, to get a head or two of cattle, to get a few cows and go into the dairy business, to get a few sheep and fatten them and sell the lambs; in other words, to go into stock raising. That is the constant talk to these people.

Mr. President, they are within the forest reserves, they are upon the foothills, on the very margin of the forest reserves; and while, as stated by my colleague, the loss of a cow or of a steer, or of 10 cows or 20 cows, might not be a serious matter to a man with a great herd of 500 head, say, it is utter ruin to the homesteader who has 2 or 3 cows to lose one of them, or even to lose the calf of one of them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, in line with his remarks, might note that wolves are just as destructive of chickens, of pigs, and all of the support that a family has in animal life, as they are of cattle and of sheep.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think that this appropriation has a perfectly sound basis, a better basis than many of the appropriations in the bill, and I think a perfect basis. It affords a perfect ground upon which an appeal can be made to the National Government, and certainly the policy of it addresses itself to us with special and particular force.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has given the only good reason, in my judgment, that has been given for this appropriation under the terms of the provision. This item comes under the title of "Bureau of Biological Survey," and the provision itself reads:

> For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry—

And so forth.

That language does not warrant an appropriation solely for the destroying or killing of animals; yet that has been the basis of practically all the arguments for it that have been presented, until the Senator from Montana suggested that in Montana they have tried an experiment, a special method of destroying the coyotes, which they hoped would be successful. That is all right; that comes under the terms of this appropriation. If it is possible to inaugurate some different and more effective method of destroying these animals, which can then be put into operation by the farmers and settlers and stock raisers, we would be carrying out the purpose of this language, and we would be accomplishing something; but all the arguments, with the exception I have noted, have been based entirely upon the proposition that the Government ought to destroy these animals. There can not be any question or any difference of opinion, so far as that is concerned, as to the desirability of the destruction of the wolves and other predatory animals. There can not be any difference of opinion that we ought to prevent, if we possibly can, the killing by predatory animals of sheep and cattle and hogs and chickens and other valuable animals of the homesteader and settler and of the large owners of stock as well, so far as that is concerned.

The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] seemed to think that some suggestion had been made here that this appropriation was in the interest of the large stock owners. I have heard no one suggest anything of that sort, nor have I heard anyone suggest that the provision was in the interest of any particular section of the country. The purpose of it, of coarse, is to destroy predatory animals, if possible, and to assist in the increase of the supply of cattle and sheep and food animals.

Now, I want to suggest that if you increase this amount to $300,000 you are not going to get anything out of it along the lines that have been argued as desirable. You will be putting this money in the hands of some scientists; and those scientists are to do what? Well, they are to investigate, for one thing, "the food habits of North American birds and mammals." If you give them more than $110,000 without some qualification, they are going to use more money for that purpose. Then they are to use this money "for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten."

Now, you give them more money and they will devote more attention to that branch of the subject. Then there is a proviso in the paragraph, which reads:

> Provided, That of this sum—

That relates to the amount as provided in the House bill of $110,000—

> Provided, That of this sum $15,000 shall be used for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests and other public lands.

That is all the money that they will use on national forests and the public lands for the destruction of animals, and they are going to use that for prairie dogs.

> And provided further, That of this sum not more than $5,000 may be used in investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region of Utah.

They will use that $5,000 for that purpose; they will use the $15,000 for the ground squirrels in the national forests; and then they will use the greater amount of what we give them "for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten," and similar animals; but you are not going to have any destruction of wolves and coyotes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Where does the Senator get his information as to what the department will do with this money, other than what the bill provides for?

Mr. JONES. Oh, Mr. President, I have been down here for 16 years, and, although that is not nearly so long as the Senator from Wyoming has been here, I know a great deal about how the departments work and how they use appropriations; and that is the information upon which I base that statement.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator has no specific information whatever about the matter.

Mr. JONES. Oh, the Senator knows I have not.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I thought.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Would an amendment of this character not meet the objection?—

> Provided further, That not less than $200,000 shall be used for experiments and demonstrations in destroying animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry.

Mr. JONES. Yes; or something like this, which I have written down here:

> And provided also, That $150,000 shall be used in the national forests in destroying predatory animals.

I was going to offer such an amendment as that if the amendment increasing the appropriation to $300,000 should be adopted. The reason I will do that is largely because of the arguments made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. They have based their arguments largely upon the ground that these predatory animals come out of the national forests; that those forests are a sort of harbor of refuge for them; that the lands in the forest reserves are lands of the National Government; that the farmers and homesteaders and settlers can not go onto that territory and kill these animals, but that the animals are allowed to breed and multiply; and while we may kill them off from the outside, as fast as we kill them off they are replenished from this harbor of refuge which the Government maintains. I think there is a good deal of force in that suggestion. I believe that, as a matter of fact, a great many of these predatory animals do come from the forest reserves; they very soon know where they are protected and where they are not; and so they no doubt do multiply very rapidly in the forest reserves.

If we want to meet that situation—and I think we ought to meet it—then let us provide a sum of money and direct it to be used within the limits of the reserves in the destruction of predatory animals. Then we will accomplish something; we will serve some good purpose.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator had better make the amount for that purpose more than $150,000, then.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Wyoming suggests that I ought to make the amount more than $150,000. Under the provision as it passed the House it carried $110,000. No doubt that has already been apportioned by the department for certain purposes. They want that for certain purposes, and they have mapped out the lines along which the appropriation shall be spent next year. You have provided that $15,000 of that amount shall be spent for certain purposes, and that $5,000 shall be spent for certain other purposes. The amendment reported by the committee increases the amount to $300,000, which is an increase of $190,000. I thought we could leave part of that for these general purposes, and so I concluded that it would be well to allot $150,000 of the $190,000 increase for the purpose of destroying predatory animals in the national forests, leaving $40,000 additional for the department to use for the purposes which it has already mapped out. Then, we will accomplish something. We would have $40,000 additional for experiments, such as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has suggested, and which, I think, are very desirable and very valuable if there is any hope of developing any method that is more effective than present methods, by which we can destroy predatory animals.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I appreciate the great force of the Senator's argument, but I think to confine the appropriation simply to the forest reserves would place too much of a limitation on the destruction of these predatory animals. There are edges and wide areas about forest reserves for which some provision should be made in this connection.

Mr. JONES. I only confine a certain part of it to the forest reserves.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Leaving the balance to provide for the extermination of predatory animals anywhere?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have no objection to that. The Senator's amendment will leave the remainder of the appropriation available for use outside the reserves.

Mr. JONES. Perhaps it would be better to have that in the amendment, but I thought probably the word "predatory" would cover those animals. I merely wrote the proposed amendment hurriedly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was afraid the department might construe the provision to mean that it could not kill an animal if it was not on a forest reserve.

There might be a place 20 miles distant from a forest reserve, amongst the rocks, where you could not go except with great difficulty, where there are no trees, and where the predatory animals are more dangerous than they are even in the forest reserves; and the department, unless the provision was made clear, might hold that it could not expend any of the money for the purpose of exterminating such animals.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator's idea should be correct, then the department could not use any of this money for that purpose. I propose to leave the $110,000 to be expended exactly as provided in the bill, and I leave $40,000 of the proposed increase in the amount also to be used just as provided in the paragraph, and then the remainder of the amount may be applied by the department in the extermination of predatory animals on the public lands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator's amendment left the department free to exterminate predatory animals wherever they might be found, I think it would be very wise.

Mr. JONES. My amendment would not change the bill in any respect except to require that $150,000 of the $300,000 shall be used in killing animals in the forest reserves. I leave $40,000 for them to expend anywhere and to be used for any of the purposes specified in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I fully agree with the Senator that some portion of this amount ought to be clearly provided to remedy the evil that now exists in respect to the destruction of cattle and sheep, but I do not think the amount which the Senator has specified is large enough for that purpose. It seems to me that it ought to be $200,000. I believe that this is an appropriation for which evidently there is a great demand. We are apt to think that appropriations relate to insignificant matters unless we have heard something about them; but when we look into them we conclude that they have a great deal of merit.

I want to say that the joint resolution of the State of Oregon, which recites that $15,000,000 worth of live stock are killed every year by wolves and coyotes, is something that, it seems to me, would justify this appropriation. We have appropriated $2,500,000 for the foot-and-mouth disease and we have appropriated large sums of money for other purposes in this bill, and the fact that this appropriation is made necessary because the forest reserves are the breeding places for predatory animals would justify, it seems to me, this appropriation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, what I really want to emphasize is this: If we are to make an additional appropriation, then we ought to provide specifically for the use of a certain amount of it for the purpose that we want served, because if you do not do that you will have a great part of the money used, just as surely as you appropriate it, for experiments with reference to mink, marten, and other fur-bearing animals and investigating the food habits of North American birds; you will not serve the purpose everyone has in mind, which is the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory animals which destroy the valuable animals of the settlers and of those who are trying to furnish a food supply for the people of the country.

Mr. President, the people of my State are spending large sums of money for this purpose. I think the State itself appropriates several thousand dollars for it; then every county in the State, wherever it is desirable at any rate, appropriates money to pay bounties for scalps of wolves and coyotes and similar animals. So I have no doubt that in the aggregate the people of my State are paying many thousands of dollars to accomplish the purpose that is sought by the increase of this appropriation.

I am in favor of appropriating money for the destruction of these animals, but I am not in favor of increasing this appropriation by a large sum of money and leaving it to the discretion of these officials to be used under the general terms of this clause in the bill. Those who want predatory animals destroyed ought to provide for their destruction, and we ought to so frame the law that the money will be used for that very purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Right at that point I should like a little information. Possibly what I may say is more in the line of a suggestion; but, as I understand, the bill as it now reads allows the department to use whatever portion of this appropriation it sees fit in investigating how to kill these animals.

Mr. JONES. Except that it provides that $15,000 shall be used for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests and other public lands, and $5,000 to investigate the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley in Utah.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but what I am getting at is that instead of providing that a certain amount shall be expended for the destruction of the animals, the provision is that it shall be expended in ascertaining how to destroy them.

Mr. JONES. That is it.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is about as sensible as voting a sum of money to determine how you would skin a cat after you got it.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have an idea that if you would appropriate $1 for the pelt and say that all the hunters in the West may go in upon these Government reserves and use $200,000 for that purpose you would have 200,000 pelts, and that would be ten times as many as the department would get hold of in 10 years through its investigations.

It does seem to me that instead of appropriating money to determine how to do a simple thing which everybody knows how to do the better method is simply to provide for the expenditure of a certain amount for doing the thing itself. I do not know but that if they are as plentiful as is suggested here an offer of a bounty of 50 cents per pelt by the Government would exterminate all that would be found upon these Government reserves.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. The Senator has stated much more clearly than I have the very point to which I was calling attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota I wish to assure him that his remedy would be found exceedingly ineffectual. Our State gives a bounty of $10 for every wolfskin and $3 for every coyote skin. The stock associations add to that a further bounty, and private companies engaged in the business add a bounty to that, and after all we do not make much progress. The Senator from North Dakota was not in the Chamber a while ago when I indicated that it would be very much more profitable to spend this money to find out some other way of getting rid of them, inoculating them with mange, or some other scientific process, rather than taking the old means of shooting them or trapping them for the purpose of killing them. In other words, the amendment ought to remain as it is—for experimentation in the process of destroying them, and not for actual destruction.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington further yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to say, in answer to that question, that I moved to the State where I now reside in the early days, when it was practically a wilderness of prairie, when there were a great many wolves and coyotes and animals of that character in the State, and with a very small bounty we were able to exterminate them entirely in the eastern section of the country, and without any very heavy bounty being paid, either; at a very slight cost. I am certain that generally the Government will get better results under the bounty system than it is getting now.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, under my amendment there would be left $150,000 for the purposes outlined by the Senator from Montana and covered by the provisions of the bill. Of course, the $150,000 that I would provide for the destruction of these animals may be used also in trying to get the best methods of destroying them. That does not mean that they have to go out and shoot them alone, but if they can develop any other method by which they can more effectively destroy them under the $150,000, they can do it. What I want, and what I think has been shown to be necessary by the arguments that have been presented here, is that a definite amount of this money shall be used in the forest reserves, the territory now absolutely under the control and jurisdiction of the United States, for the destruction of these animals. Let them be destroyed right in the harbor that the Government has created, where they are now preserved. I should like to see the forest-reserve officers used for that purpose. I think they could do it more effectively than these biological engineers and scientific men, and there ought to be some way by which you could coordinate the services of the biological people and the others.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, what does the Senator mean by "biological engineers"?

Mr. JONES. You have them here. There is an executive assistant; one biologist, who shall be chief of the bureau; a chief clerk, and so forth.

Mr. WARREN. But they are not engineers.

Mr. JONES. Not exactly, no; but they are experts. They are biological experts. That is what they are.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; that is better.

Mr. JONES. They do not call them engineers, but it amounts to the same thing in a different line of work. They are scientists. But if we can get an appropriation under which we can direct these forest-reserve officers or, if we must have these biological scientists to do it, direct them to use that money in the forest reserves for killing these animals, then we will accomplish something that will result in good.

I wish to say, further, that if this amendment of $300,000 is adopted, I shall propose an amendment along the lines I have already indicated.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Montana said a few moments ago that in his State a bounty of $10 was paid by the State for every wolf scalp, and an additional reward from the State stock associations, and a further bounty from private concerns, making three rewards in all. Now, my State also offers bounties for the scalps of these predatory animals. In addition to that, there is a constantly increasing demand for fur. If those incentives are not sufficient to exterminate these animals, does the Senator think it possible to exterminate them or increase their extermination by an act of Congress carrying $300,000?

Mr. JONES. Possibly not, except by making a provision that the officers of the Government shall go on the forest reserves and kill them. I do not suppose the citizens outside of the reserves can go on the forest reserves and kill these animals in order to get these bounties. That is the principal evil complained of by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]—that these forest reserves are a sort of harbor of refuge, and that the ordinary citizen of the State can not get at these animals on the reserves, whether the bounty is large or small.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that a citizen is prohibited from going upon a forest reserve for the purpose of killing a predatory animal? I do not understand that the regulations go to that extent. I know they are innumerable and are designed to cover almost every element of human activity, but I do not believe there is any such prohibition as that.

Mr. JONES. I do not know what all their prohibitions are, but I think they are so many and so uncertain that most citizens would not run the risk of going on there to hunt these coyotes and wolves.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be, but I do not believe the regulations have extended to that subject and excluded the inhabitants of the respective States from hunting game during the open season, or at any time killing these animals that are inimical to civilization.

Mr. JONES. Of course the Senator understands that on some of these reserves, I think, they have some regulations that, if strictly construed, would not permit us to go on at all without a permit.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be. I am prepared for information going to any extent upon that subject, but I do not believe the subject has been covered specifically.

Mr. JONES. At any rate, that has been the basis of the argument that has been presented here to-day—the fact that these reserves constitute a harbor of refuge for these animals.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is the reason why I asked the question. It has been assumed here that such was the case.

Mr. JONES. I know that they have a great many regulations and they are very restrictive, and I would not be surprised to find that by a technical enforcement of their regulations they could pretty nearly prevent a person from going on there with a gun for almost any purpose, except to follow along certain trails or lines to get across.

It has been suggested that there are lots of settlers in the forest reserves, and that to these settlers the loss of a cow or the loss of a sheep or a chicken or a pig means more than the loss of a great many animals to large stock owners. Of course that is true; and yet nobody supposes that under this appropriation anybody is going to go into the forest reserves around the neighborhood of these settlers and kill the animals about there and protect them—not at all. They may do it if we provide specifically that a certain amount of this money shall be used in the forest reserves for the purpose of killing these animals.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate further. I am not in favor of increasing this amount if we leave the provision of this paragraph as it is. If we do increase it, then we ought to provide that a specific amount shall be used for the destruction of these animals. As a matter of fact, we ought to separate that paragraph from the other parts of the paragraph providing for investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture and for investigations and experiments in connection with the rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten. We ought to separate the clause providing for the destruction of these other animals from all of that, and put those duties under a certain class of Government employees, and put this other, except the scientific part of it, possibly, the experimental part, as suggested by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], under another class of persons, and I think preferably under the forest-reserve people.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I simply wish to throw out a hint to the wise, to the effect that if this appropriation is to be made available, if it is to be made effective, it would be a pretty good idea to pass this bill on or before high noon on March 4. I should like to remind the Senators that while we talk these wolves are breeding and multiplying and replenishing in the national forests.

The committee recommended this amendment. It was the sense of the majority of the committee. I am standing by the committee. Notwithstanding the discussion, I am still for the amendment; but I wish to say that I shall not feel justified in pressing this amendment, or in pressing any other amendment, at the peril of defeating this or any other appropriation bill. I hope we are ready to vote.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just one word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. I am not asking the Senator to yield. I simply wish to say that this talk does not make any difference as to when the bill will go into effect. These appropriations will not become effective until the 1st of July, anyhow, so that we have not delayed the killing of any of these animals by the time the matter has been under discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KERN. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment is on page 54, line 19. It proposes to strike out "$110,000" and to insert "$300,000."

Mr. THOMPSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STONE (when Mr. REED's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. REED] has been absent for several days on important business, which has compelled him to be out of the city. He expects to return to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DU PONT. In that case I withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with him.

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently, finding that my pair, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce a pair between the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN]; also a pair between the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ashurst	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Gronna	Oliver	Smoot
Brandegee	Johnson	Page	Townsend
Catron	La Follette	Penrose	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Lodge	Perkins	Walsh
Clapp	McCumber	Pittman	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	McLean	Poindexter	Weeks
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Ransdell	White
Fall	Myers	Shafroth	Works
Fletcher	Nelson	Sheppard

NAYS—15.

Bristow	James	Lewis	Swanson
Bryan	Jones	Pomerene	Thomas
Hitchcock	Kern	Simmons	Thompson
Hollis	Lane	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—38.

Borah	du Pont	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Burleigh	Goff	Owen	Stephenson
Burton	Hardwick	Reed	Sterling
Camden	Hughes	Robinson	Stone
Chilton	Kenyon	Root	Sutherland

Colt	Lee, Md.	Sherman	Tillman
Culberson	Lippitt	Shields	Williams
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Dillingham	Newlands	Smith, Md.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask whether it would be in order at this time to offer another amendment to this paragraph? I am not sure as to whether it would be, under the agreement that all committee amendments are to be disposed of first.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think under the agreement the amendment would not be in order, unless the Senator asks unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES. If it can be done, I ask unanimous consent to present an amendment at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORE. I will request the Senator to defer it until we finish the committee amendments.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on page 78, the item relative to the International Dry Farming Congress to be held in Denver, Colo.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. That item was passed over last night at my request. In the discussion of the item last night I asked the Senator from Colorado if he would not agree to reduce the amount from $20,000 to $10,000, and suggested certain reasons why that should be done. I am quite sure that if this policy of appropriating money to pay the expenses of the different congresses held in the different parts of the United States becomes a fixed policy of the Government it is going to cost hundreds of thousands of dollars every year.

I hold in my hand a letter, received this morning, in which I am advised that the International Irrigation Congress has already made a request of a certain Senator that an appropriation of $20,000 be made for defraying the expenses of the congress that is to be held at Sacramento this year. I have tried, since last night, to get a list of all of the congresses that hold their annual sessions in the United States, but so far I have not been able to get the names of all of them. There are, however, 20 or more whose names I have; and I take it for granted that there is not a person interested in any one of those congresses and the subjects matter which are to be discussed by them who does not feel that his particular congress is of just as much importance as the International Dry Farming Congress possibly could be.

The Irrigation Congress was organized some 28 years ago. The first appropriation this congress ever had was three years ago, at a time when a quarter of a century had elapsed from its first meeting, and it was held at the same place where the first meeting was held. The irrigation congress was one of the first to be organized in this country, and I want to be frank in saying that this congress has had a wonderful influence upon the education of the American people upon this most vital question. I have no doubt, Mr. President, but that the Dry Farming Congress is one of great interest, and that it has a beneficial effect upon thousands of people. I have no doubt that the representatives who come from foreign countries and the representatives from different States attending the congress carry away with them information that is disseminated among the people of their own communities, and that is of great benefit not only to the communities in which they live but to the country at large.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know nothing, Mr. President, as to the desirability of the amount that is named in this amendment, but I am in favor of some appropriation for this purpose. I want to ask the Senator from Utah, who seems to have, in a sense, arrayed himself against appropriations for these conferences and conventions, if he knows of a single instance where delegates from the United States have been invited to any foreign conference or convention that an appropriation has not been made by the foreign Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Offhand, I could not state whether there has or has not been. I can say this to the Senator, however, that there have been appropriations made by Congress for the payment of the expenses of our delegates who attended foreign congresses or conferences.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no question about that.

Mr. SMOOT. That I do know, but I can not say as to whether any other country has made appropriations to pay expenses of delegates or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think that any foreign Government more than our Government has made appropriations to pay the traveling expenses, but in every instance I am aware of, and I have taken some pains to investigate the matter, the foreign Governments have made appropriations for the entertainment of the delegates; and I think we can do no less than that when we invite people to come to this country from other countries.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Congress or the President of the United States invited them it would be quite a different thing than to have the officers of the Dry Farming Congress or other congresses extend the invitation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. In the case of this congress the President does not invite them. It is true that in this very case the very day this item was reported in this appropriation bill to the Senate there was a resolution from the House which provides that the President shall extend an invitation to foreign countries to attend this congress, and a proviso of the resolution provided that there should be no expense in connection with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I had not observed that this invitation is not to be made by the President. As a rule, or in very many instances, that is the case, and by legislation we provide that the invitation shall be extended through the President of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. But this is not one of those cases, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yet even in this case it seems to me that to extend an invitation to people of other countries to come here to take part in a scientific congress that will be of advantage to our own people as well as to those who come here, it would be almost an insult to say to them that the Government will give you no recognition so far as making a little appropriation is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in the past, for the last quarter of a century, there has been a rivalry between cities in the United States as to where these congresses should be held. I have been to a number of them, particularly the Trans-Mississippi Congress and the Irrigation Congress, where delegates from one State would ask the congress to hold its next session in a particular city of that State, and delegates from another State requested that it be held in some city of their State, and a campaign immediately began for support. Cities in the past have always paid the expenses until about three years ago; and I think, Mr. President, that is what they ought to do now. If the Dry Farming Congress is held in Salt Lake City, Utah, I think the Salt Lake City people ought to pay the expenses of entertaining the congress. It brings people from all over the country, the business interests of the city receive a direct benefit, and the whole State receives advertising through the congress. I think the city and the State ought to pay the expense of entertaining. It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I am opposed to entering upon the policy of the Government paying the expenses of these congresses wherever they are held and as often as they are held.

I know it will be immediately stated that I asked for an appropriation of $10,000 for the International Irrigation Congress three years ago that was held in Salt Lake City. I thought that amount was ample. I thought the $10,000 which was appropriated then was nothing more than fair, and that Salt Lake City should put up all the balance of the money. It was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the irrigation congress, the first one being held in Salt Lake City and the twenty-fifth one being held at the same place. For that reason invitations were extended to officials of every State in the Union and foreign countries. Representatives from many foreign countries were present, and there was hardly a State in the Union which did not have representatives at that congress.

Now, Mr. President, we are asked at this time to appropriate $20,000. I know that two years ago there was appropriated $20,000 for this same congress held in a city in Oklahoma, and I knew that there was $20,000 appropriated a year ago for this same congress held in some city in Kansas But, Mr. President, if the Dry Farming Congress is to receive $20,000 every year from Congress for the purpose of defraying the expenses of holding that congress I can not see why the irrigation congress, the trans-Mississippi congress, and all the other 20 or 30 congresses, which are held annually in this country, should not receive the same consideration at the hands of Congress.

I will say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who is so deeply interested in this item, that it does seem to me if Congress does appropriate $10,000 toward defraying the expenses of this congress the city of Denver ought to pay the balance of the expense without a question, and I shall offer, and do now offer, an amendment to the proposed committee amendment by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$10,000."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has made a plea in behalf of cutting down this appropriation, because he is opposed to this general character of legislation. If this was the starting of a new scheme there might be great force in the position which he takes. I am not asking for anything out of the usual order. I am not asking for a dollar more than has been appropriated for Oklahoma and for the State of Kansas. The Senator from Utah himself admits that the first irrigation congress was held in the city of Salt Lake many years ago, and that there was $10,000 appropriated for that. That is a precedent which authorizes, to some extent at least, these appropriations. At any rate, Mr. President, this matter is one that is not open to the objection that it is starting a new line. Whenever the question of another congress of a different character that has not been appropriated for comes up, that is the time to urge an objection of that kind.

Now, I want to say to the Senator—and he, perhaps, knows it well—there is not a line of agriculture that has such possibilities in it as agriculture on these arid plains. We often lament the fact that we have not had sufficient downfall of water to raise crops, and that is one thing the people of the West have often complained of. Yet we have the most fertile soil in all the world, and that fertility would not exist if it had not been for the fact that we had a scarcity of rain. It is the downpour of the ages on lands in other portions of the United States that has made them sterile.

We know that all soil is nothing but disintegrated rock, that the fertility of the soil depends upon the presence of mineral salts in in the soil, and that the mineral salts are dissipated and dissolved and washed away by frequent rain. Consequently the very fertility of our soil has been preserved by reason of the fact that our country is arid.

Now, we have this vast rich land upon which we can raise any quantity of products. I have seen at the dry farming congresses certificates and samples of wheat that yielded 40 bushels to the acre. It is a certain character of wheat; it has to be planted in a certain way; the soil has to be tilled in a certain way. All that has developed by reason of this agitation among the people, and these congresses are the one thing that have made this possibility greater than perhaps any other thing, for we know as a matter of fact that soil after a rain will crack, and exposure of that kind produces evaporation. That is what makes the land so dry that it will not produce crops. We have discovered that by harrowing that land after every rainfall the tendency is to keep the moisture in the soil, and by reason of that one discovery alone many many crops are made a success when they were a complete failure. All that has been developed by reason of consultation and essays and speeches made at thees congresses of the dry farming land, and that is worth more to the United States than pretty nearly any quantity of literature that you can distribute. All of those things add to the development of the country.

There are millions and millions and millions of acres of this land, and is it possible that we want in some way to discourage the holding of these congresses? There are exhibits produced there. It is not only the meeting of the farmers and the discussions of the matters that come up in the congress, but it is the live illustrations that are made right there by exhibiting the products. They are brought from all over the United States. It encourages the people who have gone upon these dry lands for the purpose and expectation of making homes there. If you can get a home built on every 320 acres of land in that arid West you will add 10,000,000 or 15,000,000 people to the population of the United States. The very fact that people are there ready to demonstrate and show that men can make a living upon this land and that they can produce good results is worth many times the simple appropriation that is made here.

Mr. President, I do not want to discuss the question to any extent. I believe this appropriation is made in accordance with what has been made in the past. We are not asking for any more. This Dry Farming Congress does not pay; I mean by that no city makes any money out of it. You can not appeal to the hotel people or people engaged in business there to contribute. The city of Denver does that at times. It raised $100,000 for the holding of the Democratic national convention there years ago, and it was thoroughly satisfied with the investment; but when you take a scientific question that is to be discussed, to be illustrated, you have not the number of people who have large bank rolls and can afford to stop at fine hotels, and consequently the hotel people are not keen to subscribe for the bringing of the congress there.

I want to say further in reference to what the Senator said concerning the Trans-Mississippi Congress, that congress is now in such condition that they can not get cities in which to hold it. There was no Trans-Mississippi Congress held last year. It was because, not being an international congress, having matters relating solely to the West, there was not any inducement to people to subscribe for the holding of the convention in their particular city. On that account cities after cities have shirked it. Instead of there being a competition for it there is simply a request not to bring it in many cases, and the result has been that they could not get last year any city to undertake the entertainment of those people.

Mr. President, this is not only a congress where people meet and discuss, but it is the exhibition of what is actually done on those lands out in the West, which it is important that the Government should get rid of and on which it is important that homes should be made.

With that, Mr. President, it seems to me that it is not a good time now, when we have made this appropriation for every meeting of this congress that has ever been held in the United States, and it is not exactly fair to our section to say, "No; we will draw the line here; just as quickly as it gets to your State we will have it half the amount."

Mr. President, I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that the record may be kept straight, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that last year there was no gathering of the International Irrigation Congress for the reason that the city that had invited the congress, and the invitation accepted, gave notice, too late, however, for another place to prepare for the congress, that it was impossible for it to meet the expenses. I suppose the Senator knows that that was the reason the congress was not held.

The congress will be held this year at Sacramento. The congress is designated the International Irrigation Congress ever since three years ago when the first appropriation was made to partially pay the expenses incident to the holding of the congress at Salt Lake City.

I recognize, of course, Mr. President, the wonderful amount of good that has come from the holding of the Dry Farming Congress, but it certainly has not been more than the good which has come from the holding of the irrigation congresses in the past, the Trans-Mississippi Congress, and many of the other congresses held in different parts of the United States annually.

Dry farming is a coming industry in the United States. In my own State we are raising to-day more wheat upon dry farm lands than upon irrigated lands. Years ago it was thought that the proper way to raise dry farm wheat was to roll the surface to keep it hard, thinking that by so doing the evaporation of water would not take place so quickly, but some 10 or 12 years ago it was discovered that in order to successfully raise wheat upon dry lands without irrigation, first there should be deep plowing, the deeper the better, and that it should be on summer fallow land; that it should be plowed in the fall and sowed in the fall. Experience taught us that the proper way for the successful growth of grain on dry farm land was to prepare the land with a view of drawing the water stored by winter snows in the land to the surface, and that only could be done by having a loose, open surface, allowing the sun to draw the water so that the roots of the grain could absorb the moisture.

The Senator stated that following every rainstorm the successful farmer of dry land takes his harrow and harrows the ground over. That is true. I remember, Mr. President, the first time I ever saw this course practiced. I thought there would be no grain left; I thought the farmer was certainly making a mistake; but time has proven that that is the only way to make a success in dry farming.

Mr. President, it is not so much as to whether the Congress is going to cost $20,000 for the entertainment of the delegates attending it or not. I do think if the congress is to be held in Denver, Denver ought to take an interest in it and pay a part of the expense. That is why I offered the amendment which I did, and upon that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah proposes the following amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, line 13, strike out "$20,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to read:

International Dry Farming Congress, Denver, Colo.: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit at the next annual meeting of the International Dry Farming Congress, to be held at Denver, Colo., during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, illustrative of the investigations, products, and processes relating to farming in the subhumid, arid, and semiarid regions of the United States, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon this amendment to the amendment the Senator from Utah demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have a pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. CAMDEN. I announce my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to inquire if the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT. I ask whether the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. LIPPITT. As I have a pair with him, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote, having a pair with him.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. THORNTON] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair as before and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—13.

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 955).

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I present the report of the conference committee on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 32, 33, 34, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 50, 59, 60, 61, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 82, 91, 92, 94, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 104, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 131, 136, 138, 140, and 141.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 37, 39, 45, 46, 51, 52, 54, 55, 57, 58, 62, 66, 74, 81, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 93, 95, 96, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 132, 133, 134, 135, 137, 139, and 142, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$141,130"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Division of efficiency: For establishment and maintenance of system of efficiency ratings, pursuant to section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, for investigation of the needs of the several executive departments and independent establishments with respect to personnel, and for investigation of duplication of statistical and other work and method of business in the various branches of the Government service; including not more than $2,500 for equipment, supplies, stationery, books, and printing; and not more than $50 for street car fare; $30,000; the chief of the division of efficiency herein provided for shall be appointed by the President and shall report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, through the President, the nature and progress of work undertaken by the division, together with a detailed statement of expenditures showing the persons employed, their duties, and the compensation paid to each: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation in excess of $4,000 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "twenty-three," and on page 33 of the bill, in line 23, strike out "$8,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$7,280"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$321,020"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$156,780"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$166,758"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$158,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 16, 18, 20, 21, 35, 41, 63, 64, and 65.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I think the report ought to go over and be printed. We have had a commission of the kind referred to in the conference report, which made a report within a year or so after spending $50,000. Now, we are starting in again.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this is not new matter. The Senator from Kansas is under a misapprehension. This is a continuing service; it is not introduced as new matter.

I will say to the Senator that a great deal of money has been saved the Government by the investigations of this bureau. For instance, I recall a case where there was a request for a large increase of the clerical force in one of the departments. Mr. Brown, who was at the head of this service, investigated the matter, and his investigation resulted in a great reduction of that force. He found the methods of business were cumbersome and unnecessary; that the work could be simplified, the labor diminished, and the efficiency of the force increased. I repeat, a great deal has been saved the Government by this commission. It is not a new service, but it is a service that is required by law. There was a provision in 1912 or 1913——

Mr. SMOOT. It was in 1913.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In 1913 there was a provision that required the Civil Service Commission to maintain this service. It is in pursuance of that law, which made an absolute requirement that this work should be done, that this appropriation is now made.

Mr. BRISTOW. What change has been made by the conference report in the original bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that it has been a very difficult matter to adjust. There has been some friction between the Civil Service Commission and Mr. Brown, the gentleman at the head of this special service. We have tried to remove that friction by giving the President the power to appoint the head of this service, and still not take away from the service the supervision of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course we can get no conception as to what the report means from its rapid reading. Why should the report not be printed and go over until to-morrow? Then, unless there is objection to it, of course it will take no time to dispose of it.

I am interested in the provision to which I have referred, because I happen to know something about the commission that was formerly appointed. I do not think the Congress ever utilized to any extent any suggestion made by the commission.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia to let the conference report go over and be printed. I want to look into some of the items.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If that is insisted upon, it will have to be assented to; but I hope Senators will understand that if we carry these appropriation bills over in this way—and this seems to be a very small matter; by the reading at the desk Senators could get a full insight into it, as there is nothing intricate or difficult about it—it will be impossible to complete the work of the session.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator that, after I have looked into it, I may not want to take more than a minute. I should like, however, to have an opportunity to look over the report just a little. I do not ask to delay its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not ask that the report be printed for delay; but, for instance, it appears from the reading of the report that some 40 amendments have been disagreed to, and it is impossible to understand what they are from their hurried reading.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But this very amendment has been read, and it can be read again.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not this particular amendment to which I refer. I think it would hasten matters to have the report printed, and then, just as soon as we can get it printed, we can take it up.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand there is a demand that the report be printed, and I will interpose no objection to that course, but I do want the Senate to understand that if this policy is pursued as to all appropriation bills—and there is less controversy in this than usual, for there is nothing in controversy here worth mentioning—if this impeding of the progress of appropriation bills is to go on, we had just as well realize that we can not possibly finish them in season.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I think the remarks of the Senator from Virginia are entirely uncalled for, so far as I am concerned. I have not undertaken to delay appropriation bills; but here comes in a report as to which there is not a Senator here, except the Senator from Virginia, who knows anything about it. Some of us are interested as well as he in the report, and I should, for one, like to know a little about it. We can not know much about it, of course, but when we ask that it be printed and laid over, I think it should be done.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am perfectly willing to let the report go over.

Mr. BRISTOW. I only wish to have it go over long enough to learn just what it means.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who was on the committee, and who, I thought, was as familiar with these matters as anybody could be, asks that the report go over, I am perfectly willing it shall go over and be printed. I did not say what I said with the idea of irritating the Senator from Kansas; I did not mean to intimate that he was designing to impede the progress of the bill, but I did say, and I now repeat, that if these conference reports as they come in have all got to be laid over a day to be printed, we had just as well realize that we can not possibly get through with the appropriation bills and that we must have an extra session. I repeat, there is as little to excite controversy in this conference report as it is possible to find in any conference report that will be presented to the Senate. I simply desire to emphasize the importance of avoiding delay, and I hope Senators will adopt some other method of getting the information they desire, which, it seems to me, they can get without having a day lost on each one of the appropriation bills. So far as I am concerned, as Senators ask it, I am perfectly willing, or at least I submit to it, to let this report go over and be printed, and to take it up to-morrow.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Virginia says that the sources of information are open to everybody and that we can get our information otherwise. How can Senators, who are not upon the Appropriations Committee or upon the conference committee, get information as to these 80 or 90 amendments without having them printed so that they can look over the report? They, of course, can not go to the conference report itself and get that information.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I certainly did not mean to say that every Senator had the same information.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; but the Senator from Virginia said he hoped Senators would try to get their information in some other way than by having a conference report printed, and I was wondering whether there was any other way.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If there were any matters in which Senators were interested, if they would speak to me about them I would be very glad to give the information.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This is not a personal matter, but is a matter of general public importance on an appropriation bill; and I hold that a Senator, if he does his duty, should not look only after the little things in which he is interested, but should look into matters which may interest the country at large.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not indicate that it was personal to any Senator; but I meant as to the items of this bill that some Senators give attention to one matter and other Senators to other matters; and as to those which especially concern Senators, if they will invite my attention to them, I shall be glad to give information. It is, however, useless to waste further time in discussing the matter. I consent that the conference report may go over and be printed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] that I certainly did not mean to show any heat at all. If I did—and I probably did—I can realize how earnest the Senator is in regard to these appropriations, and I sympathize with his desire to get them through in a hurry. If I spoke with some feeling, I desire to withdraw the feeling. I simply desire to have an opportunity to look over the amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie over and be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20415), making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on last evening I suggested that I would offer an amendment to the pending bill providing for an appropriation for the purpose of making investigations and demonstrations in connection with the development of live stock in the New England States, there being two similar provisions in the bill. I have concluded not to offer it, Mr. President, but to wait and see what happens to the two provisions that are now in the bill, if they shall remain there. If I am here when a similar bill is presented to the Senate next year I will see what I can do on behalf of my section of the country in that regard.

Now, Mr. President, I have an amendment that I desire to offer; but, before doing so, I wish to make a brief statement concerning it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to state to the Senator from New Hampshire that the committee amendments have not been completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supposed they had been completed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have not all been acted upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withhold the amendment I intend to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 79, beginning with line 1 and ending in line 16, the committee propose to insert the following:

Experiments and demonstrations in live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned, or with individuals, to make such investigations and demonstrations as may be necessary in connection with the development of live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States, including the erection of barns and other necessary buildings, and the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $60,000; and of the funds heretofore appropriated for the development of live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States during the fiscal year 1915, not to exceed $7,500 is hereby made available for the erection of barns and other necessary buildings.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order against that amendment, that it adds a new item of appropriation for which there has been no estimate.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the item was estimated for by the Department of Agriculture; it was reported by a committee of the Senate, and it therefore comes directly within the rule. We have a very strong letter from the department in regard to it. I will say that the estimate is contained in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the case, I withdraw the point of order that it has not been estimated for; but I must insist upon the point of order that it adds a new item of appropriation, and that it is not made to carry out the provisions of existing law.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Chair wishes a statement on that point, I will be glad to proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The two clauses of the rule are disjunctive and not conjunctive. The rule reads:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

Which has been done in this instance—or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

That has also been done in this instance. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor will rise——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment stated. What is the nature of the amendment?

Mr. RANSDELL. The amendment, Mr. President, is to appropriate $60,000 for carrying on live-stock experimental work in the sugar and cotton sections of the South. A similar provision was inserted in the bill last year after a very extended debate. The work is going on, and a considerable amount of money has already been expended under the appropriation made last year. It is a work that is very greatly needed, I will say, in my State and in some other States of the South.

Furthermore, in this very bill we have just passed, without opposition, an appropriation of $87,500 for carrying on this same kind of work in the arid regions of the West. That item was put on this bill with my active assistance in the Committee on Agriculture. The committee took the ground that it was impossible for the people in the arid regions to sell in the shape of grain and hay the products of that region; that they were too far from transportation, and so they would have to sell the meat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A division was proceeding. The Chair had stated "the noes have it," when the call was made for a division. The Chair does not think the matter is debatable. Those in favor will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is adopted.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 79, beginning in line 24.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation and not germane to the subject matter of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reads:

Hereafter the President of the United States is authorized to designate such areas on any lands purchased by the United States under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable streams," and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof as should, in his opinion, be set aside for the protection of game animals, birds, or fish, and thereafter whoever shall hunt, catch, trap, willfully disturb, or kill any kind of game animal, game, or nongame bird, or fish, or take the eggs of any such bird on any lands so set aside, or in or on the waters thereof, except under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time prescribe, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both: Provided, That this provision shall be effective only in those States, the legislatures of which have consented or which hereafter shall consent to the making by the Congress of the United States, or under its authority, of such rules and regulations as, in the opinion of the Federal Government, may be needful in respect to said animals, birds, and fish on said lands, and in or on the waters thereof.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his point of order. I want to say that the Government has bought a large tract of land in my State known as the Vanderbilt land, which has been splendidly stocked with game. The North Carolina Legislature has passed a bill protecting the game in the forest, and this amendment is designed merely to get the General Government to act in cooperation with the State government in protecting the game.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing, if the Senator wants a law applying to that particular game preserve, to support it; but this provision will constitute a general law. It authorizes the President of the United States to go into any State, buy land, and make a game preserve of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado withdraw the point of order?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I would willingly assent to the amendment if it were drawn as suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]; but this provision is quite as applicable to the forest reserves in my State as it is to the Vanderbilt farm in the State of North Carolina. I therefore must insist upon the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, have all the committee amendments yet been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not all of them, as the Chair understands. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, beginning in line 6, it is proposed to insert:

In case of an emergency arising out of an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals, which in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture threatens to live-stock industry of the country, he may expend in the city of Washington and elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease including the purchase and destruction, in cooperation with the States, of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, and said sum shall be immediately available for the purposes specified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I sent to the desk last night an amendment to take the place of that amendment. I do not know whether it was agreed to or not, but I do not understand that it was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the amendment will say "aye," those opposed "no." The "ayes" have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, after the figures "$2,500,000," I move to insert the words "which amount is hereby appropriated." I do that on the suggestion the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] made last night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has just been agreed to. Does the Senator from Oklahoma move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to?

Mr. GORE. I misunderstood the announcement of the Chair. I thought the announcement was made in regard to the amendment which I submitted last night.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the amendment as printed in the bill was agreed to without the proposed amendment to it having been laid before the Senate, I think that we ought to give unanimous consent to reconsider that action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. GORE. I now offer an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the committee amendment, on page 82, lines 6 to 18, inclusive, it is proposed to insert:

In case of an emergency arising out of the existence of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals, which in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture threatens the live-stock industry of the country, he may expend in the city of Washington and elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease, including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States, of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, and said sum shall be immediately available for the purposes specified.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, does the Senator move that amendment in lieu of what was originally in the bill?

Mr. GORE. I offer that as a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Then I desire that the amendment which I sent to the desk last night, the purport of which the Senator understands, may be included in the amendment. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GORE. I make no objection to that suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that in the proposed substitute there is no direct appropriation. I would suggest that he put in after the amount the words "which sum is hereby appropriated."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think that is a good suggestion, and I move that amendment to the substitute as offered.

The SECRETARY. After the figures "$2,500,000" it is proposed to insert "which sum is hereby appropriated."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. After the words "any such disease," it is proposed to insert the following:

Wherever found and irrespective of ownership under like or substantially similar circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer another amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed amendment insert:

Provided, That no payment for any such diseased or exposed animal, or contaminated or exposed materials, shall be made if any of the quarantine regulations of the Department of Agriculture shall have been so violated at the yards or pen where such animal is seized or materials found as to cause the disease against which the quarantine is established.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment. I move to insert at the proper place the words "quarantine, treatment, or other expenses incurred in."

Mr. President, I offer this amendment for the reason that it has been demonstrated that it is not necessary to kill the herds where they are infected with the foot-and-mouth disease. During the month of October a herd of cattle, a dairy herd, consisting of some 750 animals, were quarantined in the stockyards in the city of Chicago. As I understand the case, the Secretary of Agriculture consented that the animals should be allowed to be quarantined and not slaughtered. It has been demonstrated beyond a question of doubt that it is possible to cure the animals after they contract this disease, and that it is not necessary to slaughter them. It seems to me, Mr. President, that it would mean a saving of hundreds of thousands, yes millions, of dollars to the Government if the Secretary of Agriculture were permitted to quarantine and to permit treatment of the stock or of the cattle after they had been infected with this disease. I hope the chairman of the committee will see fit to accept the amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that I have not had an opportunity to give the amendment sufficient consideration to let it go in with my approval. I will raise no objection at this point, however, suggesting to the Senator that I will look further into it in conference.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be perfectly willing to let it go in in that way. I move, after the word "including," in line 15 of the amendment, to insert "quarantine, treatment, or other expenses incurred in."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 15 of the amendment, after the word "including," it is proposed to insert "quarantine, treatment, or other expenses incurred in."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is one further committee amendment that was passed over.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment on page 12 was passed over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood that on page 83 the last item was passed over last evening. I requested that it should be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was agreed to this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that last evening I asked that it go over. Of course it may have been acted upon in my absence from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It did go over, and it was acted upon this morning and agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish particularly to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the amendment on page 12 relating to the eradication of the cattle tick. I was a member of the Committee on Agriculture when the effort to eradicate the cattle tick was instituted, and I took a great deal of interest in it and believed that it was a good work. I wish, however, to call the chairman's attention particularly to the fact that the appropriation seems to increase from year to year, although the testimony is that in many places the cattle tick has been eradicated, and in this bill there is a provision to divert $50,000 of the appropriation to a purpose which has no connection whatever with the eradication of the tick. The language of the bill is:

> Of which sum $50,000 may be used for live-stock demonstration work in cooperation with the States relations service in areas freed of ticks, and of this amount no part shall be used in the purchase of animals for breeding purposes.

There are at least three different propositions in this bill for demonstration work connected with the development of live stock. We have just made an appropriation for some demonstration work in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the South and an appropriation for doing similar work in the irrigated districts of the West, and here is $50,000 in this particular appropriation which has nothing whatever to do with the eradication of ticks.

The chairman will recognize the truth of the statement that when an appropriation is once made it is generally the desire and the purpose of the department officers to carry on that work in some form. I have read with some care and interest the testimony which was given before the House committee on this particular subject. Substantially nothing has been done yet, and there is not any demonstrated necessity for it, except the possibility of keeping a certain number of men at work who have been heretofore employed in connection with the original work for which the appropriation was intended. Moreover, there is not anything in the bill or in the testimony to indicate that a man who is competent to act as an inspector in the eradication of cattle ticks would be competent in advising farmers what kind of stock they should purchase or how they should care for that stock. It is an entirely distinct question.

If it is desirable to appropriate more money to assist in the development of dairying interests or live-stock interests, it should be done as a definite proposition, entirely distinct from the appropriation which is under consideration here. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept an amendment to strike out of the bill that part of the appropriation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I will say, with reference to the general appropriation and provision looking to the eradication of the Texas fever tick, that I regard it as a most important item. This work has been in progress during the last 14 years, and some 250,000 square miles have been rid of this cattle pest, which has resulted to the great advantage of the cattle producers living in the immediate communities, as well as to the general interest of the entire country. There remains some 540,000 square miles still subjected to this cattle-tick fever and pest. At the rate of progress heretofore made it will require 28 years to completely eradicate the tick throughout the entire southern section. It has seemed to the committee that it would be wise to speed the execution of that work and to clean up this territory as rapidly as possible and not allow 28 years or any such approximate time to elapse before the country is cleaned up in that regard.

I will say, with reference to the item of $50,000, that it is a House provision, and therefore did not come under the investigation of the Senate committee. I find that I have nothing from the department in regard to the exact purposes which it contemplates. I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to that provision going out and being looked into further in conference.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I move to strike out, in line 9, page 12, after the word "ticks," all of that line down to and including the word "purposes," in line 13, page 12, and to insert in its place "$448,800."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 9, after the word "ticks" and the comma, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "purposes," in line 13, and to insert "$448,800," so that if amended it will read:

> For all necessary expenses for the eradication of southern cattle ticks, $448,800: Provided, however—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments are now completed, so far as the printed bill is concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that there are one or two amendments that were overlooked by the committee which I should like to offer at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will give way for that, of course.

Mr. GORE. I send the first amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma offers a further committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 18, line 3, after the word "control," the words "and by putting into application methods of control already discovered."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which was overlooked by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63 of the bill, line 13, after the word "thereto," it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and insert a colon and the words "And provided further, That hereafter all correspondence, bulletins, and reports for the furtherance of the purposes of the act approved May 8, 1914, entitled 'An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the act supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture,' may be transmitted in the mails of the United States free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster General from time to time may prescribe, by such college officer or other person connected with the extension department of such college as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate to the Postmaster General."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. It seems to me we ought not to extend the franking privilege any further than we now have it, and I make the point of order that that is legislation.

Mr. GORE. I hope the Senator will withhold the point of order for a moment. I will say to the Senator that this amendment was offered last year, and was discussed at considerable length, and it was adopted last year, excluding the word "hereafter," and is the law now. It has proved most satisfactory and most desirable. It is in execution of what is known as the Smith-Lever extension act, and is almost essential to the thoroughgoing prosecution of that work. It is in the law now, but it went out in the House on a point of order. I offer exactly the provision contained in the present Agricultural appropriation bill, with the addition of the word "hereafter," which was stricken out last year, and I trust the Senator will not insist on the entire amendment going out.

Mr. BRISTOW. Every year there are all kinds of devices and ingenious propositions made to extend the franking privilege and burden the mails with free matter, and I think that instead of extending that privilege it ought to be curtailed. While I regret to make a point of order against a matter that the Senator from Oklahoma presents, I believe it ought to be done.

Mr. GORE. I will ask the Senator if it would meet his objections to omit the word "hereafter" from the amendment?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not think any of this matter ought to be frankable. I think we ought to know what it is costing the Government to handle these various features of administration. It has not anything whatever to do with the Postal Service.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the matter which is intended to be transmitted free under this provision is the bulletins and the results of experimental work in connection with the experiment stations and other demonstration work.

Mr. BRISTOW. But let me suggest to the Senator that it does not relate to what the departments are doing here, but anybody, anywhere, scattered all over the country has the free use of the mails to send out anything that he may label as a bulletin, and nobody can tell what amount or volume of matter will be thrown into the mails in this way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Kansas that I think he has an erroneous idea of what would happen and what is taking place now under a similar law. They could not be sent out by anybody, as I understand, but the results of these experiments that are made are sent out by the agricultural colleges that make the experiments in connection with the officials of the Government. It is just as important as any of the farm bulletins that we send out under our franks, and I think more so. It is not something that anybody could use. It is confined to these officials under rules and regulations made by the Postmaster General himself.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the Government is now appropriating a great deal of money for this experimental service; and is it possible that in order to save a little postage we are going to lock up information that costs hundreds of thousands of dollars, and not send it out?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why, Mr. President, it can be sent out now by the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It can be?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. By the Government, yes; but this provides that it may be sent out by other people.

Mr. SHAFROTH. By the agricultural colleges, as I understand. Of course the people in each State are more interested, and it is a matter of the spread of this information. This bureau has not as accurate information as to the people who need it as the State agricultural colleges have; and it seems to me that we are simply saving just a very small amount and locking up information which it has cost a great deal of money for the Government to secure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the Senator says that we are saving a very small amount. I have no idea how much it is, and I doubt if the Senator has.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; it is very difficult to tell how much it is.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is very hard to tell that, and that is one of the difficulties.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It can not be very much, though, I should think. I should think even the printing would cost——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is anybody yielding the floor to anybody else?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think, then, I will take the floor myself. I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been ordered read.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, line 13, after the word "thereto," it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and insert a colon and the following proviso:

And provided further, That hereafter all correspondence, bulletins, and reports for the furtherance of the purposes of the act approved May 8, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the act supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," may be transmitted in the mails of the United States free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster General from time to time may prescribe, by such college officer or other person connected with the extension department of such college as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate to the Postmaster General.

Mr. BRISTOW. If you can make anything more sweeping than that, I should like to have somebody undertake it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, has the Senator noticed the last part—"by such college officer"?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; or by somebody else.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, that other person must be designated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; and that is any agent they happen to have or any correspondent for promoting this matter. I make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the point of order is insisted upon?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If so, it is sustained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Awhile ago I said that I had intended to propose an amendment, but would withhold it. In view of the fact that a similar amendment has been agreed to with reference to the cotton and cane growing section of the country, I have concluded to offer my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following on page 79, after line 16:

Experiments and demonstrations in live-stock production in the New England States: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned, or with individuals, to make such investigations and demonstrations as may be necessary in connection with the development of live-stock production in the New England States, including the erection of barns and other necessary buildings, and the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $60,000; and of the funds hereby appropriated for the development of live-stock production in the New England States, not to exceed $7,500 is hereby made available for the erection of barns and other necessary buildings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I dislike to differ from the Senator from New Hampshire in connection with any appropriation that would stimulate the development of New England, especially in an agricultural way, but I feel obliged to interpose a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I must submit, of course; and I now give notice that when the bill goes to the Senate I shall make the point of order against the amendment on page 71, an appropriation for the semiarid and arid regions, which provides for a somewhat similar enterprise. I regret that the Senator makes the point of order. I should like to have it go to conference.

Mr. GORE. Well, Mr. President, on reflection, I believe I will comply with the Senator's suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have one other amendment concerning which it is necessary that I should make a brief statement.

Under the so-called Weeks law of 1910, $11,000,000 was appropriated for the purchase of lands in the Appalachian and White Mountain region. The first year it was impossible to use the appropriation of $1,000,000, as the commission which was appointed was not ready for work. The second year the appropriation of $2,000,000 might have been used, but the commission, in its wisdom, concluded that it wanted more time to investigate the prices of the lands that had been offered and that would be offered, and it did not use the $2,000,000 for the year 1911, which, under the law, it might have used. The law expires on the 30th day of June, 1915; and the appropriaton, less the $3,000,000 which lapsed, has been used or will be used at the termination of the present fiscal year.

The commission has tried to administer this law not only with fidelity but with due regard to economy. The commission consists of the Secretary of War, who is president of the commission; the Secretary of Agriculture; the Secretary of the Interior; the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]; the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]; Representative HAWLEY of Oregon; and Representative LEE of Georgia. We recently saved a million dollars in a single purchase by holding up a proposition for several months, and in various ways a very large amount of money has been saved by the commission in exercising great care in the matter of purchases, and insisting that the lands shall be offered at a very low price. It is a fact that all the purchases have been made at prices that seemed impossible when the commission was organized.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] asks about what the average price is. I will say that it is somewhere between $4 and $6 an acre. Some of it is forest land and a good deal of it is cut-over land; but the investments have been so made that it is generally admitted by every person who has looked into it that the purchases have been made at figures much below what was considered possible even two years ago. As I suggested, in a recent purchase in the White Mountain region in my own State a million dollars was saved by holding it up for several months and insisting that if the sale was to be made it should be made at a certain figure; and my impression is that the land was sold much below its real value.

The commission has taken up this matter with a great deal of care. I do not know whether there is a formal estimate for what I am going to offer or not. I have not had an opportunity to look at the Book of Estimates; but I know that the Secretary of War, who is president of the commission, is very warmly in favor of this; the Secretary of Agriculture, who is a member of the commission, is likewise very earnestly in favor of the proposition, because it was discussed at the last meeting of the commission, and the proposition was included in the report of the commission in a few lines, which I am going to read.

To show that the commission is trying to administer economically the responsibilities that have been placed upon it, I will call attention to the fact that the commission was allowed in the bill $25,000 a year for expenses, and yet the last year it used only $481.17, turning back into the Treasury $24,518.83. From the report of the commission I will read this:

> It is to be emphasized that the Congress established this project upon the basis of an appropriation of $11,000,000. Instead of hastening into purchases in order to utilize an annual appropriation, which would have been unbusinesslike and resulted in loss to the Government, the commission adopted the more conservative policy of making purchases only after full information had been secured in regard to each tract and reasonable prices had been obtained. By so doing it established the work upon a sound basis, but $3,000,000 of the money which had been appropriated reverted to the Treasury. This $3,000,000 will have to be reappropriated if the work is to be carried as far as the Congress intended under the first appropriation.

That money was appropriated, as I have said, and $2,000,000 of it could have been expended if this commission had not exercised the care and the economy that it did exercise in not using it in the second year. The $1,000,000 for the first year probably could not have been used at all; but I feel that the $3,000,000 which, if it is allowed, will only make up the $11,000,000 that was appropriated under the so-called Weeks law, ought to be granted; and I offer this amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I want to say that I am on an investigating committee which is about to begin its session, and I should like to get to it as soon as possible. I have an amendment that I do not think will take any time, if the Senator will let me offer it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection. I will suggest to the Senator that I have been summoned before a committee myself at 4 o'clock; but I will yield.

Mr. JONES. I thought probably this might take some little time.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I hope not; but I will yield to the Senator if he will just withhold his amendment for a moment.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

> For the examination, survey, and acquisition of lands under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 961), as amended March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 828), and June 30, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 441), $3,000,000 which appropriation shall be available until expended.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest that that amendment was prepared under the direct supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 54 I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the close of the paragraph relating to birds, mammals, and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, at the end of the paragraph relative to investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals, it is proposed to insert the following after the word "Utah," at the end of line 24:

> And provided also, That of this sum $175,000 shall be used on the national forests in destroying wolves, coyotes, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORE. Did I understand the Senator correctly regarding the former amendment, that he limited it to national forest reserves?

Mr. JONES. Yes; and this does, too.

Mr. GORE. I wish to suggest to the Senator to add the words "and the public domain."

Mr. JONES. I have no objection.

Mr. GORE. Those words ought to be added.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. GORE. I also suggest to the Senator, if he does not think it would be better to say "not less than $175,000"?

Mr. JONES. That would be still more satisfactory to me.

Mr. GORE. The department has made no request for the additional service included in this item, and it seems to me that to carry out the purpose which actuated the committee in inserting it the amendment ought to read "not less."

Mr. JONES. That will be entirely satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. So as to read:

> Provided also, That of this sum not less than $175,000 shall be used on the national forests and the public domain in destroying wolves, coyotes, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] particularly, and to the Senate in general, that he put across here about $3,000,000 in the three seconds while I happened to be engaged in conversation with other Senators. I shall not move to reconsider, but I shall expect the Senator from New Hampshire to defend the Committee on Agriculture, if not the entire administration, for its reputation for economy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to submit an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, after line 13, insert:

> That the President is hereby authorized to extend an invitation to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Dry Farming Congress to be held at Denver, Colo., September 27, to October 8, inclusive, 1915: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted or used for the expenses of delegates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to be inserted at the end of the bill, and I ask the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge. The amendment which I propose is a substitute which I offered for the rural-credit bill. I understand that that bill will not come up at this session of Congress. I wish to submit some remarks upon it, and not desiring to take any time more than is absolutely necessary I will ask that the amendment which I now offer may be printed in the RECORD, and I will explain it without taking the time to read it, although it is only eight pages. Then, if what I may have to say on the matter is not sufficient to induce the Senator having the bill in charge to agree to raise no point of order, we will at least have saved the time of reading the amendment.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that I may save even more time than that. If it is the rural-credit bill, I shall certainly make no objection to it. Although I have not had an opportunity to investigate it I would be glad to confer with that Senator and other Senators in regard to it.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota to yield to me for just a moment that I may offer an amendment which can be disposed of in a minute?

Mr. MCCUMBER. If I do not lose the floor by so doing I will yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the following amendment and ask if he will not consent to have it incorporated in the bill. There is no paragraph in the bill that has any more merit than this, I know he will admit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after line 20, insert:

For constructing lakes and reservoirs on the Plains between the ninety-eighth meridian and the foothills of the Rocky Mountains, $500,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to offer an amendment, upon which, I think, there will be no debate? If there is, I will withdraw it.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Very well; with the same understanding I will yield.

Mr. LANE. I did not understand the last amendment. Was $500,000 appropriated to put lakes on top of the Rocky Mountains?

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no.

Mr. LANE. For what purpose was the appropriation made?

Mr. BRISTOW. It was an amendment for the construction of lakes and reservoirs on the Great Plains between the ninety-eighth meridian and the foothills of the Rocky Mountains.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert, after the amendment last agreed to on page 83, after line 20, the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for the demonstration at farmers' institutes, or other farmers' societies and meetings, practicable farm uses of denatured alcohol, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. GORE. I wish merely to observe that I regard that as a meritorious amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In connection with that amendment I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, without reading, a statement of the number and kind of denatured-alcohol distilleries now established in Germany.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

German distilleries, showing their number, capacity, and output in 1908.

The amendment submitted by Mr. MCCUMBER was to add at the end of the bill the following additional section:

That there is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the bureau of farm credits. Said bureau shall be presided over by an officer who shall be designated commissioner of farm credits. The Secretary of the Treasury shall provide for sufficient clerical force to perform the duties of said bureau.

That there is hereby appropriated and set aside for the use of said bureau, in the manner hereinafter provided, the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

That the said sum so provided shall be used for the purpose of purchasing notes secured by first mortgages on agricultural lands, as hereinafter provided, for stationery and clerical expenses, and such other expenses as may be incident to the business of said bureau.

That every national bank and every State bank desiring to avail itself of the privileges herein provided are hereby created and declared to be agencies of the Treasury Department for the purpose of receiving from mortgagors notes and mortgages securing same, advancing the moneys to the said mortgagors, and transmitting said notes and mortgages to the bureau of farm credits and receiving in return therefor the amount advanced to the mortgagor by the said bureau.

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to apportion the sum hereby appropriated among the several States, according to the agricultural population, importance of the agricultural productions of each State, and percentage of agricultural lands incumbered by mortgages or trust deeds, and to pay for such notes and mortgages as may be presented to the extent of the amount apportioned to any State.

That any owner of agricultural lands within the United States, who is living upon and farming such lands, desiring a loan under the provisions of this act shall execute a promissory note due in 10 years, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, interest payable annually, which interest shall be evidenced by 10 coupon notes attached to said principal note, and which coupons shall also bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the date of maturity until paid, payable annually. Said note shall also provide that the principal may be paid on any interest-paying day after the expiration of five years. Said note shall be secured by a first mortgage upon the lands so farmed by the owner, and executed and recorded in the manner provided by the laws of the State in which the land is situated, for the execution and recording of mortgages on real estate. Such mortgage shall be accompanied by an application for loan, which application shall recite the purpose for which the loan is desired, the market value of the land, the value at which it was last assessed for taxation, the value and kind of buildings thereon, the number of acres under cultivation, the character and quality of the soil, the number of acres capable of being cultivated, and such other information as may be required by the rules of the said bureau. Said application shall have attached thereto or made as a part thereof an affidavit signed by the owner and at least two neighbors who are thoroughly acquainted with land values in the vicinity, stating the market value of such lands and the market value of the particular lands to be mortgaged. Said note, mortgage, and application shall also be accompanied by an abstract of title duly certified by an abstract company, the register of deeds, or other officer authorized by the laws of the State to make and certify abstracts of lands, which abstract shall show no other mortgages, judgments, delinquent taxes, or other liens of any character against the said lands, unless the purpose of the loan is to secure money to cancel such liens. Said owner shall then present to any national bank or State bank accepting the provisions of this act the said loan papers. The said abstract and papers shall be carefully examined by the president, cashier, or other officer of the bank for the purpose of ascertaining whether the title is perfect in the mortgagor, whether the land is affected by any liens, who shall certify the result of his examination of the abstract, and who shall further certify what in his opinion and judgment is the actual cash selling price of the land. And no mortgage shall be accepted for a greater amount than one-half of the value of such lands, including improvements; nor in any event to an amount exceeding one-half of the actual market value thereof. The said bank may charge the borrower for its services in examining papers and abstract and in forwarding the papers to the bureau of farm credits a sum not exceeding 1 per cent of the amount of the mortgage. No mortgage shall be less than $300 nor more than $10,000 to one person or company, and shall be in multiples of $100. The said notes and mortgages shall not be dated at the time they are executed and presented to the bank. The said bank shall forward all the said papers to the said bureau of farm credits, which bureau shall examine the abstract, note, mortgage, and application, and if said abstract shows the land to be clear or to have no liens of greater amount than the amount desired to be loaned, and all papers properly executed, it shall remit to the bank forwarding the papers the amount of the loan and shall date the notes and mortgage the date on which the remittance is made, from which date interest shall begin to accrue; and all coupons shall be dated to correspond with the date affixed to the principal instrument; and said bureau shall return with the remittance the abstract of title. Upon receipt of the said abstract of title by the bank, said bank shall require the abstract to be continued up to date of payment by said bank to the borrower, and if said abstract after being continued shows the land clear the bank shall indorse over to the borrower the remittance made by the bureau of farm credits. If there are any liens upon the land, the bank, out of the remittance, shall first pay and have canceled such liens and pay the balance to the borrower. The bank shall be held responsible for any negligence in the performance of its duties as agent of said bureau. The principal and all interest coupons shall be payable at the bank where and through which the loan is negotiated and remitted by said bank to said bureau.

That whenever the bureau of farm credits shall have received such mortgages to the extent of $1,000,000 it shall issue bonds in the name of the United States, payable in 20 years and bearing 4½ per cent interest, payable annually, with the privilege and option of the said bureau to pay the principal at the expiration of 10 years. Said bonds shall be issued in denominations from $100 to $500 each, and the said commissioner of farm credits shall sell the said bonds for the face value thereof to any persons applying therefor, preference being given to those desiring small investments. Said bonds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States, a State, or municipality. All moneys received by the said commissioner in the sale of bonds and the principal and all interest paid on said mortgages shall be covered into the said fund of $10,000,000 and used in the payment of mortgages as they may be presented, the expenses of the bureau, the interest on bonds, and payment thereof at maturity.

That all mortgages shall run to the commissioner of farm credits, and said commissioner shall have all the rights and authority of a mortgagee under the laws of the State wherein such mortgage is executed.

That all taxes of every kind levied by a State or municipality which may become a lien prior to said mortgage shall be paid by the mortgagor at least 30 days prior to the time such lands could be sold for delinquent taxes. Upon his failure to do so, or to pay any other lien that may attach to said lands and become superior to said mortgage, the commissioner may pay the same and the mortgage shall stand as security for such sums so paid and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum. And said mortgage shall further provide that in default of the payment of any interest or the payment of taxes, or other superior liens, as aforesaid, the commissioner may foreclose the premises pursuant to the laws of the State in which the land is situated. All papers necessary for the foreclosure proceedings shall be prepared and premises foreclosed by the proper law officer of the bureau. In lieu of foreclosure the commissioner may sell the mortgage to any person desiring to purchase the same, without recourse, and the money so received shall be covered into the said fund. Upon foreclosure the said commissioner may transfer and assign the certificate of sale to any purchaser, and after the period of redemption has expired may sell the lands. And any sum received therefor shall in like manner be covered into said fund.

That it is the purpose of this act not only to secure and facilitate borrowing upon agricultural lands at a reasonable rate of interest, but also to afford a means for those who desire a safe investment, and so long as the said bureau shall be able to dispose of bonds at par it shall accept mortgages presented to any extent above the $10,000,000 hereby appropriated.

That said bonds shall be negotiable in form, and transferable by indorsement, and may be bought and sold by Federal reserve banks under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the Federal reserve act, approved December 23, 1913, and may also be received as collateral for the issue of Federal reserve notes under the provisions of section 16 of said act.

That the word "mortgage" shall be construed to include deeds of trust or any other instruments of security on agricultural lands.

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make all needful rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act.

That this act shall take effect from and after its passage and approval.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire for just one moment the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma and also of Senators upon that side while I quote a single paragraph from the Democratic platform of 1912. I will say that I do not ordinarily go to that instrument for any political or industrial text, but sometimes between the rigid lips of a bivalve may be found a pearl of great price. I would therefore ask the Senator just to listen to one sentence. It is under the heading of "Rural credits," and reads as follows:

> Of equal importance with the question of currency reform is the question of rural credits for agricultural finance.

"Of equal importance." The question of currency reform was considered of such great importance that it was necessary for the administration to call an extra session; and that extra session, lasting all last year nearly, was taken up in the consideration of that one subject. Now, this other subject, according to your Koran, is of equal importance.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCUMBER. For a question.

Mr. GORE. The Senator in various instances, I understood, addresses himself to me particularly and to this side of the Chamber in general. I merely want to say to the Senator, I agree with him as to the importance of rural credits legislation. Without having seen his amendment I am willing to have it go upon this bill without raising a point of order, and if it needs further improvement—and I do not mean to suggest that the Senator's amendment would not be perfect—I shall hope that we shall work that out in conference. I regret that rural credits legislation has not been enacted into law during the Sixty-third Congress. I further regret that Senators on the other side should have felt obliged to murder time in opposition to the shipping bill, in a filibuster against the shipping bill, and in a filibuster against the tariff bill, and a filibuster against the Federal reserve act, and to consume so much time of the session that we have been obliged to omit other necessary and essential and desirable legislation.

If this measure should fail at this time on the Senator's motion it is my hope that it will be enacted into law early in the next session, whether it be an extra or a regular session.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator, indeed, and I regret also at the very close almost of this Congress we should have taken up a whole day in attempting to kill one coyote while a bill of this character was lying upon the table without any consideration whatever.

Mr. President, I would not even take the time to discuss this matter, were it not for the fact that another one has been reported to the Senate, which I consider as absolutely unworkable, and the one I propose is a very simple expedient, without any new machinery. Therefore, if the Senator, when I get through, will agree that it may go in, we will at least have the argument for it to back it up, and I regret and apologize for even having detained the Senate the necessary time for its explanation.

Mr. President, ever so often, ever since I have been in Congress, I have heard eulogies on farmers and farm life; dissertations for the most part on the beauties of poverty. These golden words handed out to the farmer are materialized only in the gold bricks so frequently handed to him. Part of my duties here have been to apply the chemical test of analysis to show to the agricultural communities the spurious character of that which has been extended to them and to demonstrate to them that "all that glitters is not gold."

Some of the Senators remember a few years ago when the denatured alcohol bill was up how that bill was declared to be one of the greatest boons to the farmers; how during the long winters they could convert their cornstalks, their turnip tops, their straw, and their potatoes into liquid dollars; how this article would revolutionize motive power on the farm, and, above all, how it would totally paralyze the Standard Oil Co. and finally crush that octopus that had been sucking the life-blood from honest competitive commerce.

In the clamor and hurrah my voice of caution could not penetrate very far, but I took occasion to say that the American farmer would not secure any benefit out of that law; that it was but another one of the many attempts to play the farmer for political ends. Six years have elapsed since the enactment of that denatured-alcohol law, which was to smile prosperity into every American farm home, and not a single gallon of that precious liquid has been produced on an American farm. On the contrary, lest in the future there might be some possibility of benefit, our Democratic brethren voted to remove all protection on denatured alcohol, thereby removing beyond all question any possibility of agricultural benefit.

We passed that bill. I can not say that the bubble burst, but it was soon found that whatever motive power alcohol gas had inside this Chamber it had little or none outside. I do not mean to say we deceived the farmers. As a matter of fact, they had learned long before to take with many grains of salt the aureate promises of this body, and so they kept right on plowing.

Then another great idea was sprung to challenge attention and to fill the farmer's heart with hopeful joy. It was a scheme for the appointment of a commission—a great national commission—to teach the poor, benighted farmer how to make farm life attractive; to send him a missionary to lead him out of the dark ways of his vocation. In vain I tried to persuade the Congress that the farmer knew just as much as any lecturer you could send him how to make his home attractive. In vain I declared that if you would assist him in making his business as profitable as city business, you could trust to his good common sense to make farm life just as attractive as city life; that it was a question of dollars and not of inclination or intelligence; that the attractiveness of any vocation depends almost wholly upon the remuneration from it; that circulating libraries would not dig potatoes or increase the price of grain. My appeal was in vain. You passed your bill for a commission. That commission did its work and the farmer paid his proportion of its expense. Its report to-day lies mummified in the archives of the country, waiting the day of resurrection. And here, as before, you did not deceive the farmer. He knew it was a mere sop and, as before, he just simply kept on plowing.

And so I might go on citing bills and resolutions by the score which have been introduced proposing to do this and that for the welfare of the agricultural people of the country, bills and resolutions that would make farm life so enticing that the overcrowded cities would find relief for their congested population.

Mr. President, you have done everything but the right thing. I have pointed out the right thing to do again and again. It is a simple proposition. I have said what you all well know, that the drift of population will always be to the field of greatest remuneration for a given amount of expended energy; the greatest comforts, conveniences, and pleasures that can be secured for a given number of hours of labor. And I have further insisted that just so long as the average earnings in city trades and professions are three or four times greater than the average farm earnings, not only will the people who are now in the cities remain there but the sons and daughters of our American farmers will abandon the calling of their fathers and drift to the cities.

Let me put this question straight to you who profess such a deep interest in the welfare of the farming population: Are you willing that the farmer shall be able, after paying himself and his family city wages for their services, to declare a dividend upon his investment in lands, stock, and machinery equal to the average dividends declared on city business investments? If you will stand with me and extend to the American farmer that equal justice, we will solve the back-to-the-farm movement. There is no use saying this can not be done. Mr. President, it can be done. Just throw around the American farmer the same protection you have in the past accorded to the manufacturer; just raise the protection wall around food products until the price which the farmer shall receive for the things he produces will assure him a compensation that will enable him to pay city wages for all of his labor, including that of himself and his family and still declare a dividend on his investment. Or if you think he is not entitled to the same treatment, to the same profits as the banker or the merchant, then give him such protection as will enable him to earn as much, hour for hour, as the carpenter in the city.

I know your usual answer: "The farmer does not spend as much as the city resident, therefore does not need to earn as much." But, Mr. President, that is an unjust answer. He is entitled to spend as much; he is entitled to the same pleasures and amusements; he is entitled to take his family to the theaters; he is entitled to indulge his tastes; he is entitled to everything that belongs to twentieth-century living, the same as the average urban population. He surrenders no inherent human right by following agricultural pursuits. Now, the only way you can secure him those conditions is to make his business pay as great a remuneration as the other important occupations.

But whenever you observe the farmer receiving for his produce a price that will place him on an equal plane with his city brethren, you are filled with apprehension and consternation. To-day you are crying against the price of wheat and flour. I received a postal the other day from New York printed in big, black letters, "Place an embargo on the exportation of wheat and check the greed of the avaricious farmer." The man who had money enough to send that postal all over the United States was probably receiving from 25 to 50 per cent interest on whatever he may have invested in business. The farmer who may have received $1 per bushel for his wheat may have netted $1 per day for his work and no dividend on his investment.

I have stated again and again, and proved my statements, that taking into account the number of hours of labor performed by the American farmers and their children, and leaving out of consideration entirely the amount invested in their farming operations, they are the poorest paid labor in the United States.

Let me ask you, Will $1.50 a bushel for wheat enable the farmer to pay his labor more than reasonable wages and declare more than a reasonable dividend on his investment? I know it will not, you ought to know it, and every man who owns an acre of farm land knows that it will not. Let me tell you right here and now that if the grain raiser should realize the same wages for his eight hours of labor that the mason in any large city receives, he must have more than $2 a bushel for his wheat, and the values of all other cereals must advance in like proportion. I am asking for this equality between farm labor and city labor.

Flour retails generally at from $2.25 to $2.50 per hundredweight. To-day the wholesale price in New York was about $3.75 per hundredweight. Even at this rate flour is the cheapest article that is served on the American table. It is still so unimportant, from the standpoint of expense, that the average restaurant makes no charge for bread whatever.

If people would just stop long enough to analyze their ordinary expenses and compare their flour bills with other expenses of city life, they would rid themselves of this everlasting fear lest flour might advance a few cents. I do not believe I could find 10 men in this city of more than 400,000 people who would have the slightest idea what they pay annually for the flour used in their families or how much each one of them consumes. I wish I could secure the attention of the average citizen of the great city just long enough to impress upon him that he consumes only about one barrel of flour a year; that this barrel of flour can generally be purchased for about $6.50. It can probably be purchased to-day at retail for, say, about $8. I want him to realize that what he pays for just one theater ticket for the cheapest, flattest kind of play, will purchase all the flour he consumes in three months; that the tip which he throws to the waiter for a single meal will pay for all the bread he will consume in a week; that he pays four or five times as much for his cigars as he does for his flour; that he submits to extortionate charges everywhere with stolid indifference, but if his flour bill is increased 10 cents a month he grows hysterical.

Mr. President, when the new administration came into power, it came laden with a mighty promise on its hands to both the farmer and the laborer. It promised to play one against the other for their mutual advantage. The farmer was to have higher prices for his food products and the rest of the people were all to have cheaper food products. And as a complement to this absurd promise the laborer was to receive greater wages in the production of articles that were to be sold to the farmer, and yet the farmer was to secure goods produced by that laborer at a less price. You began the fulfillment of your promise. Coincidently laborers began to be discharged by the thousands and all forms of farm products started on a downward toboggan slide, and Heaven knows where they would have landed had not the stern god of war intervened in the Old World and, by filling it with blood and carnage, checking and destroying its productive capacity, created a demand for our goods. The war upset the natural consequences of this duplicity, and by setting most of the civilized world murdering each other created an enormous demand for our food products and a feverish demand for many manufactured products and saved the country from the impending curse of free trade.

But, Mr. President, this war can not last forever. There is a bottom to the treasury chest and a limit to the credit of these nations. What then will happen?

Have you Senators stopped to consider the first process in the rehabilitation of the devastated countries of Europe? How will those destroyed factories in Belgium, France, and Gallicia and elsewhere be restored? Not only are the factories in ruins, but the commerce which flowed from them is gone. How long will it take to bring them into existence again? All wealth, Mr. President, must first be lured or dug from the earth. In the famished condition of the Old World its people will first seek the shortest possible means of producing wealth. It will take years to build the factories and regain the commerce. On the other hand, practically all kinds of crops can be raised in 90 days. When this war is over this most speedy method of rehabilitation will manifest itself in an enormous increase in acreage planted for the harvesting of food crops. That means a mighty surplus, a surplus that must be forced upon an impoverished people whose first thought will be economy. That means just what it meant shortly after our Civil War, when in a comparatively short time, wheat dropped from $3 to 50 cents per bushel. It means cheaper cereals when this war is over.

We ought to prepare to meet that situation. How can we do it? There is but one proper way—protection. Give the American market to the American farmer to the extent that he is able to supply that market at a just and fair profit. Put up the bars of protection high enough to assure him simple justice. This, Mr. President, is the first great duty we owe the American farmer. He would get more real benefit out of this protection in a single year than he would get out of any rural credits bill in half a century. Undo the wrong you did to him in 1913, when you put practically everything he raised on the free list and compelled him to compete with the whole world. So long as this war lasts he will escape the great loss which is the natural result of your unjust and unequal policy. But when this war closes, great losses will surely overtake him. You will not do this, but you say you will give him something else which may divert his mind awhile; you will concentrate his mind on a shining quarter while you are relieving his pockets of a $10 bill.

And so, Mr. President, we are met again with a proposal to give the farmer a rural credits bill. Is it like all the other proposals, to fade away into nothingness? Do you really want to give the farmer a rural credits bill that will be of real and substantial benefit? I am certain the bill reported from the committee, no matter how well intended, will not be a success. It depends too much upon the philanthropic sentiment in business, which I have never yet been able to discover. There is no philanthropy in the business world. People do not go into business for other people's benfit; second, it is too complex, too cumbersome. It requires too much red tape to answer the farmer's demands. I have an abiding conviction that it is not fitted to the farm conditions of the United States; that it will be but another one of those impracticable theories that have from time to time been thrown out to the farmers.

I have drafted a substitute which I believe will meet their demands, and meet them in a simple and effective way.

My substitute requires no new, complex, or untried system. It is based upon the theory that there is sufficient money in this country ready and eager for investment at 4½ per cent on long-time securities. The vast deposits in savings banks, the investments of life insurance companies, of trustees, and trust companies show that a 10 or 20 year Government debenture bearing 4½ per cent would be taken as rapidly as it could be issued.

Now, what is the procedure under my substitute?

A farmer in my State wants to borrow, say, a thousand dollars on his land. He goes to a bank he has been in the habit of dealing with, executes a 5 per cent interest coupon note and mortgage, and accompanies them with an abstract showing good title in him and an application for loan, giving full description of the land, amount under cultivation, character of soil, kind and value of improvements, and any other matter that may indicate his ability to raise crops and to meet the interest. That application and the values are verified by two neighbors. The banker knows him, knows the land, and the value of the security. In nine cases out of ten if the farmer wishes the money on that very day, the banker will advance it to him, as he would be secured by the mortgage in his possession. The banker is the agent of the Government, and as such, held to great care in appraisals, will be very careful that the loan does not exceed the half of the actual value of the land and that it fully meets the requirements of the law. The application, mortgage, note, and abstract will then be sent to the Treasury Department; the abstract of title will be examined; the application and appraisement will be carefully scanned not only to ascertain that the value is unquestionable, but that the applicant is possessed of everything necessary to produce crops on that land to meet the annual interest. If everything is found to be correct, the papers will be returned to the bank with a draft, the mortgage will be recorded, and the draft turned over to the borrower.

That is all the borrower will have to do—no more than he has to do to-day if he wants a loan.

When the interest becomes due the borrower will pay at this particular bank, which is the Government's collecting agency. If his crops have not yet been fully harvested, or if he is too busy plowing to market them, this bank will advance the money for its customer.

Under the working of this law the borrower will be brought into touch with and become the customer of the bank.

Everything connected with the transaction is simple and in the ordinary course of dealing between banker and farmer. There is no red tape, no complex system of primary associations, secondary associations, of side banks, underbanks and overbanks, of horizontal or perpendicular supervision, management, inspection, or investigation.

There is no responsibility of one farmer for the delinquency of another, no requirement for an investment or for buying the stock in a corporation which may or may not pay dividends, and probably will not, in order to secure a loan.

After the Treasury Department has received a number of these mortgages—and remember they will be maturing at odd times, and as new ones are taken in they will become payable year after year—the next step will be very simple. The Government will issue its debenture bearing 4½ per cent, due in 20 years, with the privilege of paying in 10. This privilege is to meet any change in the system that might possibly be agreed upon in the future. The difference between the rate which the farmer pays on his loan, 5 per cent, and the rate of the debenture, 4½ per cent, or one-half of 1 per cent, will cover all the expenses of the Government.

The Government, in effect only a guarantor, then sells this debenture at par to investors. The guaranty of the Government is adequately secured, not only by the farm property, which is a security two dollars for one, but in addition it has the personal responsibility of the mortgagor. With such a margin there could be no possibility of governmental loss.

As the amount advanced by the Government to the farmer will be immediately repaid into the Treasury by the investor who purchases the debenture, the whole scheme can be worked with practically no investment on the part of the Government.

Now, Mr. President, if you really want to help the farmer, if you really want to give him relief from what you say are excessive loan rates, if you want to provide a workable scheme to accomplish this result, simple and sure, you have the opportunity in adopting the measure which I have offered as a substitute.

It may be said that this substitute crowds too closely to the line of paternalism. I am compelled to admit that it does come close to that line, but it remains on this side. It does not pass the line. I wish the relief might be obtained without coming so close to the border line. The only thing paternalistic about it, however, is that when the farmer places in the hands of the Government securities, mortgages on his farm, which is at least twice the value of the loan, the Government will assist him to float that mortgage—that is, put it in a form in which it can be made the basis of a continuous credit—in other words, give to him the guaranty of the Government that he may assure to the investor the highest class of investment, from the standpoint of security, of both principal and interest, and assure to the agriculturists of the country reasonable rates, the Government's main duty being to bring investor and farmer together. It is not asking the Government to loan to the farmer, because, in effect, the Government is broker rather than lender.

Certainly those who have been courageous enough to support a measure for Government ownership and operation of railways in Alaska, or Government operation of ships in our foreign trade, or of the Government buying up all the surplus cotton in the United States need have no timidity about supporting a measure of this character. These measures were all clearly paternalistic. My substitute does not come within miles of the paternalistic features of these bills. But if I wanted to find precedent for this bill I would have little difficulty in doing so. Take, for instance, the guaranteeing of the Philippine railway bonds which the Congress voted some years ago. Surely it seems to me that if this Government could not only lend its aid but could guarantee bonds of a railway company, which bonds may represent the total cost of the system; if it can do this for people who are not American citizens, it certainly does seem to me that it ought not to hesitate to guarantee a million dollars' worth of farm mortgages, supported by $2,000,000 worth of actual farm value, and the personal liability of the owners of these $2,000,000 worth of farms, for the benefit of the agriculturists of the United States. The only difference between the two cases is that in one case the power was exercised for the benefit of the capitalist; in this case I am asking it for the farmer. In the one case it is placed upon property that may or may not pay, and may be destroyed. In this case it is placed upon property which must pay out, and which is indestructible.

It is quite a common thing for farmers to pay from 7 to 12 per cent interest. But when interest gets that high in the cities when the business men must pay that much there has always been a great demand that the Government deplete its Treasury that its gold might be placed at the disposal of these business men for the purpose of reducing interest charges. That has been done every time we have had any character of disturbance in our great cities. They come to the Treasury Department of the United States for gold to be paid over to these great cities, that they may use it in the banks there to bring down interest. And by the new banking system which we have just adopted, when such condition as that arises in the cities provision is made to issue Federal reserve currency, to inflate and debase the purchasing value of money to protect business against excessive interest rates.

Now, we are simply asking that without any expediture on the part of the Government, without any inflation of the currency, we shall assist the farmer in securing lower rates on his long-time farm security paper. I have no faith whatever in the bill authorized by the committee. I am sure that my substitute would work successfully.

It has been suggested that this substitute might operate as an interference with and to the detriment of the country banks which lend to farmers. That is not true. If there is anything that the country bank is interested in it is that the farmers shall be prosperous. Wherever you can find a prosperous farming community you will find prosperous country banks, and the reverse is also true. Whatever the farmer saves in this interest on his lands he will find a place for its investment. It will encourage him in the purchase of other lands, in greater development, in new buildings and improvements, all of which will demand assistance from the banks.

I have not in my measure touched upon general bankable farmers' paper. I have refrained from that in this bill because the proposition is new and untried. We ought to observe the operation of the system as it affects absolutely secure paper before we venture further, and make it cover less reliable paper. I believe the success of this measure will justify its extension to cover the whole field of farm paper. But let us take one step at a time in any new and untried field.

I call attention also to two features in my provision which will operate to the advantage of the bank: First, it makes the farmer seeking the loan the customer of that bank; second, it gives the bank a fair remuneration for drafting papers, examining abstracts, and remitting collections. In my opinion it will work to the advantage of these banks.

Mr. President, a great number of bills have been introduced of late years, and especially during this Congress, providing for some form of rural credits. They include a vast number of systems, ranging from the simple paternalistic provision that the Government shall loan directly to every farmer wishing to borrow on any kind of security he may offer to the most elaborate and complex provisions, requiring a new system of banks, subbanks, and societies as extensive as the Federal reserve banking system. The purpose of all of those is undoubtedly beneficent and indicate not only a desire to make agriculture a more important feature of our industrial economy, but also to assure a greater return upon farm operations.

I do not wish to criticize or undervalue the labor bestowed by the committee on this most important subject. They have labored faithfully to formulate a great comprehensive scheme that will enable farmers to borrow money from time to time to operate their farms, and to borrow at a lower rate of interest than they are now usually compelled to pay. But their system is not only too complex and too cumbersome, but to a considerable extent is based upon erroneous assumptions. The framework of the structure now offered, relieved of the vast amount of conditions and provisions, is about this:

I wish first to briefly describe the bill which I understand has received the sanction of the committee, and then show why that bill is not workable, wherein it is too complex and will be of no benefit to the farming public.

There is first the Federal Reserve Board, already provided for by law, which is to be the financial head of their proposed new system, a system which must either be enormous or nothing. This board appoints a farm-loan commissioner and other officers and assistants. There shall then be created farm-loan associations who are not mere borrowers, but who are to carry on the business of loaning on farm-mortgage security. These associations are presumed to cover a number of counties. Then the farm-loan commissioner is to determine whether there is any need for such an association where it is organized; and if he thinks there is no such need he has a right to refuse incorporation. This association is a corporation with capital stock, with the usual corporate powers. This association must have a board of directors. Its capital stock must be not less than $10,000. Its funds for making farm loans are to be obtained in the first instance from the sale of its stock.

The next step in the system is a Federal land bank operating within a prescribed district. At least 10 per cent of the capital stock of the association must be invested in United States bonds. In order for a farmer to become a borrower he must first become a member of an association and purchase stock, or he can pay for his stock with a mortgage if he desires. This association must elect two members to serve as members of an appraisal committee and the Federal land bank must select a third. This loan association shall have power to make the loans to farmer members, secured by first mortgages within the loan district, and to purchase from other loan associations first mortgages.

The mortgage given by the farmer must contain an agreement for the reduction of the face of the loan so secured through annual amortization payments, mortgages to run from 5 to 30 years. The farmer borrowing must bond himself to use the money only for certain specified purposes—to pay debts already incurred, to pay for improvements, to provide for the purchase of a farm, or for the purchase of equipment. He can not use it to send his boy to a high school or a member of his family to the hospital. The loan is limited to $4,000, and not to exceed 20 per cent of the capital and surplus of the association.

The Federal Reserve Board has power to charter the Federal land banks or to refuse a Federal land bank. This bank is to issue its debentures secured by the farm mortgages to maintain the fund for loaning purposes, and the capital must be at least $500,000.

There are two classes of stock—"A" and "B." Class "A" may be held by individuals, corporations, or the Government; class "B" by national farm-loan associations. Provision is made for division of profits, and so forth.

There are a great many other provisions, unnecessary to describe here. The complexity of the bill is evidenced by the fact that it requires 48 pages to set out its provisions. There are other bills along the same line, some requiring joint credits; that is, every member of the association must become responsible for the entire bonded obligations of all its members.

Mr. President, I want to say to those who have labored so honestly and so earnestly and have taken so many volumes of testimony that I do not think the bill reported is applicable to the farm conditions; and I think it is so complex, and so many different requirements are provided for in the bill, that the farmers of the country will not take to it as an easy means of securing what they may desire.

I might briefly here state some of the reasons why in this country the usual farm-credits systems of Europe, from which these bills are mostly copied, would not be applicable and would be failures.

First. The American farmer is either by nature or by custom entirely independent of all of his neighbors. He does not live in communities as in Europe.

Second. He is disinclined to in any way take part in an organization affecting the entire agricultural class. He goes about his own business solely, and has no inclination to attend to the business of others.

Third. He is averse to any kind of liability other than his own liability. He would rather not sign the note of his neighbor, much less would he want to become responsible for all the farmers in his adjoining counties.

Fourth. He does not hold his land for life as in Europe. His land is always for sale; he is ready to dispose of it any time he deems it to his advantage to do so, and equally ready to reinvest in other lands. He is as ready, as a rule, to sell his real estate as he is his personal property, provided he gets his price, and he does not want that right limited.

Fifth. He is opposed to long mortgages; being hopeful and energetic, he wants to pay off his debt whenever he can and in whatever installments he and his creditor can agree upon.

Sixth. While a great many loan companies provide in farm mortgages that the farmer may pay any multiple of the entire debt on any interest-paying day, it is a fact that very few, indeed, ever take advantage of it, but prefer to invest what money they may have and depend upon paying the entire sum at the time it becomes due, or reborrow for whatever may be necessary. That I have found to be universally the rule, at least in the Northwest.

Seventh. And, most important of all, the American farmer does not want any red-tape business connected with his proceedings. He wants a simple method whereby he can borrow at once, or get the money at least in a few days, and be able to pay at once and get his release.

In every one of the aforesaid respects he probably differs from the European farmer. Those differences are sufficient to make unworkable any European system in the United States.

There is the same difference between the American and the European business man that there is between the American and the European farmer. This bill reported from the committee depends upon the philanthropic sentiment of American business men. It assumes that there will be found competent business men who will be willing to work for a small salary and take charge of a business in which there is no opportunity to add to the earnings of the parties operating. It is enough to say that this is not the American spirit. Men who are competent to operate a business of that kind are all out in the field of enterprise, buoyed by the hope of amassing a fortune. I do not believe you could get safe and reliable men to put their capital into this enterprise, either in the land bank or in the associations. Mr. President, I invite the Democratic Members, who are responsible for the legislation, to help carry out the one meritorious plank in their platform, and that is the plank relating to rural credits.

I hope the Senators will allow this amendment to go upon the agricultural bill, where it properly belongs, because it is a measure presupposed to be for the benefit of the farming public; and I am certain that when they take the time to look over the simple provisions which I have embodied in the offered substitute they will find that it is the best and, in my opinion, the only way in which we can secure a rural credits bill that will be workable in the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask my colleague a question. I have looked over the bill presented by him, and I wish to inquire of him if it provides for any personal loans, or simply for loans on real estate?

Mr. McCUMBER. As I stated, this provides only for loans on real estate. I did not desire to go too far until we had had an opportunity to test out this new system on paper that was unquestionably good, and would make a solid foundation, as good as gold itself, to float Government debentures that would go into the hands of the ordinary investor.

Mr. GRONNA. I used the term "real estate." I perhaps should have used the expression "farms."

Mr. McCUMBER. This is farm loans only. It covers no other real estate.

Mr. GRONNA. The reason why I ask the question is that in a bill which I introduced some time ago there was a section which provided for short-term loans, and I might want to offer that as an amendment. It is a brief section.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it might or might not be in harmony with this. I do not know.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOLLIS. As the chairman of the Subcommittee on Rural Credits, which prepared and introduced the bill to which the Senator from North Dakota has referred as the committee bill, I think I ought to make a short statement.

The Senator is in error in saying that the bill has been reported. It has not been reported. It has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Banking and Currency Committee has held many meetings and is still considering the bill. A short time ago the Senator from North Dakota called my attention to the bill which he has just discussed and I have examined it carefully. No one would be more rejoiced than I if it would work. It would have this result, that over $2,000,000 of farm mortgages would be taken by the Government and the Government would issue its bonds for the money which it loaned to the farmers. The paternalistic feature would not frighten me at all if it would work, but the bill has two objectionable features which would prevent its working.

In the first place, it would allow any three farmers who put their heads together to place an enhanced value on their farms and make mortgages to present to any State or national bank authorized under the bill and obtain loans, which would not be safe. That feature of the bill might be amended so that the loans could be more carefully appraised and examined.

But another feature of the bill, the second one to which I wish to refer, seems to be vital. We should have the Government of the United States loaning directly to farmers over $2,000,000,000, and there would probably never be an instance where the Government would foreclose. Experience has shown that where the Government loans money to the States or to private individuals it does not collect.

If I were assured that the loans could be made safe and the Government would collect when the loans became due, I should not be at all afraid of the paternalistic feature, but after the discussions that have been had in the Senate in the past two years I am satisfied that a majority of the Senate, as well as a majority of the House of Representatives, is opposed to a paternalistic feature of this kind. We have had numerous objections. The objection was raised on the Alaskan railway bill to the amount of the investment there where there was no constitutional feature, but it was strictly limited. Under the ship-purchase bill that has been debated the amount of investment is strictly limited. There is no limit here. The loans of all the farmers of the country exceed $2,000,000,000, and if they could borrow from the Government where they knew they would not be pressed, where they could borrow as under this bill at a fixed maximum rate of 5 per cent, there would be practically no limit. It would lead to an inflation of farm values and to speculation of which no man can see the end.

Therefore, Mr. President, although thoroughly with the object of the bill and while I wish that it could work, I feel obliged to raise the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, allow me to answer the Senator before he makes that point of order. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I fear he has not read over all the provisions of the bill very carefully. He said that it would require the Government to loan $2,000,000 to the farmers. Under the provisions of the bill the Government never issues a debenture until it first has the mortgage. On this debenture it secures money to cover its investment. That balances its cash account. The Government is not out a penny in the transaction. If the Government has a million dollars' worth of farm paper, secured on $2,000,000 worth of farm lands, maturing at different times, the Government debenture would bring the cash back to the Government vaults. Therefore there would be, as I said, no investment whatever on the part of the Government, except practically advancing the money on a particular farm loan. It would be exactly as any broker who is dealing in farm mortgages. He may handle farm mortgages to the amount of $500,000,000 a year, and yet he may not invest or advance a quarter of a million in those farm investments.

Now, as to the other danger, the danger of farmers getting together and overvaluing those farms, not only must an application be made which will require a full statement of all the conditions, which will show that the loan is absolutely secure, which will show the value, which will show what kind of crops can and are being raised, which will show that the borrower will raise crops to cover interest and principal; that application will be verified by neighbors who live in the vicinity. In addition to that, the banker becomes the agent of the Government, and he must also make his estimates, and for any abuse of the duties of an agent the banker himself would be responsible under the terms of the bill. This method of making loans has always worked well in private practice, and there is no reason to believe that it would not work equally well if the Government is a party to the transaction.

In preparing these provisions I have followed that which is customary in our State and customary throughout the Northwest. An application is made. That application is signed by the farmer. He gives all the information that is required. It is verified generally by two persons who know the value of the land. It is then submitted to the party who wishes to make the loan, and he can refuse it or he can accept it. The Government would have means, through its inspector, a Government bank inspector and other inspectors of the Government, to know the value of the lands in every section of the United States, and they would not be imposed upon unless they were themselves inefficient.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is provided in the bill of the Senator, on page 4, that the bank shall examine the title and give a certified opinion of the value; but the bank is not made responsible except in cases of neglect, which would have to be proved. The bank does not guarantee the loan. The bank does not indorse the loan. So much for that.

On the other point, the only place where the Government could get money to loan to farmers would be through bonds. When it issues bonds it becomes liable to pay them when due, whether the mortgages are paid or not. So it is very clear that the Government has to borrow the money. It has the mortgages as security, but it must first collect them, and experience has shown, where the scheme has been tried in other places, that when mortgages become due and payable the Government does not foreclose and does not collect. It would make a great deal of trouble for the administration in power which undertook to do that.

Mr. President, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 on page 81.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, strike out lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, naval stores investigations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this item was placed in the appropriation bill for the first time a year ago. The department had in view and recommended the appropriation at that time for the purpose of preparing definite type samples of naval stores. That has been accomplished, and there is no necessity whatever for this appropriation. It only emphasizes the statement I made yesterday that whenever an appropriation is put in one of the general appropriation bills for any purpose, and it is generally put in for some immediate purpose, it is never excluded from future appropriation bills. I move to strike it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one other amendment I wish to offer, and then I am through.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I did not understand the vote taken. The amendment upon which it was taken was to strike out the item of $5,000 for naval stores investigations?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It struck out the appropriation of $5,000 for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 63 of the bill, lines 14, 15, 16, and 17, there is an appropriation of $386,080, as follows:

For farmers' cooperative demonstration work outside of the cotton belt, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $386,080.

Following that is an appropriation of $666,620, as follows:

For farmers' cooperative demonstrations and for the study and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $666,620.

I have received many telegrams from different parts of the United States, and also letters upon these two items. I will read one telegram, which is a fair sample of the many that I have received, and it also covers the same point that the letters do. The telegram is as follows:

LOGAN, UTAH, February 22, 1915.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We are informed that in appropriation bill soon to be considered the Office of Farmers' Cooperative Demonstrations of Northern and Western States is to receive $400,000 for work in 33 States, and that the same office for work in 15 Southern States is to receive $625,000, despite critical agricultural condition of South. This division of funds seems unjust, inasmuch as the appropriations to office mentioned help us directly in employing extension workers in Utah and other Western States. We are directly concerned in having western territory given full consideration.

E. G. PETERSON.

I will ask the Senator having in charge the bill whether these complaints were considered by the committee at the time the amount of the appropriation was agreed upon.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that no complaints of that character came to my attention and none came addressed to the committee. I will say further that no complaint was brought to the attention of the committee by any member of the committee.

The Senator, of course, is well aware that this appropriation for the eradication of the boll weevil has been of increasing growth and progress for a number of years. It received a great deal of attention at the hands of Secretary Wilson, formerly Secretary of Agriculture, and it has resulted in almost incalculable advantage to that section.

There are several reasons why the South needed this appropriation as compared and contrasted with other sections. Agriculture was not so well advanced in that section. The appropriation to carry on demonstration work in other sections of the country, I believe, has been carried now, this is the third year, and I suppose is largely an innovation from the sentiment which the telegram just read reflects. I think, perhaps, it is being carried on in some States where it is needed and where the science of agriculture has been carried to a very high degree, I might say to perfection; but a sort of sentiment prevailing here and elsewhere that these favors, if I may call them favors, or this consideration, if I may call it consideration, ought to be in a way balanced, has given rise to an appropriation of some four hundred and some odd thousand dollars for conducting demonstration work in other parts of the country.

I know of no general complaint, and I think that those who understand it perhaps really would not cherish the sentiment of section which may be indicated by this telegram.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the letters I have received have been dated within the last few days as are also the telegrams that I have received. The very first one was dated February 22, and they are generally from agricultural colleges in the Middle West and the West.

Mr. GORE. I will say, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Just one word and then I will yield.

I think that the reason why the Senator has not received any protest or why no protests were presented to the committee at the time the bill was under consideration was owing to the fact that they really did not know what the appropriations were until after the bill had been reported to the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I will say these amounts are in about the same proportion contained in the Agricultural bill last year. These are both House items, and, I imagine, from the fact that the complaints have been coming for only a few days—and I take it from what the Senator suggests they are pretty much the same date—undoubtedly an emanation which has been concerted and suggested by some particular source. Of course, I have no means of knowing that. But I call the attention of the Senator further to the Smith-Lever bill. I believe it distributes this year $1,000,000 equitably and equally among various States; that is, $1,000,000 to conduct demonstration work, inspection work, on a fixed standard of apportionment that is just and undiscriminating as between the several States.

Mr. SMOOT. I fully understand that. Of course, the law provided that at the time of its passage. It has been suggested to me that the $386,080 ought to be increased to $450,000 and the appropriation of $666,020 ought to be decreased to $550,000, but if the Senator will state that that would be unfair to any section of the country or any State——

Mr. GORE. I think it would be.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly do not want to do anything that would in any way do an injustice to any State in the Union.

Mr. GORE. I think it would be, for the reason that in the South, where this $666,020 is provided for, the work has been a matter of gradual evolution, covering now some 10 or 12 years. It has been expanded, and the appropriation has grown with the expanding service and, I think, is coterminous with the service. I think the appropriation for other sections of the country was a large appropriation. Perhaps that began so or it soon became so, and it is being gradually worked out. I have no doubt the department is extending the work as rapidly as can be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the theory then of this appropriation is that there should be an increase each year?

Mr. GORE. I think the two considerations ought to control the state of the Treasury and the actual needs of the service, according to the recommendation or estimates of the department. My own individual view is that the appropriation at least for the South must have approached the maximum.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator to suggest that I have not heard anybody in the South protesting against the millions of dollars being expended for the prevention of the foot-and-mouth disease, the hog cholera, and that sort of thing in the West and Northwest?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, if the disease prevailed in the South, no one would ever think of protesting.

Mr. FLETCHER. But it happens not to be in the South.

Mr. SMOOT. But I say, if it were a disease of that character in the South there would be no one to object. I want also to say to the Senator from Florida that I did not introduce this question as a sectional matter. I do not care for what section of the country money is appropriated, if it be absolutely necessary. I know very well that the boll weevil in the South has been a menace to that part of our country, and ever since I have been in the Senate I have cheerfully voted to appropriate money for the purpose of enabling the Agricultural Department to eliminate as far as possible that menace upon the farmers of the South. Therefore I hardly think the suggestion of the Senator ought to——

Mr. FLETCHER. The suggestion was made in response to the suggestion in the telegram which the Senator had read.

Mr. SMOOT. I read the telegram; but, in reading it, I did not even question the appropriation of $660,000 because it went to the Southern States. I never mentioned that fact, and did not intend to mention it, and did not have it in mind. I suppose the senders of the telegram felt that, if the demonstration work in 15 States of the South was appropriated for to the extent of $660,000, at least the other 33 States for demonstration work ought to be equally well treated. I did not, however, take that position, nor do I take it now. I want to say that if it is absolutely necessary that the appropriation of $660,000 be made for this purpose, I am not going to object; but I did ask the Senator having the bill in charge if this question had been brought before the committee for consideration, and if so, to what extent had the committee considered the propriety of the appropriation for the other 33 States. That is all I asked, and that is all about which I intended to inquire.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will remember that the appropriation for demonstration work in the Northern States is about the same as the appropriation previously carried for the Southern States prior to the elimination of the Rockefeller endowment fund. That occasioned a deficit, which has been met out of the General Treasury.

I wish to say at this time that I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from Utah that he alluded to this in no sectional spirit. I did not apprehend that he did, and I did not imagine that any Senator could be animated by a sectional spirit with reference to a service so important, not only to different sections, but to the entire country.

We make generous appropriations to exterminate the brown-tail moth, the gypsy moth of New England, not because it is New England, but because those particular pests happen to prevail in that section. We increased by $190,000 the appropriation to exterminate wolves in the Rocky Mountain States, not because of those States particularly, but because those pests happen to exist in that section. We have made generous appropriations to eradicate hog cholera in the great agricultural section where hogs are raised extensively and where the disease happens to prevail as a calamity. We make appropriations to exterminate the boll weevil in the South, because cotton is raised in that section and that particular insect prevails in that region, and we make appropriations for the eradication of the potato disease in Maine. All over this country wherever such troubles exist the committee and the Congress have responded generously.

It is an eternal monument to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, a stalwart and admirable Republican, that he instituted this work and this service in the South and made no corresponding extension of the work in the Northern States, disregarding entirely all sectional considerations. I say that is to his enduring honor.

For my own part, if any of these appropriations ever come to be made or apportioned upon sectional lines, for one I shall resist them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not offer the amendment I suggested. I simply wanted to call attention to the matter and to secure the information which I have secured, so that I could intelligently answer the telegrams and letters received upon this point.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 6, on page 61, it is proposed to insert:

Until otherwise ordered the Maltby Building and all the buildings on the west side of New Jersey Avenue between B and C Streets NW., in the city of Washington, D. C., belonging to the Government may be used for governmental purposes by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope no Senator will make a point of order against the amendment. It follows the appropriation of $123,689 for rents in the District of Columbia. It seems to me that inasmuch as the amendment is not compulsory, but provides that the officers of the Agricultural Department may examine the property and see whether or not it is available for the purposes of the department, I hope no point of order will be made against the amendment. It would save the Government at least $520,000 per annum.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the hope of the Senator from Colorado is admirable, I know, but my experience has been in the past that even where we have provided additional space for a department it has not reduced by one cent the amount of rent that was formerly paid. If this amendment were adopted, I say now there would be some bureaus of the department, perhaps one of them, put into the Maltby Building; but there would not be one cent less paid for rentals than the department is now paying for the other bureaus.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the department would have more room and less excuse for asking for the rental of additional buildings.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Colorado will join me in the future, when we come to appropriate money for the rent of private buildings, we will make such provision that the departments will not be permitted to increase their rentals until they have proved beyond question that it is absolutely necessary that they should have more room.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Maltby Building is about to be destroyed. This amendment is not permanent. It says "until otherwise ordered." If that building is destroyed, together with the other buildings facing New Jersey Avenue, it will leave the most unsightly buildings facing that court or that alley to the back, and it will not make nearly so good a showing for the park itself as the Maltby Building and those buildings facing the east side of New Jersey Avenue.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the Art Commission, as I remember, has passed upon this plan, and it has been adopted by Congress. There is no question as to what was intended to be done at the time Congress passed upon the proposition. Therefore I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me call the attention of the Senator to this plat [exhibiting] which has been made of the property to be condemned. Here [indicating] is the Capitol Building at this point; here [indicating] is the Union Station, and the property which has been condemned is between Delaware Avenue and New Jersey Avenue. Then, here [indicating] is the block or half block, which is not near the northwest corner of the Capitol Grounds; it has no connection with the park scheme, and no connection with the vista that exists between the Capitol and the Union Station. It is composed of buildings that are respectable in appearance, some of them are very nice-looking buildings, whereas the buildings on the alley, or little street called Arthur Place, are not good at all. There is a shop back there which is a galvanized-iron place but one story in height. The other buildings are very small. Then there is a building in this very block which has been condemned, a school building, which can be utilized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have this bill passed at once, and in order to save time I will withdraw my point of order and let the whole matter go to conference. If the conferees see proper to adopt it, well and good.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, yesterday evening, while I happened to be temporarily absent from the Senate Chamber, there was an amendment, on page 54, relating to the improvement of Sullys Hill National Park, which the Senate adopted. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asked a question which was directed to me, as I find from the RECORD, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was kind enough to explain it, but not so fully as I think it should have been explained. I shall not take the time of the Senate to explain it; but I have here two short letters from the Agricultural Department which fully explain it, and I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD, in order to give the committee of conference and Senators such information on the subject as they may desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, February 13, 1915.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR GRONNA: Referring to your communication of February 11 relative to an additional appropriation for the establishment of a game preserve on Sullys Hill National Park, I find on looking into this matter that a bill was introduced by you at the last session of Congress providing for an appropriation of $10,000 to build the necessary fence, trails, etc., for establishing the game preserve, and that it was referred to this department for comment and returned with the statement that if it was the desire of Congress to improve this park and use it as a game preserve it would require at least $10,000. As you know, the bill introduced by you was afterwards made a paragraph of the Agricultural appropriation bill and passed the Senate carrying an appropriation of $10,000, which was reduced by the conference committee to $5,000, to be available until expended.

Bids were advertised for the construction of a woven-wire fence, 88 inches in height, on the basis of the fence complete and in place. When the bids were opened it was found that the lowest bid submitted for the construction of the fence was $8,258.88, or an average of $1,179.84 per mile. So far practically nothing has been done to start the word. If the Congress deems it advisable to carry out this project, it will require at least an additional $5,000 to build the fence and construct the necessary trails, corrals, etc. It is doubtful whether it would be possible with this sum to construct the necessary sheds, buildings, and other structures. For your information I am inclosing herewith a copy of a letter which was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate last year regarding this matter.

Very truly, yours, D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

(Inclosure.)

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 27, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR GORE: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 24, 1914, inclosing a copy of a bill (S. 758) providing for the improvement of Sullys Hill National Park, and requesting a report thereon.

Sullys Hill National Park, comprising about 680 acres on the south side of Devils Lake, N. Dak., was established by act of Congress April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 328), but thus far little or nothing has been appropriated for its improvement. The park is partly wooded, well watered, and contains some excellent grazing grounds. The highest point on the reservation, Sullys Hill, has an elevation of about 1,000 feet above Devils Lake. The park is ample for the maintenance of a moderate number of the various kinds of big game native to the Northern Plains region, such as antelope, buffalo, elk, mule and white-tailed deer, and, if inclosed with a suitable fence, it will be well adapted for a preserve and will undoubtedly become a point of attraction to visitors from all parts of North Dakota and from other States. Its location on Devils Lake is easy of access, and the number of visitors would undoubtedly be greatly increased if the park were improved.

Experience in the Yellowstone National Park, the Wichita Game Preserve, and elsewhere has clearly demonstrated the importance of having several herds of buffalo and other big game located at widely separated points to prevent the spread of contagious diseases which are likely to break out from time to time.

Since this park was created Congress has provided similar preserves for the care of big game in several of the Western States, including the Wichita Game Preserve in Oklahoma, the National Bison Range in Montana, the Wind Cave Game Preserve in South Dakota, and the Niobrara Reservation in Nebraska. Sullys Hill Park is smaller than any of these and can be established and maintained at less cost. The department is prepared to transfer a small herd of elk to the park as soon as an inclosure is provided, and arrangements could doubtless be made for securing a few buffalo and other big game without cost to the Government other than the transportation of the animals. In addition to providing a center of distribution for stocking other parks with big game, it will also provide a refuge for native birds. It would seem, therefore, that the project is feasible, economical, and desirable.

Very truly, yours,

B. T. GALLOWAY,
Assistant Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, an amendment has been adopted, as in Committee of the Whole, on page 83, at the end of the printed bill, offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], making an appropriation of $500,000 for the building of lakes and reservoirs in the West. I wish to make a point of order against that appropriation that it has not been estimated for and that it is a new item of appropriation added to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the bill been reported to the Senate, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been. The Chair is of the opinion that unless the point of order was made as in Committee of the Whole it can not be made when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the ruling of the Chair, I accede to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think there can be no doubt that a point of order can be made both as in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate unless there is some new rule to the contrary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been decided a number of times otherwise. A separate vote on the question can be had in the Senate if it is desired.

Mr. THOMAS. I will not appeal from the ruling of the Chair, though my own opinion was to the contrary—that a point of order would lie against amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole when the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the rule provides that a question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings. I have never seen it questioned before, but there may be authority to the contrary. I think, however, the rule is plain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair quotes from Precedents, Decisions on Points of Order in the United States Senate, page 145, the decision which the Chair had in mind:

[Forty-fourth Congress, second session, February 21, 1877.]

* * * * * * * * *

The Chair (Mr. FERRY, President pro tempore) ruled that "in Committee of the Whole the Senate agreed to a certain amendment and like service embraced in the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. Therefore it is now a new proposition. The amount is not increased, nor is the nature of the service changed. The point of order was not made in Committee of the Whole, and it is too late to make it now." (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1743.)

That was the precedent upon which the Chair ruled. It may not be a good precedent.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently said: The Chair wishes that the reporter would go back to the place where the Chair ruled on the point of order, and let it be stated that the decision of the Chair was based on the ruling of President pro tempore Ferry, but that the Chair will not be bound by it in the future unless convinced that the ruling of the President pro tempore at that time was correct.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have accepted the decision of the Chair as final.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the bill was in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, on page 83, the amendment beginning in line 11 and concluding with line 20 was agreed to. I desired at that time to ask the Senator having the bill in charge to what purpose this land was to be put. The amendment provides that it is to be set aside "for use of the Department of Agriculture for experimental purposes."

Mr. GORE. It is a subhumid farming station, which is identical with a dry-farming station, except that it investigates both the wet and dry sides of the proposition at this particular place. It is to be a dry-farming station.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Agricultural College of Oklahoma conduct such experiments, or have they no experimental farm?

Mr. GORE. This is not for an experimental station. If that language is used, it ought not to be there.

Mr. SMOOT. It says "for experimental purposes."

Mr. GORE. It ought to read for a dry-farming or subhumid station. I suggest that change.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think that we ought to begin now to establish experimental stations in any State, inasmuch as we are making appropriations direct to the agricultural colleges for that particular purpose.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that it was an oversight; I did not notice that. I suggest the substitution of the words "dry-farming or subhumid station."

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what it is going to cost the Government each year after it is established?

Mr. GORE. I will say that it is of the same order as a number of other stations. There are a number of them throughout the Western States, probably one in the Senator's own State. There is one in the Panhandle of Texas, and also, I think, one in western Kansas and one in western Nebraska. There are several of these dry-farming stations, as the Senator knows and as he has observed from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the agricultural college of Utah has six of such stations in different parts of the State, but the Government of the United States does not pay anything for the purchase of the land, nor does it pay anything for the maintenance, with the exception of the general appropriation that is made to the agricultural college.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that if that be the case the State is carrying on a parallel series of experiment stations, I suppose. The United States Government has a number of these dry-farming stations throughout the arid and semi-arid portions of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. I did intend to make a point of order against it, but I do not know enough about it, nor can I find out enough about it to say whether it would be an injustice to the State or not; so I will let it be acted upon and go into conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to call up House bill 20975, the naval appropriation bill, and I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with amendments.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to say that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, which investigated this bill. I think they agreed on all the provisions in it.

I wish to say at the beginning that I feel that as the Senator in charge of the bill I should make points of order against propositions that are submitted that are subject to points of order, whether I favor the propositions or not.

I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for committee amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Pay, miscellaneous," on page 3, line 1, after the word "service," to insert "(hereafter subscriptions may be paid for in advance)," so as to read:

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of midshipmen while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for actual traveling expenses of female nurses; actual expenses of officers while on shore patrol duty; for rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards, including the rental of offices in the District of Columbia; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; religious books; expenses of purchasing paymasters' offices of the various cities, including clerks, furniture, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers and periodicals for the naval service (hereafter subscriptions may be paid for in advance).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 22, to insert:

There shall be a chief of naval operations, who shall be an officer on the active list of the Navy appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the officers of the line of the Navy not below the grade of captain for a period of four years, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, be charged with the operations of the fleet and with the preparation and readiness of plans for its use in war: Provided, That if an officer of the grade of captain be appointed chief of naval operations, he shall have the rank, title, and emoluments of a rear admiral while holding that position.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to ask whether that is a rear admiral of the first or second grade?

Mr. SWANSON. Not below the grade of captain. The language is:

He shall have the rank, title, and emoluments of a rear admiral while holding that position.

We thought he ought to have that title. It is a very responsible place, and he must have that title.

Mr. WARREN. But at what salary—at the salary of the higher grade or the lower grade?

Mr. SWANSON. He has the title of rear admiral while he occupies that position.

Mr. WARREN. But rear admirals, as I understand, are of two classes and have two different rates of pay—one that of major general and the other that of brigadier general.

Mr. LODGE. That is according to the time he is on the admirals' list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 9, to insert:

During the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations shall be next in succession to act as Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 21, after "$46,000," to insert "Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers involved, payments made under the appropriation 'Contingent, Navy,' to civilian employees appointed by the Navy Department for duty in and serving at naval stations maintained in the island possessions during the fiscal year 1916: Provided further, That the act 'To authorize and provide for the disposal of useless papers in the executive departments,' approved February 16, 1889, is hereby amended so that accumulations in the files of navy yards and naval stations that, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, are not needed or useful in the transaction of current business and have no permanent value or historical interest may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Navy by sale, after advertisement for proposals as waste paper if practicable, or if not practicable then otherwise as may appear best for the interests of the Government, the said Secretary to make detailed report to the Congress in every case of the papers destroyed; provided always that no papers less than two years old from the date of the last indorsement thereon shall be destroyed or disposed of by the Secretary of the Navy, except in the manner provided in said act of February 16, 1889," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $46,000: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers involved, payments made under the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," to civilian employees appointed by the Navy Department for duty in and serving at naval stations maintained in the island possessions during the fiscal year 1916: Provided further, That the act "To authorize and provide for the disposal of useless papers in the executive departments," approved February 16, 1889, is hereby amended so that accumulations in the files of navy yards and naval stations that, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, are not needed or useful in the transaction of current business and have no permanent value or historical interest may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Navy by sale, after advertisement for proposals as waste paper if practicable, or if not practicable then otherwise as may appear best for the interests of the Government, the said Secretary to make detailed report to the Congress in every case of the papers destroyed; provided always that no papers less than 2 years old from the date of the last indorsement thereon shall be destroyed or disposed of by the Secretary of the Navy, except in the manner provided in said act of February 16, 1889.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 22, before the word "officers," to strike out "That" and insert "Hereafter," so as to make the clause read:

Hereafter officers who now perform engineering duty on shore only and officers of the Construction Corps shall be eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$1,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Aeronautics: The sum of $1,000,000 is hereby reappropriated out of the unobligated balance of the appropriation "Construction and repair of vessels" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and made available for aeronautics, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for procuring, producing, constructing, operating, preserving, storing, and handling air craft and appurtenances, maintenance of air-craft stations and experimental work in development of aviation for naval purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 12, to insert:

An advisory committee for aeronautics is hereby established, and the President is authorized to appoint not to exceed 10 members, to consist of 2 members from the War Department, from the office in charge of military aeronautics; 2 members from the Navy Department, from the office in charge of naval aeronautics; a representative each of the Smithsonian Institution, of the United States Weather Bureau, and of the United States Bureau of Standards; together with not more than 3 additional persons who shall be acquainted with the needs of aeronautical science, either civil or military, or skilled in aeronautical engineering or its allied sciences, 1 of whom may be resident of the District of Columbia and the others shall be inhabitants of some State, but not more than 1 of them from the same State: Provided, That the members of the advisory committee for aeronautics, as such, shall serve without compensation: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the advisory committee for aeronautics to supervise and direct the scientific study of the problems of flight, with a view to their practical solution, and to determine the problems which should be experimentally attacked, and to discuss their solution and their application to practical questions. In the event of a laboratory or laboratories, either in whole or in part, being placed under the direction of the committee, the committee may direct and conduct research and experiment in aeronautics in such laboratory or laboratories: And provided further, That rules and regulations for the conduct of the work of the committee shall be formulated by the committee and approved by the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 15, to insert:

That the sum of $5,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for five years is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, for experimental work and investigations undertaken by the committee, clerical expenses and supplies, and necessary expenses of members of the committee in going to, returning from, and while attending meetings of the committee: Provided, That an annual report to the Congress shall be submitted through the President, including an itemized statement of expenditures.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 18, after the word "Navy," to strike out "or," and in the same line, after the word "Corps," to insert "or Coast Guard," so as to make the clause read:

The President of the United States is hereby empowered to prepare a suitable medal of honor to be awarded to any officer of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard who shall have distinguished himself in battle or displayed extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the top of page 9 to insert:

Hurricane damages, American Samoa: For the relief of the inhabitants of American Samoa, to be immediately available, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Navigation," on page 13, line 1, before the words "of nautical," to insert "and printing," and in line 2, after the word "directions," to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$105,000," so as to make the clause read:

Ocean and lake surveys: Hydrographic surveys, including the pay of the necessary hydrographic surveyors, cartographic draftsmen and recorders, and for the purchase and printing of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions, $105,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers not exceeding four as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance," on page 18, line 23, after "$5,795,420," to strike out "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expending for the purchase of armor-piercing shells of 12-inch caliber or larger unless such shells are found by tests to be able to penetrate 10-inch Kruppized plate without breaking up when fired with a standard service powder charge and an actual range of 12,000 yards," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance and ordnance stores: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department; for furniture at naval magazines, torpedo stations, and proving ground; for maintenance of the proving ground and powder factory and for target practice; for the maintenance, repair, or operation of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes at naval magazines, the naval proving ground, Indianhead, Md., and naval torpedo stations, and for pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and naval magazines: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and naval magazines for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, shall not exceed $468,000; in all, $5,795,420.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to inquire from the Senator having the bill in charge why that proviso is stricken out.

Mr. SWANSON. The proviso on pages 18 and 19?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. The department says it is utterly impossible to make the test of 12,000 yards for projectiles. They have no station for it. That would be as far as from here to Alexandria. You have no suitable range. You would have to have nearly 10 miles, or possibly more than that, to make the test; and the projectiles that we now have are the very best, or as good as any that any nation has. The department says that it would be utterly impossible to make the test. The only way it could be made would be on the sea, and if you were to shoot at a target on the sea you could not find what was the effect of the projectile. I have here a letter from the department on the subject.

Mr. THOMAS. The explanation is perfectly clear; but it has been frequently asserted of late that the superiority of armor and of foreign guns over the armor of our ships and over the range of our guns is such that this proviso struck me as being extremely important and desirable. Certainly there is no reason why ammunition of this caliber should be purchased unless it is as effective as the occasion for its use may require. Of course I am ignorant of the methods of testing ammunition, either of this caliber or of any other, for that matter; but surely there ought to be some way of testing ammunition where the exigency which may require its use would be such as to make it either ineffective or useless unless it possesses the power and piercing quality which this test would demonstrate.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, we appropriate over $100,000—I think this bill carries that amount—to make tests for projectiles. We make the tests. This Government is making continual tests as to the effectiveness of its projectiles. We get the very best, and the foreign governments are buying projectiles such as we buy now. In addition to that, we make an appropriation of $500,000 for manufacturing our own projectiles and testing them. If this proviso is passed it simply means that we will not have any projectiles purchased for the new battleships because it is impossible to make the tests. We have only projectiles enough for about a two hours' engagement. Battleships carry 100 projectiles, and then we have a reserve of 125; and shooting 2 a minute in an engagement of two hours would consume the projectiles we now have, and to adopt this provision would simply mean that the Government would not purchase any under this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 7, to insert:

Melville, R. I.: For the construction of a building for the storage of torpedoes, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 22, to insert:

The sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for the construction and equipment of a plant for the manufacture of projectiles, said plant to be located on such site now owned by the Government as may be determined by the President. The amount hereby appropriated to be available until expended.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am informed that this paragraph provides an appropriation for a projectile establishment which has never been investigated by the Navy Department, which has never been reported on by any official bureau of the Government, and is in the nature of general legislation. I am not prepared to say that ultimately it may not be well for the American Government to take up this proposition, but I certainly think that a little more consideration should be given to it than the introduction of an amendment to this bill without any consideration whatever having been given to it in the history of the Navy Department. I therefore raise the point of order that it has never been estimated for and is general legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state to the Senator that the Secretary of the Navy very earnestly recommends this appropriation.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Navy recommends it. That does not alter my contention, and I think I am right—I may be wrong—in saying that no investigation of this matter has ever been had.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, this is an item under Rule XVI. If the Chair will read the rule he will see it states that no new item shall be included in a general appropriation bill unless it is moved by a standing committee of the Senate——

Mr. LODGE. "Or."

Mr. SWANSON. Or if it has been estimated it can be moved, or if it has been recommended by a standing committee of the Senate, either one. This has not been estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, but I am directed by a standing committee of the Senate, the Committee on Naval Affairs, to move this item of appropriation, and consequently under Rule XVI I am satisfied it is a new item of appropriation which can be included in this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. It certainly seems to me to be evident that a paragraph which embarks the American Government on an enterprise that is of such a serious character as the manufacture of projectiles, leading perhaps to the general manufacture of all munitions of war, is new legislation. As far as the item of appropriation is concerned, it has never been estimated for, it has never been officially recommended by any bureau of the Government, and the only scintilla of official sanction is a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to a member of the committee; not even an official communication to Congress or an official communication to the committee as a committee.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, Rule XVI states:

Or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

My contention is that if it is moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, and I move it by the direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, a standing committee, or if it is estimated for, as I understand the rule, even if not moved by a standing committee, it is in order and can be moved as an amendment to a general appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no estimate in this case.

Mr. SWANSON. There is no estimate, but certainly a committee of the Senate has directed this amendment to be reported.

Mr. PENROSE. But it must be in accordance with an estimate.

Mr. SWANSON. The rule does not say so.

Mr. PENROSE. It goes on to say——

Mr. SWANSON. It says "or," not "and."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I made a similar point of order to a similar item in the agricultural bill a few hours ago, and the point of order was overruled on the ground stated by the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The Chair is of the opinion that Rule XVI covers the situation in the language "or unless the same be moved by a standing or select committee." This is evidently moved by a standing committee. The clause "or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments" is an alternative. The amendment having been moved by direction of a standing committee, it seems to the Chair that the point of order should not be sustained.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia what information was before the committee as to whether this $500,000 would build the projectile factory or whether they had the plans for a factory, to know how much money it would take to finally complete it. It seems to me that this amendment is brought in here without adequate information either to the Senate or even to the committee as to what we are entering into. From my information and from what I know about such matters, it seems to me that $500,000 would scarcely mark the beginning of a factory of this kind.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state to the Senator that I have the following letter from the Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to have this point clear in my mind as to a part of Rule XVI. It reads:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Has this amendment been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SWANSON. This is from the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Naval Affairs is a committee on appropriations.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator understand that the words "committee on appropriations" refer to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. LODGE. If I may say a word, that rule was adopted before the appropriation bills were divided. All committees having appropriation bills are committees on appropriations.

Mr. SWANSON. There is another rule which states that all items of appropriations must be referred to certain committees, but I understand this is the only rule of the Senate which directs that bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to read a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in reference to this matter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 8, 1915.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In my hearings before the House Committee on Naval Affairs I recommended an appropriation of $500,000 for the construction and equipment of a plant for the manufacture of projectiles. This amount gives a fairly close estimate of the cost of an establishment capable of turning out a sufficient number of large-caliber projectiles to meet our needs.

During the past few years the bids for projectiles have varied so widely as to indicate that at times the Government is charged excessive prices; for example, in 1910 one firm supplied 14-inch armor-piercing projectiles for $410 each and another firm for $500 each; in 1911 the firm which had furnished these projectiles for $410 raised their price to $490 each, and the firm which had charged $500 continued to charge $500 each; in 1914, January, the firm which had been charging $500 each reduced their price to $320 each, and the firm which had previously charged $410 and $490 reduced their price to $375.

While the quality of our armor-piercing projectiles has improved, I am of the opinion that still greater progress would be made at a Government plant, for the reason that the principal effort at such a plant would be directed toward the production of the highest-grade projectile, unhampered by any question of money profit in the manufacture.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. President, whether this is used to build a plant or not the department is apprehensive that the price of projectiles authorized by this bill will be greatly increased. I do not think there is any possible purpose to build a plant unless it is demonstrated that the charges are too high for the projectiles authorized to be purchased under the bill. It does seem to me, if we are desirous of taking care of the Government both in the quality and price of projectiles, the department ought to have authority to construct a plant if it can not get good projectiles at a reasonable price.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I do not want to stand here and oppose the building of a plant of this kind if it is once shown to us that it is to the interest of the Government to do it, but I do say that in this particular instance we are entering into the project without any due conception of what it amounts to. The letter of the Secretary of the Navy is merely general. Nobody knows what this plant will cost, or whether $500,000 will come near reaching it. Before this is gone into, I think some estimate ought to be given to us as to what the plant would cost.

If there is any disposition on the part of the people who are furnishing these munitions to overcharge the Government, I think it is perfectly right for the Government to enter upon the manufacture, just as they have entered upon the manufacture of small arms and munitions in the various arsenals, and I would not oppose it; but we have no estimate here as to what it is going to cost, or as to how far the appropriation of $500,000 will reach.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that the price of projectiles has increased very rapidly on account of the war. In addition to that, the manufacturers might get such high prices for their projectiles from foreign nations that we might not be able to get any for some years. I am satisfied the Secretary of the Navy has no definite purpose at present. This estimate has been made recently by the department, and he is satisfied that this expenditure should be made. I think it would be wise, whether we went into this manufacturing business or not, to give the Government authority to go into it, provided it can not get good projectiles and can not get them at a reasonable price.

Mr. OLIVER. I can easily understand that the Secretary of the Navy has no definite purpose at present, because his letter and this amendment and the speech of the Senator from Virginia are about as indefinite upon the subject as anything I can possibly conceive. I think it is almost criminal, Mr. President, for us to go pell-mell into such things without knowing what we are about. I can say that, greatly as I like and really admire the Secretary of the Navy, for indefiniteness this proposition of his rather takes the palm.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Virginia. I understood him to intimate in his explanation of this paragraph that he is under the impression that this item is only contingent upon the Secretary not being able to get projectiles at a reasonable figure; that is to say, it is not mandatory on the Secretary to build this projectile factory.

Mr. SWANSON. It is not mandatory; it authorizes him.

Mr. PENROSE. I take it it is mandatory and I want that to be cleared up, for I think the Senator has mixed up the character of the armor-plate proposition with this projectile proposition. Would the Senator object, if that is his view, to inserting the words "if the Secretary of the Navy finds he can not get projectiles at a reasonable price"?

Mr. SWANSON. He is authorized, and I suppose if this money is appropriated it would become compulsory.

Mr. PENROSE. If he finds he can not get the projectiles at a reasonable price, he is authorized to proceed under this appropriation. That is what we put in the armor-plate paragraph.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, on page 65, "if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price he is authorized to begin the construction of an armor-plate factory," and so forth.

Mr. PENROSE. I would accept the amendment under those circumstances, but I know something about this matter. Many of these manufactories are situated in Pennsylvania, and I am very familiar with the industry, and I do not want to see the Government go helter-skelter into it.

Mr. SWANSON. I will accept that amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. PENROSE. I will be entirely satisfied with that clause inserted.

Mr. SWANSON. Let that amendment be accepted, and let it go to conference.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, before we go ahead with that, I wish the Senator from Virginia would read to me the last sentence in the letter from the Secretary of the Navy. As I listened to the reading, it is rather a remarkable proposition.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, the money amounts to nothing. He says the expense does not mean anything.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand he wants this plant to experiment in making projectiles without regard to expense.

Mr. PENROSE. That is it.

Mr. LIPPITT. He seems to complain that the quality of projectiles is without regard to expense. It seems to me that plenty of private people would be glad to experiment without regard to expense, if that is the way they want to have it.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator desire to have the letter read at the desk?

Mr. LIPPITT. Just the last sentence.

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary says:

> While the quality of our armor-piercing projectiles has improved, I am of the opinion that still greater progress would be made at a Government plant, for the reason that the principal effort of such a plant would be directed toward the production of the highest grade projectile, unhampered by any question of money profit in the manufacture.

That is, the profit which comes to the man who sells to the Government. With most of these people who manufacture projectiles to-day, whether they are good or whether they are bad, the main idea that prevails with the manufacturers is the profit made in the sale of projectiles. The Secretary of the Navy very properly says in a matter as important as projectiles, upon which the test of efficiency of our Navy is dependent, it would be well to have a Government plant, producing it as low as possible, but where the profit of a man who manufactures would not be the consideration mainly controlling. I do not think the letter has the impression that seems to have occurred to the Senator from Rhode Island, if it is fairly construed.

Mr. LIPPITT. The profit of making projectiles is a very small part, I fancy, of their cost. Of course the Government has got to consider the interest on the plant and the fixed charges in estimating the cost, as well as other people.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the price of projectiles, as the Secretary of the Navy writes, was reduced from $500 to $320, and that was a profit of $180 on each projectile. A battleship will take about 100 projectiles for each gun and 125 for the reserve. That makes 225 projectiles that are purchased when we equip a battleship. When you take the number of guns on a battleship and the number of battleships we are constructing it is a very large sum of money, and the Government is entitled to this excessive profit. If there is complaint made of some of our projectiles we would have this opportunity to go into the business if the Government can make a cheaper and a more efficient projectile, and certainly this should be passed to prevent excessive prices being charged the Government.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I know nothing about whether excessive prices have been charged the Government or not. The Senator cites a case in which prices have been reduced on certain projectiles. I have no doubt the prices may have been reduced and changed. Sometimes they go up and sometimes they go down. I do not understand that a reduction in price had anything to do with any projectiles that the Government was to make, but whatever was the cause of the reduction, the point which I was coming at is that the Senator in one breath says the purpose of this factory is to reduce the cost of making projectiles and then he reads a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in which the Secretary intimates that the purpose of it is to experiment in making a more perfect projectile without regard to cost. Of course the two things can not be carried on at one and the same time.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator makes a mistake. The Secretary did not say regardless of cost; he says not considering the question of profit. The profit belongs to the manufacturer. The Government expects to sell none.

Mr. LIPPITT. There is no meaning to the expression "without regard to profit."

Mr. SWANSON. I am sorry the Senator can not grasp the meaning.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand it about as well as the Senator does, and I know exactly what is meant by profit, too.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no doubt the Senator is well acquainted with that.

Mr. LIPPITT. To undertake to experiment without regard to profit, unless it also means without regard to cost, is an expression that has no particularly definite meaning at all.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] is objecting to this provision because it is indefinite. I was simply trying to harmonize the first expression of the Senator that it was for the purpose of reducing the cost of manufacture and the expression of the Secretary of the Navy that it was for the purpose of carrying on experiments without regard to expenses. The two things seem to be entirely inconsistent.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania state his amendment?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir. I suggest that this paragraph be amended in harmony with the similar provision on page 65 regarding the proposed armor-plate establishment, and, if the Secretary will take it down—I have not reduced it to writing—I can state it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase projectiles at what he considers to be a reasonable price, he is authorized to construct and equip a plant for the manufacture of projectiles, the total cost not to exceed $500,000; which sum is hereby appropriated for the purpose; said plant to be located on such site now owned by the Government as may be determined by the President. The amount hereby appropriated to be available until expended.

Mr. SWANSON. I will accept that amendment in order to let the matter go to conference.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say on this matter, except that I want in entire good faith to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the seriousness of the steps that are being taken toward Government manufacture and Government ownership. If it is to be the ultimate policy of the Government, of course we shall all have to be reconciled to it; but some of us may well hesitate.

As I understand American institutions and the policy of the American Government, it has always been the idea that private individuals should be encouraged and that the Government should do nothing that could be left to private initiative and private enterprise. Now, the argument is made that extravagant prices are charged for many of these munitions, or that collusion is occasionally suspected to prevail. If that can be proved, of course that brings up a new proposition; but in this particular case of projectiles, the letter of the Secretary distinctly states that they have dropped some 50 per cent in the last year or so in their cost to the Government; and there are so many concerns manufacturing them, or which are able to manufacture them, all over the United States that I do not think there is or can be any charge of collusion.

The Government is getting these projectiles in a satisfactory way, and cheaply; and it is a very serious question and problem to my mind whether, with an enormous deficit staring us in the face, the Government ought recklessly to embark on an enterprise that has never been investigated and has never been agitated before the people of the country; for which I know of no public sentiment, and which will lead us into an enterprise that may terminate in the expenditure of millions of dollars without sufficient justification.

Be that as it may, the amendment which the Senator from Virginia has accepted puts the proposition on something like a legitimate basis, and I am satisfied to have it go to conference in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, before the amendment is acted upon I wish to say that I think as amended the proposed amendment is clearly subject to a point of order as being general legislation. I will not now make that point of order, but will reserve the right to make it in the Senate if I shall then deem it proper to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. If the junior Senator from Pennsylvania insists on making the point of order against the amendment as amended. I should prefer to let the point of order be made; and I will not accept the amendment proposed by his colleague.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not propose to make the point of order at this time, and in all probability shall not make it when the bill comes into the Senate, but I simply reserve the right to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 23, line 10, after "$15,000," to insert "toward the construction of a building slip and equipment, $50,000," and in line 11, after the words "in all," to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$130,000," so as to make the clause read:

Navy yard, Norfolk, Va.: Building for school, $50,000; railroad system, extensions, $15,000; disinfecting plant, $15,000; toward the construction of a building slip and equipment, $50,000; in all, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 14, after "$10,000," to insert "to make dry and wet borings to determine water-front conditions for locating suitable docks, piers, and slips, $15,000; toward the construction of building ways for constructing tugs, lighters, barges, and small naval auxiliary craft, $50,000," and in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$95,000," so as to make the clause read:

Navy yard, Charleston, S. C.: Dredging, to continue, $20,000; paving and grading, to continue, $10,000; to make dry and wet borings to determine water-front conditions for locating suitable docks, piers, and slips, $15,000; toward the construction of building ways for constructing tugs, lighters, barges, and small naval auxiliary craft, $50,000; in all, $95,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 20, to insert:

Naval Station, Pensacola, Fla.: For remodeling building 52 to fit it as a sick quarters and dispensary for use of United States Navy Aeronautic Station, $15,000, reappropriated from unexpended appropriation act of March 2, 1907, for renewal of present naval hospital buildings, Pensacola, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 13, to insert:

That the appropriation of $400,000 for erection on the Isthmus of Panama of barracks, quarters, and other buildings for accommodation of marines, contained in the act of March 4, 1913, is hereby reappropriated, and $200,000 thereof made available for the erection of marine barracks at Mare Island, Cal., and $200,000 thereof made available for the erection of marine barracks at Norfolk, Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 4, after the word "fuel," to strike out "$2,527,816" and insert "$2,642,816," so as to make the clause read:

Total public works, navy yards, naval stations, naval proving grounds, and magazines, naval training station, San Francisco, naval hospital, New York, and depots for coal and other fuel, $2,642,816, and the amounts herein appropriated for public works, except for repairs and preservation at navy yards and stations, shall be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," on page 27, line 21, after "$15,000," to insert:

Provided, That no deduction shall hereafter be made from the six months' gratuity pay allowed under the naval act of August 22, 1912, on account of expenses for preparation and transportation of the remains: Provided further, That the sum herein appropriated shall be available for payment for transportation of the remains of officers and men who have died while on duty at any time since April 21, 1898, and shall be available until June 30, 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator having the bill in charge why this proviso is offered at this time?

Mr. SWANSON. It is offered at the request of the department on account of a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury. The law provides that whenever we transfer the remains of a sailor or of anyone in the naval service for burial there shall be taken from his pay the amount specified, which I think is $60 for burial expenses, even if the remains are shipped home and the home people pay the expense of interment, carriages, and everything incident to it. The very fact that there was transportation requires this sum to be subtracted from the month's gratuity pay. There have been cases where the expenses have been paid by the home people for interment. There is another appropriation for transportation. The law provides that wherever transportation is furnished for the remains this amount shall be taken out of the gratuity, although the Government pays for the transportation. This amendment was recommended to avoid that decision of the Comptroller of the Currency, which in a great many cases works a hardship.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, it will not cost the Government anything?

Mr. SWANSON. It might cost the Government in some cases the expenses of the interment, and the Government has usually paid such expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. But they subtract it in every case where transportation is furnished.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, this is to prevent, under the ruling of the comptroller, making the dead man pay for his own burial out of the gratuity pay, which the law allows for his widow and children.

Mr. SMOOT. From what the Senator from Virginia says, even if some one else pays the burial expenses, under the ruling of the comptroller it would be taken out of the gratuity pay. Does the Senator understand that?

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, as I understand from my reading of the matter and as I recall, the law is that whenever transportation has been furnished for the remains of a sailor or officer of the Navy, this amount shall be subtracted. The Comptroller of the Treasury requires it to be taken out in all cases when the gratuity is paid to the party entitled to it. This amendment is designed to get rid of that decision, which has worked very great hardship in some cases where relatives or friends paid the expenses themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," on page 29, line 9, after the word "with," to strike out "Naval Militia, and for," and in line 10, after the word "men," to insert "and for the pay of enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia," so as to read:

Pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, 48,000 men, and for the pay of enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, $23,616,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 30, to insert:

Hereafter no officer shall be promoted who has not had active sea service covering half or more of the time during which he has been in the service, and any officer who has failed to have such an amount of sea service to his credit shall be placed on the retired list: Provided, That this shall not apply to the grades of commander and captain until two years from the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That this provision shall not apply to those engineer officers transferred to the line under section 5 of the act of March 3, 1899.

Hereafter retired officers shall be assigned to shore duty wherever an officer of the Navy is required for such duty: Provided, That no officer shall be thus assigned whose physical condition makes him unfit for such duty.

Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. The committee desire to offer an amendment in lieu of the amendment printed in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. The committee desire to modify the printed amendment, which the committee has the right to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In lieu of how many lines of the proposed amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. In lieu of the lines from 1 to 14, inclusive.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the substitute amendment which the Secretary is about to read applies to the two paragraphs from line 1 to line 14, inclusive, on page 30, but the whole portion in italics, which the Secretary has read, is a substitute for the House provision at the bottom of the page. The amendment of the committee at the top of page 30 should have followed the amendment stricken out at the bottom of the page, but what the Secretary is about to read is a substitute for the two paragraphs I have indicated.

Mr. SWANSON. We propose also to strike out section 9 of the naval personnel act.

Mr. LODGE. We strike out the House provision and insert what has been read.

Mr. SWANSON. If Senators will look at the bottom of page 30, they will find the provision stricken out of the House bill.

Mr. STONE. I understand that it is proposed to reinsert that provision.

Mr. SWANSON. The provision stricken out reads:

Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

That, of course, is part of the House bill. The committee offers as a substitute for that the amendment which the Secretary will now read.

Mr. STONE. Then, it is proposed to reinsert what is stricken out?

Mr. SWANSON. We propose to reinsert that provision which is stricken out. The effect will be that section 9 of the act providing for what is known as the plucking board will contain the language proposed by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, the new matter inserted by the committee should have followed the portion stricken out at the bottom of page 30.

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; that was a mistake in the print.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment as reported in the bill it is proposed by the committee to insert the following:

Hereafter no officer of the line, Medical, or Pay Corps shall be promoted who has not had active sea service covering half or more of the time during which he has been in the service; and any officer who has failed to have such an amount of sea service to his credit shall be placed on the retired list: Provided, That this shall not apply to the grades of commander and captain until three years from the date of the approval of this act, or to the grade of ensign: Provided further, That this provision shall not apply to those engineer officers transferred to the line under section 5 of the act of March 3, 1899: Provided further, That shore duty beyond the seas shall be considered as active sea service for the purposes of this act.

Hereafter whenever an officer of the Navy has been assigned to shore duty retired officers of suitable rank may be assigned to such duty in all posts where the appointment of an officer of the active list is not required by law: Provided, That when retired officers are thus assigned to active duty they shall receive the pay and allowances of the grade from which they were retired.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. What has been read by the Secretary should be a substitute only for that portion of the amendment on page 30, from line 1 to line 12. As I understand, it is not proposed to strike out the proviso reading:

Provided, That no officer shall be thus assigned whose physical condition makes him unfit for such duty.

Mr. SWANSON. The amendment as now stated leaves the Secretary of the Navy to assign the officers, and of course the Secretary will consider their physical condition.

Mr. LODGE. That is true.

Mr. SWANSON. So that there is no necessity of including that proviso.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator why this provision should not apply to the grades of commander, captain, and ensign for two years. Why is it made applicable to lieutenants and lieutenant commanders without the two-year exemption?

Mr. LODGE. Commanders and captains are the two highest grades below admiral.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; I understand that; and ensign is the lowest grade.

Mr. LODGE. I will explain it. It is perfectly explainable. Commanders and captains will have no time to meet the requirements unless two years are given. Otherwise we would retire them all, practically, and that, of course, is not the intention. So in their case the provision is worded in order to give them time to get credit for half sea service. In the case of the ensign the reason is entirely obvious. The midshipmen become ensigns as soon as they leave the Naval Academy, and midshipmen do not have half of their time at sea, of course, and can not have.

Mr. OLIVER. But suppose a lieutenant, by reason of some assignment he may have had, has not spent half his service at sea, then, under this provision——

Mr. LODGE. Then it begins to count against him. The object of this amendment is to make officers seek sea service instead of shore service. That is the precise object.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that perfectly; but I am looking at it from the light of, say, a lieutenant who to-day would be on the eve of promotion, but who under this provision, if he has not served half his time at sea, would be immediately retired.

Mr. LODGE. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I think the Senator in charge of the bill has the figures. It would practically cut out nobody. That has been considered. It is not retroactive.

Mr. STONE. If it does not cut out anybody, what is the use of putting it in?

Mr. LODGE. The object of putting it in is to enforce it in the future.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I feel a little interest in this provision, and had intended to make some observations briefly with respect to it; but I am not able to understand clearly just what change is made in the text as printed by the amendment proposed.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will take his bill, I can show him what has been done.

Mr. STONE. I have the bill before me. I was just going to make this suggestion and see whether it would be satisfactory to the Senator in charge and other members of the committee to pass over this particular provision for a little while, until

I can get that amendment and make a comparison. I can not do it while we are debating here.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator from Virginia will allow it to be passed over for the present, because my colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is interested in it and said he would return in an hour and wishes to be present when it is considered.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to its being passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. LODGE. Before I sit down, if I may I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the men in the lower grades are the ones who go to sea, and who now have 50 per cent of sea service. It is the men in the upper ranks who do not spend 50 per cent of their time at sea. The object of the measure is to compel them all to seek sea service instead of shore service so that they shall all have at least 50 per cent of sea service. The younger men have it for a time.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is any provision to cover cases of officers who do not have the required amount of sea service on account of sickness?

Mr. LODGE. If the officer is physically disabled, of course——

Mr. LIPPITT. He may not necessarily be permanently disabled, but suppose at any one period his illness prevented his having the usual term of sea service?

Mr. LODGE. This covers his whole career, his whole time.

Mr. LIPPITT. But it says that no officer shall be promoted. I suppose that means, promoted at any time.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; no officer who has not had active sea service covering half or more of the time during which he has been in the service. It is cumulative; a man could count all his sea service, from the day he became an ensign; and it is inconceivable that he should not be at sea more than half the time.

Mr. LIPPITT. Suppose he has failed to have that amount of sea service, though against his will, and because he has been ordered to other service?

Mr. LODGE. He will not be. We are short of officers at sea. There is a great demand for shore duty now, and this is to try to make them demand sea duty. This is the system which has been in use in the English Navy for years.

Mr. LIPPITT. It seems like a pretty drastic provision, as though contingencies would not sometimes come up that would be very unjust to a deserving officer, if you make such a drastic thing without any exceptions.

Mr. LODGE. It is not as drastic as it seems. The most of them have half the service now.

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, it seems very drastic. I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of it, but on its face it looks as though it would result in injustice at times.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator that the young officers all have more than 50 per cent of sea service during their entire period of service. In the upper grades they begin to fall off, and the object is to encourage sea service; and if the Senator will notice it, the next clause is directed to reducing the number of shore posts.

If the matter is going over, however, I do not want to say anything more about it now.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 31, line 4, after the word "Corps," to strike out "all officers" and insert "any officer"; and in line 7, after the word "act," to strike out "and from the active to the retired list of the Navy or the Marine Corps by the action of any board," so as to make the clause read:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, within two years of the date of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps any officer who may have been transferred from the active to the retired list of the Navy under the provisions of section 9 of said personnel act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 8, to strike out:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer from the retired to the active list of the Marine Corps, in the grade and with the rank and seniority to which he would have been entitled had he not been so retired, in his original place, as an additional number, any officer now on the retired list of the Marine Corps: Provided, That the circumstances concerning his retirement have been examined by the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Sixty-third Congress, and that both of said committees have reported favorably to the Senate or to the House a bill to transfer such officer to the active list of said Marine Corps: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the place on the active list which he would have held if he had not been retired, or to which he had passed a satisfactory examination or promotion, and shall be called as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted: And provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical and professional examination for promotion, as now provided by law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I move to substitute for the language of the House bill the language of a bill which has passed the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the committee amendment on page 31, line 9, and the remainder of the page, it is proposed to insert:

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to restore Constantine Marrast Perkins, now a lieutenant colonel on the retired list, to the active list of the Marine Corps, in the grade of colonel, to take rank in said grade next after George Barnett, who was the officer immediately above the said Constantine Marrast Perkins in the list of lieutenant colonels at the date said Constantine Marrast Perkins was retired from active service with the rank of lieutenant colonel: Provided, That the said Constantine Marrast Perkins shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, by examination pursuant to law, his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of colonel: Provided further, That the said Constantine Marrast Perkins shall be carried, while on the active list, as additional to the number in the grade to which he may be advanced pursuant to this act until such time as a vacancy occurs in said grade: And provided further, That the said Constantine Marrast Perkins shall not, by the passage of this act, be entitled to any back pay or allowances.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator from Georgia proposes to insert that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I offer that as a substitute.

Mr. LODGE. No; the Senator proposes to insert it where the committee has proposed to strike out certain matter on page 31?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator proposes to strike out that matter and insert this, because that general language covers the Perkins case only; and if we are going to do it—and I think it ought to be done—let us put in and say what we mean, and not put in general legislation to cover the case of one man.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I was very insistent in the committee that this general language should be stricken out. I have no objection to the thing being done in the straightforward way of naming the man it is to benefit. The Senate passed a bill to restore this officer to the active list upon the recommendation of the Navy Department. The bill has not been reached on the House calendar. I understand that this language, which is almost unintelligible, undertaking to make a general provision, was properly stricken out by the committee, and that the committee would have no objection to the reinstatement of this officer, because the commitee reported and the Senate passed a bill for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. The language struck out here was intended really to take care of the Perkins case, and was so understood in the House of Representatives. If it goes to conference, I think this amendment, which makes it direct, can be adopted; and I accept the amendment in place of this language.

Mr. LODGE. It is a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. SWANSON. To strike out and insert that language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 12, before the word "Provided," to strike out "That the President be, and he is hereby, also authorized, within two years of the date of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Navy any other officer who may have been retired under the said section 9 whom he may consider physically and professionally qualified to discharge his duties on the active list"; and in line 18, after the word "satisfactory," to strike out "medical" and insert "physical," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the place on the active list which he would have held if he had not been retired and shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted: Provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory physical and professional examination as now prescribed by law: And provided further, That any officer transferred to the active list shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to back pay or allowances of any kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator explain in just a few words why the Senate disagreed to the House provision?

Mr. LODGE. That was stricken out because it was duplicated in the House bill. It is all included in lines 1 to 8 on page 31. The House put it in in that form and then added something else.

Mr. SWANSON. In the House an amendment was sent in by the department. They had their amendment printed, and they accepted both. It is simply a duplication.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 22, to insert:

The President is hereby authorized to transfer to the active list of the Navy any officer retired on July 1, 1914, under the personnel act of 1899 as modified by the act approved August 22, 1912, who is now performing active duty: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the number on the active list he would have held if not retired on said date, and shall be an extra number on the said active list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 7, to insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the grade of assistant dental surgeon authorized under the provisions of the act approved August 22, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," two officers from among those acting assistant or acting dental surgeons appointed for temporary service under the provisions of the said act approved August 22, 1912. Said transfers shall be made upon the approval of this act subject to such examinations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and without regard to age and without reduction in pay or allowances: Provided, That an officer so transferred shall not be placed on the retired list of the Navy for any cause whatever until such officer has served not less than 30 years in the Navy, and if found to be incapacitated for the performance of duty by reason of physical disability prior to the completion of 30 years' service, he shall be discharged from the service with not more than one year's pay.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in order to perfect that amendment, before it is adopted, I move to strike out the period and insert a colon in line 4, page 34, and I will introduce an amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept it. I want to read one paragraph from a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the committee, Senator TILLMAN:

Inasmuch as the dental legislation is now distributed through three acts of Congress, which has resulted in a certain amount of ambiguity and consequent administrative difficulties, I had hoped the matter would be remedied by new legislation before any issues were raised under the existing laws. I am confident that the present unsatisfactory condition will be appreciated and speedily corrected by Congress when brought to its attention, which I shall do at an early date.

There are continual difficulties coming up on this subject, and I hope the Senator will accept the amendment I introduce here. It is in the nature of the amendment introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], though it is not exactly that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 4, after the word "pay" and before the period, it is proposed to insert:

That all acting assistant dental surgeons appointed under the said act may, without further examination or age requirement, be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, assistant dental surgeons with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Dental Reserve Corps of the Navy, and the said acting grades are hereby abolished, and all such appointees may thus become available for active service in emergencies, and, in addition and in common with all the other assistant dental surgeons heretofore or hereafter appointed in the Dental Reserve Corps, shall be available for service in such numbers as the Secretary of the Navy may at any time deem necessary to the health and efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for appointment to the regular dental corps as hereinafter authorized, subject to the age, mental, moral, physical, and professional examination requirements; that a regular dental corps is hereby authorized and established as a constituent part of the Medical Department of the Navy, which dental corps shall be organized and conducted under the laws and regulations now or hereafter applicable to the Medical Corps of the Navy analogously applied, and said dental corps shall consist of not exceeding 10 per cent of each of the several grades of rank in the said Medical Corps, and the said laws and regulations shall be modified in their application to said dental corps as follows:

First. That the first examination for the purpose of filling the vacancies hereby created in the entrance grade shall be both competitive and satisfactory and shall not occur until there are at least as many candidates in the Dental Reserve Corps who have had either active service or pursued a course of instruction as there are vacancies in the regular dental corps, and in computing the entrance age for dental officers the actual age shall be reduced by the time the candidate theretofore served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

Second. That the promotions to fill other vacancies hereby created shall be made at a rate of not exceeding 25 per cent per year of the number who become eligible under the law applicable to the Medical Corps, and the right of promotion shall not in any case be earned by a dental corps officer in a shorter period of service than is or may be required for corresponding promotion in the Medical Corps.

Third. That no dental officer shall be retired for age under any construction of any law heretofore enacted unless such dental officer was within the entrance age required when appointed to the dental corps, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, nor unless he shall have reached the age of 64 years when so retired; that there shall be a distinctive dental corps insignia and the word "Dental" shall be used as a designating part of the title of dental officers, and appropriate assignments and regulations may be made to define and promote the exercise of the distinctive functions and duties of dental officers.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that this carries out the law as we think it is now. We think it does. I want the Senator to accept that amendment and let it go to conference, and I think he will find it is so. There have been three laws passed upon this subject, and we have tried to take away the ambiguity in the two acts. There are a great many Senators here interested in this matter; and if the Senator will accept this, it is all right and good. If not, I want him to let it be passed over, because there is going to be a debate over it. I know that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] desires to be heard on it, as well as half a dozen other Senators.

Mr. SWANSON. How long does the Senator think the debate will last?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, I have no idea how long it will last.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am very anxious to get this bill through, and the Senate has eliminated all personnel legislation, for the simple reason that we thought it would hasten the passage of the bill, and therefore we did not consider it. But as it is evident that that will retard it, I will accept the amendment, with the distinct understanding that it will be considered in conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all I want.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is general legislation and has no place in an appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not general legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. If it is not general legislation, I do not know the meaning of the term. I do not think amendments of this kind should be accepted by the committee. It is evidently a matter of some importance, and I do not think there is any question but that it is general legislation. I do not think the assurance or intimation that unless a matter of this kind is accepted there is going to be protracted debate ought to influence the Senate in determining whether or not legislation of this kind shall be incorporated in an appropriation bill. There is too much of this already.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, Mr. President, that is being done in this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Wherever we can put a limitation upon it we ought to do it. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator having the bill in charge ought to have now whatever discussion there is to be. I should hate to see the conference report coming back here and the discussion occurring then. I think the Senator knows that the amendment will not be agreed to; and then when it comes back here in the shape of a conference report the whole question will be discussed again. I would rather have it discussed now and settled than to have the conference report come back here and spend a lot of time in a discussion of it at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to have the Senator from Virginia state whether, in his opinion, the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. I am satisfied that it is subject to a point of order. It is general legislation on this appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is not general legislation. As I understand, there are three laws on the subject already in existence, and this modifies the law as it is. It is not new legislation as we understand the term. It is the law as it is brought forward and made plain. The Secretary of the Navy himself says the law is so ambiguous that he has not been able to construe what the law means, and we try to make the law mean something.

Mr. THOMAS. The fact that it is a modification of the law seems to me to be an admission that it is general legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is carrying out what the law is.

Mr. THOMAS. What law?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. I make a point of order, then, against the amendment, from line 8 on page 33 to line 4 on page 34, that it is general legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. It is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 4, to insert:

Hereafter officers of the Navy and Marine Corps appointed student naval aviators, while lawfully detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft, including balloons, dirigibles, and aeroplanes, shall receive the pay and allowances of their rank and service plus 35 per cent increase thereof; and those officers who have heretofore qualified, or may hereafter qualify, as naval aviators, under such rules and regulations as have been or may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, shall, while lawfully detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft, receive the pay and allowances of their rank and service plus 50 per cent increase thereof. Hereafter enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps, while detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft, shall receive the pay, and the permanent additions thereto, including allowances, of their rating and service or rank and service, as the case may be, plus 50 per cent increase thereof: Provided, That not more than a yearly average of 48 officers and 96 enlisted men of the Navy and 12 officers and 24 enlisted men of the Marine Corps, detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft, shall receive any increase in pay while on duty involving actual flying in air craft, nor shall any officer in the Navy senior in rank to lieutenant commander, nor any officer in the Marine Corps senior in rank to major, receive any increase in pay or allowances by reason of such detail or duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 4, to insert:

In the event of the death of an officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps from wounds or disease, the result of an aviation accident, not the result of his own misconduct, received while engaged in actual flying in or in handling air craft, the gratuity to be paid under the provisions of the act approved August 22, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," shall be an amount equal to one year's pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the time of the accident resulting in his death. In all cases where an officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps dies, or where an enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps is disabled by reason of any injury received or disease contracted in line of duty, the result of an aviation accident, received while employed in actual flying in or in handling air craft, the amount of pension allowed shall be double that authorized to be paid should death or the disability have occurred by reason of an injury received or disease contracted in line of duty not the result of an aviation accident.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 36, to insert:

All acts or parts of acts in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 8, to insert:

There is hereby established a United States naval reserve, which shall consist of citizens of the United States who have been or may be entitled to be honorably discharged from the Navy after not less than one four-year term of enlistment or after a term of enlistment during minority. The naval reserve shall be organized under the Bureau of Navigation and shall be governed by the Articles for the Government of the Navy and by the Naval Regulations and Instructions. Whenever actively employed with the Navy, or whenever employed in authorized travel to and from prescribed active duty with the Navy, its members shall be employed as members of the naval reserve and shall while so employed be held and considered to be in all respects in the same status as enlisted men of the Navy on active duty, except that they shall not be advanced in rating in time of peace. When not actively employed with the Navy, members of the naval reserve shall not be entitled to any pay, bounty, gratuity, or pension except the pay expressly provided for members of the naval reserve by the provisions of this act, nor shall they be entitled to retirement by reason of such service in the naval reserve.

Enlistments in the naval reserve shall be made in the rating in which last honorably discharged from the Navy for a period of four years unless sooner discharged by competent authority. No man shall be first enlisted in the naval reserve after eight years from the date of his last discharge from the Navy nor unless he be found to be physically fit to perform the duties of the rating in which last discharged, nor shall any man whose last service in the Navy was terminated by any means other than by an honorable discharge be eligible for enlistment in the naval reserve. Reenlistments in the naval reserve shall be made under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Enlistments in the naval reserve shall be made in two classes. Class 1 shall consist of those men who enlist in the naval reserve within four months from the date of their last honorable discharge from the Navy. Class 2 shall consist of those men who enlist in the naval reserve after four months and within eight years from the date of their last honorable discharge from the Navy.

In addition to the enlistments in the naval reserve above provided, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to transfer to the naval reserve at the expiration of an enlistment any enlisted man of the Navy who may, after two years from the date of approval of this act, complete service in the Navy of 16, 20, or 24 or more years and be entitled at the expiration of his enlistment to an honorable discharge. Such transfers shall only be made upon voluntary application and in the rating in which then serving, and the men so transferred shall be continued in the naval reserve until discharged by competent authority.

Members of the naval reserve of class 1 and men transferred to the naval reserve shall be required to keep on hand such part of the uniform clothing outfit as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and all members of the naval reserve shall be issued a distinctive badge or button which may be worn with civilian dress.

Members of class 1 who have served less than 8 years in the Navy shall be paid at the rate of $30 per annum, and those who have served more than 8 years and less than 12 years in the Navy shall be paid at the rate of $60 per annum, and those who have served more than 12 years in the Navy $100 per annum. All members of the naval reserve of class 2 shall be paid at the rate of $12 per annum, and when first called into active service on board a vessel of the Navy shall receive an allowance for an outfit of clothing not exceeding $30 in value, to be expended under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Members of the naval reserve who have, when transferred to the naval reserve, completed service in the Navy of 16, 20, or 24 or more years shall be paid at the rate of one-fourth, one-third, and one-half, respectively, of the base pay, plus permanent additions thereto, which they were receiving at the close of their last service in the Navy.

Members of the naval reserve may, in time of peace, be required to perform not less than one month's active service on board a vessel of the Navy, during each year of service in the naval reserve, and such active service shall not exceed two months in any one year: Provided, That the aforesaid active service with the Navy may be required at any time after entrance in the naval reserve. In time of war they may be required to perform active service with the Navy throughout the war, not to exceed the term of enlistment in the case of those enlisted in the naval reserve. Any pay which may be due any member of the naval reserve shall be forfeited when so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy upon the failure, under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, of such man to report for muster and inspection.

Those members of the naval reserve of class 1, and those members who have been transferred to the naval reserve, who reenlist in the Navy within four months from the date of their discharge from the naval reserve, shall not be entitled to a gratuity of four months' pay, but their reenlistment in the Navy shall be held and considered to have been made within four months from the date of discharge from the Navy for the purpose of continuous-service pay. The period of time during which members of the naval reserve were actively employed with the Navy while enlisted in the naval reserve shall, for the purposes of retirement, be counted as active service in the Navy in the case of those who reenlist in the Navy after service in the naval reserve.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized in time of war, or when, in the opinion of the President, war is threatened, to call any enlisted man on the retired list into active service for such duty as he may be able to perform. While so employed such enlisted men shall receive the same pay and allowances they were receiving when placed on the retired list: Provided, That enlisted men on the retired list shall not be eligible for enlistment in or transfer to the naval reserve.

The sum of $130,000 is hereby appropriated to carry into effect the foregoing provisions relating to a naval reserve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 16, to insert:

From and after June 1, 1915, the commander in chief of the United States Atlantic Fleet, if detailed by the President, shall, while serving as such, have the rank of admiral, and the commander in chief of the United States Pacific Fleet, the commander in chief of the United States Asiatic Fleet, and the officer serving as second in command of the United States Atlantic Fleet, if detailed by the President, shall, while serving as such, have the rank of vice admiral. In time of peace, details as commander in chief of the United States Atlantic, Pacific, and Asiatic Fleets, and as second in command of the United States Atlantic Fleet, shall be made from among the officers on the active list in the grade of rear admiral. Nothing herein contained shall be held to create a vacancy in any grade of the Navy, nor to increase the total number of officers allowed by law, nor to increase or decrease the pay and allowances of any officer of the Navy, and the provisions of section 1506 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act approved June 17, 1878, shall not apply in the cases of officers so advanced in rank.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to offer an amendment at the end of that paragraph, after line 11, on page 41. This is a paragraph taken from Senate bill 3590, introduced by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], unanimously recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it has passed the Senate without any opposition. The bill is entitled:

An act to make the appointment of pay clerks in the United States Navy permanent, and to create the grade of chief pay clerk, and for other purposes.

I do not think any Senator or any Representative has any objection whatever to the paragraph. It is recommended by the department. The Senator from Virginia understands it.

Mr. SWANSON. The committee amendments are in order first. That is not in order at present.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to add it after the committee amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator will have an opportunity after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] offered an amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. His was an amendment to an amendment of the committee. The Senator will withhold it until we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. I accept the suggestion. I will withhold it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 5, after "$4,500,000," to insert "Provided, That hereafter, when the lowest obtainable cost of transporting coal by merchant carriers is considered excessive, the appropriation 'Fuel and transportation' may be charged with the expense of pay, transportation, shipping, and subsistence of civilian officers and crews, and such other incidental expenses as can not be paid from other appropriations, of naval auxiliaries engaged in the transportation of fuel: Provided, That the appropriation 'Maintenance of naval auxiliaries' is insufficient therefor," so as to make the clause read:

Fuel and transportation: Coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same; maintenance and general operation of machinery of naval coaling depots and coaling plants; water for all purposes on board naval vessels; and ice for the cooling of water, including the expense of transportation and storage of both, $4,500,000: Provided, That hereafter, when the lowest obtainable cost of transporting coal by merchant carriers is considered excessive, the appropriation "Fuel and transportation" may be charged with the expense of pay, transportation, shipping, and subsistence of civilian officers and crews, and such other incidental expenses as can not be paid from other appropriations, of naval auxiliaries engaged in the transportation of fuel: Provided, That the appropriation "Maintenance of naval auxiliaries" is insufficient therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Construction and Repair," page 44, line 19, after the word "windlasses," to insert "air craft," and in line 22, after the word "tank," to insert "and wind tunnel," so as to read:

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, air craft, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank and wind tunnel; designing naval vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 15, to insert:

Officers of the line of the Navy who have had not less than three years' service in the grade of ensign and have taken or are taking satisfactorily a post-graduate course in naval architecture under orders from the Secretary of the Navy shall be eligible for transfer to the grade of assistant naval constructor: Provided, That there shall not be more than five such transfers in any one calendar year and that the total increase in the number of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors by reason of such transfers shall not exceed 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Steam Engineering," on page 48, line 4, after the word "vessels," to insert "air craft," and in line 11, after the word "service," to insert "including the purchase of land as necessary for sites for radio shore stations," so as to read:

Engineering: For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, auxiliary machinery, and boilers of naval vessels, air craft, yard craft, and ships' boats; distilling and refrigerating apparatus; repairs, preservation, and renewal of electric interior and exterior signal communications and all electrical appliances of whatsoever nature on board naval vessels, except range finders, battle order and range transmitters and indicators, and motors and their controlling apparatus used to operate machinery belonging to other bureaus; maintenance of coast signal service, including the purchase of land as necessary for sites for radio shore stations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for engineering, on page 49, line 6, after "$650,000," to insert "Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for the purchase of land for sites for radio shore stations shall not exceed $10,000," and in line 11, after the word "engineering," to strike out "$7,727,973" and insert "$7,742,973," so as to read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of United States inspectors of machinery and engineering material for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, shall not exceed $650,000: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for the purchase of land for sites for radio shore stations shall not exceed $10,000: Provided further, That the total expenditures under this appropriation at the naval radio laboratory shall not exceed $5,000; in all, engineering, $7,742,973.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 12, to insert:

High-power radio stations: Toward the purchase and preparation of necessary sites, purchase and erection of towers and buildings, and the purchase and installation of machinery and apparatus of high-power radio stations (cost not to exceed $1,500,000), to be located at follows: One in the Isthmian Canal Zone, one on the California coast, one in the Hawaiian Islands, one in American Samoa, one on the island of Guam, and one in the Philippine Islands, $400,000, to be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Marine Corps," on page 55, line 12, after the word "ashore," to insert "Provided, That the number of gunnery sergeants heretofore authorized is increased by 20; that the number of sergeants heretofore authorized is increased by 20; that the number of corporals heretofore authorized is increased by 70; and that the number of privates heretofore authorized is decreased by 110"; and in line 18, after the words "In all," to strike out "$2,916,684.05" and insert "$2,932,764.05," so as to make the clause read:

Pay of enlisted men, active list: Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law, and the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, and including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun captains, gun pointers, mess sergeants, cooks, messmen, signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, pins, or bars, including interest on deposits by enlisted men, post-exchange debts of deserters, under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, and the authorized travel allowance of discharged enlisted men and for prizes for excellence in gunnery exercise and target practice, both afloat and ashore: Provided, That the number of gunnery sergeants heretofore authorized is increased by 20; that the number of sergeants heretofore authorized is increased by 20; that the number of corporals heretofore authorized is increased by 70; and that the number of privates heretofore authorized is decreased by 110. In all, $2,932,764.05.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 4, after the word "Corps," to strike out "$4,494,754.33" and insert "$4,510,834.33," so as to make the clause read:

In all, pay, Marine Corps, $4,510,834.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps," on page 62, line 21, after the word "works," to strike out "$7,494,754.33" and insert "$7,510,834.33," so as to make the clause read:

Total Marine Corps, exclusive of public works, $7,510,834.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Increase of the Navy," on page 63, line 6, before the word "torpedo-boat," to insert "or more"; in the same line, after the words "to have," to strike out "the highest practicable speed" and insert "a speed of not less than 30 knots per hour and"; and in line 9, after the word "each," to insert "and in the aggregate not to exceed $5,550,000," so as to make the clause read:

Six or more torpedo-boat destroyers, to have a speed of not less than 30 knots per hour and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $925,000 each, and in the aggregate not to exceed $5,550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 11, after the word "said," to strike out "torpedo boats" and insert "torpedo-boat destroyers," so as to read:

Provided, That three of said torpedo-boat destroyers herein authorized shall be built on the Pacific coast.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 17, before the words "to be," to strike out "One submarine" and insert "Five submarines"; in line 18, after the words "speed of," to insert "twenty-five knots or more if possible, but"; in line 20, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$1,400,000" and insert "$1,500,000 each"; in line 21, before the word "submarines," to strike out "eleven" and insert "sixteen"; in line 22, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,305,000" and insert "$6,820,000," so as to make the clause read:

Five submarines to be of seagoing type to have a surface speed of 25 knots or more if possible, but not less than 20 knots, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $1,500,000 each, and 16 submarines to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $550,000 each, and the sum of $6,820,000 is hereby appropriated for said purposes to be available until expended.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the paragraph beginning at line 17, down to and including line 24, on page 63, may go over.

Mr. SWANSON. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the paragraph going over? The Chair hears none, and it goes over.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 12, to insert:

One gunboat, to cost, exclusive of armor and armanent, not to exceed $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 14, to insert:

One hospital ship, to cost not to exceed $2,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 3, after the word "expended," to strike out "$20,664,459" and insert "$21,539,459," so as to make the clause read:

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore and herein authorized, to be available until expended, $21,539,459.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 18, to strike out "$18,588,998" and insert "$19,275,998," so as to read:

Increase of the Navy; armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament for vessels heretofore and herein authorized, to be available until expended, $19,275,998.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 17, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price he is authorized to begin the construction of an armor-plate factory upon land already owned by the Government, the total cost not to exceed $8,000,000, toward the construction of which $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided further, That the time for the submission of the report of the committee appointed by the act of June 30, 1914 (Public, No. 121), is hereby extended to the regular session of Congress convening in December, 1915.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proviso going over? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the paragraph following going over? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 66, line 7, to strike out "$42,899,801" and insert "$47,876,801," so as to read:

Total increase of the Navy heretofore and herein authorized, $47,876,801.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to make a correction there. The sum as contained in the bill was improperly added. It ought to be "$49,976,801."

Mr. LODGE. On that amendment I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that until we have decided on the submarine paragraph it is impossible to deal with the total.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There ought to be a motion to authorize the Secretary to correct the totals.

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary should be authorized to correct the totals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the different items are agreed to the Secretary can add up the appropriations.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply want this corrected because it has not been properly added.

Mr. LODGE. It can be corrected now, and afterwards we can give the Secretary authority to change it if changes are made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia is agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 66, after line 7, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to prepare and submit to the next Congress plans and specifications for building four warships of the type, power, and speed which, in his judgment based on the knowledge gained from the prevailing war in Europe, are best suited for war on the sea; also to report, in the light of that war, the value and uses in naval warfare of aeroplanes, Zeppelins, and submarines.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask to have that amendment go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment going over?

Mr. PENROSE. Which amendment is that, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment relating to the construction of four battleships.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. It relates to the construction of four warships; it does not specify battleships.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 67, line 3, after the word "That," to insert "hereafter"; in line 4, after the word "appropriations," to strike out "made in this act" and insert "for the naval service"; in line 13, before the word "appropriations," to strike out "the" and insert "such"; and in the same line, after the word "made," to strike out "in this act" and insert "for the naval service," so as to make the clause read:

Of each of the sums appropriated by this act, except such amounts as may be required to meet obligations authorized in previous acts and for which contracts have been made, no part shall be used to procure through purchase or contract any vessel, armament, articles, or materials, which the navy yards, gun factories, or other industrial plants operated by the Navy Department are equipped to supply, unless such Government plants are operated approximately at their full capacity for not less than one regular shift each working day, except when contract costs are less than costs in said Government plants, and except when said Government plants are unable to complete the work within the time required, and except in cases of emergency: Provided, That hereafter no part of the appropriations for the naval service shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of such appropriations made for the naval service be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. OLIVER obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Wyoming for that purpose?

Mr. OLIVER. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order on the Senate committee amendments in lines 3, 4, and 5, on page 67, and also on the amendment in lines 13 and 14, in the same paragraph. They propose to change existing law, and make the provision general legislation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANSON. This provision has usually been in the naval appropriation bill, as I understand.

Mr. WARREN. I think not; certainly not in this way.

Mr. SWANSON. No.

Mr. WARREN. I am alluding to the language used.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Georgia in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. SWANSON. The word "hereafter," in line 3, on page 67, is inserted simply so as not to have this question come up at every session of Congress and to limit it to this bill. If the point of order is made, of course it is proper. The word "hereafter" makes it general legislation and not confined to this bill.

Mr. WARREN. The point of order is good as to those lines. I will say that, so long as this matter is being considered by the Industrial Commission, we should not tie its hands as to the future by passing general legislation in an appropriation bill, which provides for one year only.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask, if the point of order is made and sustained, that the language be returned to what is contained in the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming insist on his point of order?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the language be changed to conform to the provision as it came from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, Mr. President, I assume the language now stands as it came from the House. I wish to give notice that, after the committee amendments are disposed of, I shall move to strike out that entire paragraph.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 67, after line 17, to insert:

That no part of any sum herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who have combined or conspired to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce or trade of the United States, or the commerce or trade between the States and any Territory or the District of Columbia, in any of the articles aforesaid, and no purchase of structural steel, ship plates, or machinery shall be made at a price in excess of a reasonable profit above the actual cost of manufacture. But this limitation shall in no case apply to any existing contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have a few amendments to offer on behalf of the committee. On page 4, line 21, I move to strike out down to and including the word "sixteen," in line 4, on page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. LODGE. What is the amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. I think possibly that amendment had better not be made. There is really no necessity for it, although there possibly may be a few accounts of civilian employees being detailed to the Philippines. So I will not ask that those words be stricken out. The department have stated that they found no occasion for it now. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has heretofore been agreed to, and a motion to reconsider——

Mr. SWANSON. I have withdrawn the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Do I understand that the reading of the bill for the consideration of committee amendments has now been concluded?

Mr. SWANSON. I have a few technical amendments to offer. On line 4, page 6, I move to change the word "balance" to "balances." The word should be in the plural.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. In line 5, page 6, I move to change the word "appropriation" to "appropriations."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. In line 5, page 6, after the word "vessels," I move to insert "and steam machinery."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. On page 38, line 26, I move to strike out "16" and to insert "12."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, line 26, it is proposed to strike out "16" and to insert "12."

Mr. SWANSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to. There was a mistake in its printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. SWANSON. I now move to strike out "16" and to insert "12."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. On page 39, line 1, before the word "or," I move to strike out "20" and to insert "16."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. On page 39, line 1, after the word "or" where it occurs the first time, I move to strike out "24" and to insert "20."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I now desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. There were two or three items passed over.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; but I think I am now in order, Mr. President, and I offer an amendment to the bill, after line 11, on page 44. Before having the Secretary read the amendment I wish to state that it is taken bodily, without the alteration of a word, from the bill introduced by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on December 8 last, entitled "A bill to make the appointment of pay clerks in the United States Navy permanent and to create the grade of chief pay clerk, and for other purposes," reported favorably unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs and passed by the Senate without any opposition, recommended by the Navy Department, and I think urged by every Senator who is familiar with the situation. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to accept the amendment, which ought to go so far as the conference committee anyway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

The title of paymaster's clerk in the United States Navy is hereby changed to pay clerk, and hereafter all pay clerks shall be warranted from acting pay clerks who shall be appointed from enlisted men in the Navy holding acting or permanent appointments as chief petty officers who have served at least three years as enlisted men, at least two years of which service must have been on board a cruising vessel of the Navy. All appointments as acting pay clerk shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy, and all such appointees, in addition to the qualifications above set forth, must be citizens of the United States. All acting appointments herein provided for shall be made permanent under regulations established by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That paymasters' clerks now in the Navy whose total service as such is less than one year and who are citizens of the United States may, upon the passage of this act, be given appointments as acting pay clerks without previous service as enlisted men: Provided further, That paymasters' clerks now in the service and former paymasters' clerks whose appointments have been revoked within six months next preceding the passage of this act, who have had not less than one year's actual service as such, and who are citizens of the United States, may, upon the passage of this act, be warranted as pay clerks without previous service as enlisted men or as acting pay clerks: And provided further, That pay clerks and acting pay clerks shall have the same pay, allowances, and other benefits as are now or may hereafter be allowed other warrant officers and acting warrant officers, respectively.

That all pay clerks shall, after six years' service as such, be commissioned chief pay clerks and shall on promotion have the rank, pay, and allowances of chief boatswain: Provided, That in computing the six years' service herein provided for credit shall be given for all service in the Navy as pay clerk, acting pay clerk, and paymaster's clerk: Provided further, That paymasters' clerks now in the Navy and former paymasters' clerks whose appointments have been revoked within six months next preceding the passage of this act, who have had not less than six years' actual service as such, and who are citizens of the United States, may, upon the passage of this act, be commissioned as chief pay clerks without previous service as enlisted men, acting pay clerks, or pay clerks.

That the total number of chief pay clerks, pay clerks, and acting pay clerks allowed by this act shall not exceed 1 for each 250 enlisted men in the United States Navy now or hereafter allowed by law, and such chief pay clerks, pay clerks, and acting pay clerks shall be assigned to duty with pay officers under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided, That no person shall be appointed a chief pay clerk, pay clerk, or acting pay clerk under any provisions contained in this act until his physical, mental, moral, and professional qualifications have been satisfactorily established by examination before a board of examining officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, from officers of the pay corps when practicable and according to such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided further, That no person shall be appointed a chief pay clerk, pay clerk, or acting pay clerk unless his accumulated previous service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, together with his possible future service prior to attaining the age of 62 years, will amount to at least 30 years, except that this proviso shall not apply to such persons as were serving in the Navy as paymasters' clerks during the period from September 1, 1913, to October 31, 1913.

That the limitation as to age contained in section 1379 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to appointment of assistant paymasters in the United States Navy, shall not apply to chief pay clerks and pay clerks appointed under the provisions of this act, who must be between the ages of 21 and 35 years at the time of appointment as assistant paymasters in the United States Navy: Provided, That this shall not be construed as giving any preference in said appointment of assistant paymasters to said chief pay clerks and pay clerks except as to the limitation of age.

That sections 1386, 1387, and 1388 of the Revised Statutes, and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they are in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania please inform me how the duties that are provided for in this amendment have up to this time been performed, and by whom?

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is more familiar with this matter than am I, and I think he can explain it to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the amendment simply proposes to grade the Pay Corps and open it to the enlisted men. The total increase of expense is only $42,000. A bill embodying the same proposition has been reported upon favorably by the committee——

Mr. THOMAS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. LODGE. And has been passed by the Senate. It has also been reported unanimously by the House committee, and is simply delayed on the calendar. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] introduced the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. And I hope the amendment will be accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I accept the amendment. It has been passed by the committee and by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, and possibly of the conferees, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a memorandum on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The amendment now proposed is identical with Senate bill 3590, introduced by Senator TILLMAN December 8, 1913, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

This bill was reported by Senator TILLMAN March 4, 1914, Sixty-third Congress, second session, Report No. 314 hereto attached: No. 2. This bill was in accordance with a recommendation from the Navy Department suggesting certain changes in a House bill Mr. HOBSON had introduced, pages 2 to 6, Report No. 314, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

As reported the bill contained one amendment, the insertion of a section 5 and a change of what had been section 5 to section 6.

When the bill came up in the Senate, April 27, 1914, section 5 was changed, and with the change then made the bill was passed April 27, 1914, as by bill hereto attached and marked "No. 3." When the bill as passed came to the House Naval Committee it eliminated section 5 of the bill and, by unanimous vote, inserted in the House naval appropriation bill all the rest of the bill that had passed the Senate April 27, 1914; line 5, page 30, to the end of line 11, page 33, H. R. 20975, as reported by the committee; No. 4. This went out on a point of order on the floor of the House.

In the report accompanying said bill hereto attached, marked "5," House Report No. 1287, heading "Paymaster's clerks in the Navy," pages 10 and 11, is given the committee's reason for including this provision.

There what is proposed is identical with—

1. What the Navy Department recommended, Senate Report No. 314, pages 2 to 6.

2. What Senator TILLMAN introduced December 8, 1913, S. 3590, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

3. What has already passed the Senate, S. 3590, passed April 27, 1914.

4. What has been recommended unanimously by the House Naval Committee, House Report No. 1287, pages 10 and 11.

The increased cost of this legislation would amount to about $14,000 per annum, department's letter May 14, 1914, to the chairman Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, page 1, hereto attached.

MEMORANDUM.

Hitherto pay clerks have had no permanent position in the Navy.

They have been appointed at the instance of the paymaster with whom they were to serve.

Should they chance to render an entire service of 30 years, they by law become entitled to retirement.

The purpose of this bill is to give them a permanent status. In order to do that it is necessary to assimilate them to some permanent class in the Navy.

What this bill does is to classify them with warrant officers. Beyond that it is in no sense personal legislation. Both machinists and pharmacists had been left without further recognition as warrant officers, and they were given such recognition on appropriation bills.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to offer an amendment in reference to Mr. George W. Littlehales, who entered the academy at Annapolis in the latter seventies, graduated with high honors, but at the opening of the Panama transit in 1885 met with physical reverses which disqualified him from service. When the Spanish War broke out he took and passed an examination, and the Government assigned him to duty as professor. The matter was considered by the committee, and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was to have offered the amendment, but he is not here, and I therefore offer the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I think, Mr. President, the committee looked with favor upon this amendment, and suggested that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] should offer it on the floor of the Senate. I understand also that the chairman of the committee is willing to accept it, for conference, at any rate. It is a very meritorious case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

The President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint George W. Littlehales professor in the corps of professors of mathematics of the Navy, to take rank next after that grade of the Naval Academy in the corps of professors of mathematics who last preceded him in date of graduation, as additional number in that grade and in any grade to which he may thereafter be promoted.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment going to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand the committee amendments have been disposed of?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; the committee amendments have been concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Secretary advises the present temporary occupant of the chair that certain committee amendments have been passed over.

Mr. SWANSON. Certain committee amendments have been passed over; but a number of Senators who are interested in those amendments have not returned, and consequently I think it would be better to consider other amendments. I do not mean that we are going to adjourn, because I want to try to get this bill through to-night, if we can keep a quorum here.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at my request the amendment beginning in line 8, on page 66, went over. The chairman of the committee has since informed me of its purpose and has explained some features of it with which I was not familiar. I therefore withdraw any objection to it; and, so far as I am concerned, it may be agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that that amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 67, line 3, all of the proviso down to and including line 17, on the same page.

In connection with that amendment, Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senator from Virginia is familiar with the fact that precisely the same amendment in the Army bill was rejected by the Senate only two days ago; and I do not think that one rule should prevail in one branch of the Government service and another rule in another.

In addition to that, Mr. President, the Industrial Commission appointed by the President is now at work on this and other problems of the same kind. I think it would be well to let the thing go over for the present. I feel rather insistent on having this acted on, but I do not want to call for a quorum at this time, and I am inclined to appeal to the Senator to let this amendment be adopted and let it go to conference and let the conferees settle it with the House.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am in favor of this amendment. It passed the House.

Mr. OLIVER. It was adopted on the floor of the House, as I understand. It was not reported by the committee in the House.

Mr. SWANSON. I know that the Senate, after full discussion, has defeated this amendment on the military bill, and I could not consent to have it go out without a vote of the Senate.

Mr. President, this in an effort to prevent the Taylor system from being introduced into Government employment. I am one of those who think the Government ought to be a model employer of labor. I think the Government ought to do all it can to show that it is a generous, model employer of labor. I think it is foolish in this Government, the greatest employer of labor in this Nation, to criticize other employers of labor for being harsh, for being exacting, for speeding up or introducing the Taylor system, for paying low wages, when it is not itself a model, generous employer. I think this Government is more interested in the prosperity, the happiness, the health, and the good pay of its employees than any manufacturer or any other employer of labor could be.

Feeling that way, and feeling that the Government ought to be a generous model employer of labor I as one man am opposed to the introduction into the Government work in any direction of the Taylor system, or anything appertaining to the speeding up of men, which will exhaust them quickly, impair their skill and their energy and their health.

With that remark, stating my position, thinking that the Senate made a mistake, I am willing to have a vote on this question and let the Senate decide it. If the Senate decides to strike it out, it will go to conference; but I think I should state that I am strongly in favor of this amendment. I think it is right and proper.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I will ask what page the amendment is on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 3, the proviso, commencing after the word "emergency" and running down to and including the words "Government plant," in line 17.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am willing to have it go to a vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the following language:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to obtain some information with regard to this amendment. As the Secretary read it, he read the words that are stricken out by the committee amendment, and did not read those that were inserted. I supposed those words had been agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. No; they went out on a point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. That gives me the information I desired to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language is stricken from the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, line 24, after the word "vessels," it is proposed to strike out the colon and insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall not consider any bid by any corporation for the construction herein provided for, or any part thereof, unless such bid is accompanied by a sworn list of stockholders and bondholders of the corporation submitting such bid as the same appears upon the books of such corporation on the 1st of July, A. D. 1914, which list shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy in his annual report.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order on that amendment that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I send to the desk an amendment to be added after line 21, on page 5, and, as explanatory of it, I send up a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Navy, all payments heretofore made for telephones in Government quarters that have been disallowed or are subject to disallowance under section 7 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government approved August 23, 1912.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter sent to the desk by the Senator from Virginia will be read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 29, 1915.

Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government approved August 23, 1912 (37 Stats., 414), in section 7 prohibits the expenditure of money appropriated by that or any other act "for telephone service installed in any private residence or private apartment or for tolls or other charges for telephone service from private residences or private apartments, except for long-distance telephone tolls required strictly for the public business * * *."

At the time this act was passed telephone service in Government quarters at navy yards and stations was maintained for public purposes at public expense, as it had been for many years previously, and it was not understood that these quarters were affected by the act. Later it was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that such quarters were "private residences or private apartments" within the meaning of the statute, and consequently that the expenditure of public funds for telephone service installed therein was prohibited.

In the meantime, however, before this ruling became known to them, many pay officers had, in the ordinary course of duty, made the usual payments on account of such service from the date of the act under the Government's contracts with the telephone companies, and for these payments, which amount in the aggregate to about $1,800, the accounting officers of the Treasury deny them credit in the settlement of their accounts and hold them personally responsible. They will accordingly, unless Congress otherwise provides, have to reimburse the Government for the sums so paid.

It is deemed inequitable, in the circumstances, that they should be required to do this, and I therefore recommend that they be given relief. This, it is suggested, might appropriately be granted, should the committee see fit, by means of a clause in the pending naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20975) directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow these payments in the settlement of their accounts. The draft of a clause that would, it is believed, effect the desired end is inclosed. This provision, as will be seen, involves no appropriation, but merely authorizes due credit to be given for payments heretofore made in good faith for service for which the Government had, for its own purposes, contracted.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, yours, FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, Acting Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, that is a small item; but, as I gather it, these telephones were used for a private purpose and not for a governmental purpose. They were simply for the benefit of the individuals. If that is true, no matter how small it is, on principle the amount ought not to be paid by the Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator is correct about that. Undoubtedly the telephones were used to some extent for private purposes, but they were put there for the Government service. It had been a custom for a long time. They had been paid for by the Government, and they were used by the officers of the Government for Government purposes; but they were in residences which they occupied, and which had been assigned to them as quarters. Undoubtedly, as I say, they were used to some extent for private purposes; but they were put there for Government purposes, and hitherto have been paid for by the Government on that account and for those purposes. These officers of the Navy, when they put in these telephones, had no idea of putting in anything for themselves. They were put in for Government purposes, and the Secretary of the Navy thinks they ought not to be required to pay for them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With the explanation of the Senator from Virginia I will not make a point of order against this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there was an amendment passed over upon which the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] desired to speak. He is very deeply interested in the question, and he did not expect the bill to reach this stage so early, and I think he went home to his dinner. He has not yet returned to the Senate. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not let that matter go over until to-morrow morning?

In that connection I wish to say that I desire to offer an amendment to the submarine paragraph; and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] desires to offer an amendment to my amendment, providing that the sale of Panama bonds shall be authorized for the purpose of paying for the construction of the submarines.

I will say to the Senator that it is not going to take very long to discuss the matter. I certainly should want a vote of the Senate upon the amendment, and I ask the Senator if he will not allow the bill to go over now until to-morrow morning with those two questions unsettled?

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the Secretary what amendments were passed over?

The SECRETARY. On page 30 the committee offered a substitute for lines 1 to 19, which was passed over on the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

On page 63——

Mr. SWANSON. On page 32, lines 23 and 24, and down to line 7, on page 33, went over at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that that was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Then I ask for a reconsideration of the vote, because he asked that it should go over until he returned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is unanimously reconsidered, and it will be passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, lines 23 and 24, and on page 33, lines 1 to 7, both inclusive, are passed over.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I see that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is here now, and we will be able to take up the section popularly known as the "plucking board," which we passed over until he could return and be present in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, it is proposed to strike out lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Hereafter no officer of the line, Medical or Pay Corps, shall be promoted who has not had active sea service covering half or more of the time during which he has been in the service; and any officer who has failed to have such an amount of sea service to his credit shall be placed on the retired list: Provided, That this shall not apply to the grades of commander and captain until three years from the date of the approval of this act, or to the grade of ensign: Provided further, That this provision shall not apply to those engineer officers transferred to the line under section 5 of the act of March 3, 1899: Provided further, That shore duty beyond the seas shall be considered as active sea service for the purposes of this act.

Hereafter whenever an officer of the Navy has been assigned to shore duty, retired officers of suitable rank may be assigned to such duty in all posts where the appointment of an officer of the active list is not required by law: Provided, That when retired officers are thus assigned to active duty, they shall receive the pay and allowances of the grade from which they were retired.

Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will try in a succinct way to explain the effect of this provision. It proposes to repeal section 9 of what is known as the personnel act and substitute this as a provision to obtain the retirement of officers. The House of Representatives repealed section 9 of the act, which requires the retirement of 15 officers each year whether they are efficient or not. The board is assembled and the men are retired, unless 40 have been retired voluntarily during the year. Recently there has been a great deal of criticism on account of the officers retired. It is shown that they have been retiring efficient men, which is not productive of good to the Navy. Gibbons, Hill, Rusk, and various prominent, efficient naval officers were retired. The effect of the retirement was that the officers were retired on three-fourths pay and rendered no service to the Government, and the Government continued to pay them.

These cases came up before the committees of the House and Senate. Some of them were anxious to be put on the active list of the Navy. Practically all these men asked was to be permitted to serve the Government without any pay except a few thousand dollars, which really meant that they asked to serve the Government practically for nothing. They were so interested in naval work, in their life work in the Navy, that that was the request they made to the Government.

Now, when the ninth section is repealed it is important that there should be a way in which officers who are inefficient, officers who have not and can not have sea service, may be retired so that they can not some day have command of important positions in fleets. So the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate recommend a repeal of section 9 of the personnel bill, which provides for a "plucking board," and then offers this as a substitute to what the House provided, which would make it in order, so as to compel naval officers in order to get a promotion to spend one-half of their time at sea.

Now, the great effort is to get shore service. Influences are sought to get officers located on shore. By this provision we expect that the demand will be for sea service and not for shore service. If a man has not been at sea or engaged in sea service one-half his time, when the time for his promotion arrives he can not be promoted and he is retired.

This is based on the English law. The English law has a way of getting rid of inefficient officers, men who can not go to sea and men who do not wish to go to sea, by requiring them to be at sea one-half the time they have served before they can have a promotion. Consequently they have efficient men, men who are capable physically and mentally and in every way to command fleets. We believe this will be effective. It has proven effective in the English system.

Another part of this amendment leaves it discretionary with the department to employ retired naval officers in certain work. Under the present law, as I understand it, retired naval officers can only be given assignments on their request or as they may wish. This leaves the discretion with the department, so that the department may give them assignments by which they may render some service to the Government when they are retired on three-fourths pay.

We have on our retired list, I think, 980 officers. We have on the active list about 3,300 officers. This is a very large proportion. The amendment confines it to the line, to the Medical and to the Pay Corps. This is the seagoing corps of the Navy. The others are not affected by this provision.

We believe this is wise. We believe it is just. We believe it will give us a Navy which will have sufficient service previously rendered on the sea and that there will be a desire to go to sea instead of coming to shore. We believe that is necessary for a very efficient Navy.

I have asked the department to give me a list of the officers who would be retired at present by this provision. I do not think there is any necessity for retiring officers in the Navy at present. We have a shortage of officers for the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy wrote me as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 25, 1915.

Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your request by telephone as to the number of officers that probably would be retired by the sea-service clause of the pending appropriation bill owing to their having had less sea service than half of their total service when due for promotion, I beg to submit the following as the numbers that it appears would unavoidably be retired if the clause in question became law:

Line officers.

Captains	1
Commanders	1
Lieutenant commanders	1
Lieutenants	2
Lieutenants (junior grade)	1
Ensigns	134
Total	140

The amendment sent to the department at that time did not exclude ensigns. The amendment as now proposed excludes ensigns from its operation, and hence 134 officers would not be included.

Medical officers.

Medical inspectors	None.
Surgeons	None.
Passed assistant surgeons	None.
Assistant surgeons	None.

Pay officers.

Pay inspectors	3
Paymasters	2
Passed assistant paymasters	None.
Assistant paymasters	None.
Total	5
Chaplains	None.

It is evident that this will not operate to get rid of any efficient officers in the Navy. Its benefits are expected for the future in the fact that it will require sea service in order to get promotion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator from Virginia a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume from this that any officer who wanted to would be sure of being able to spend half of his service at sea. Then, if it was the policy of the department to lay up quite a number of ships, if they did not want to keep them in commission, is it possible this would operate against the wish of an officer to retire him on the ground that he had not had an opportunity to comply with the demand which is put upon him to serve half his time at sea?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not speak positively of that. Very frequently, I understand, in the English system——

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Virginia will allow me, I will say in reply to the Senator from Connecticut that we know now and the department complains that they are short of officers for the ships we have at sea. We ought to have all our ships in commission. It is owing to the fact that we have not enough men. We ought to have more men. As the Assistant Secretary of the Navy testified, there are 18,000 men short. We are short of officers for sea service. There is plenty of opportunity for sea service; there is no trouble about that; and I shall show later what the condition is with officers on shore duty.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if there is a shortage of the kind mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts, why is it that the officers are not ordered into the service?

Mr. LODGE. I am prepared to reply to that question.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The shortage, I think, is over 300 officers that the department has represented to us. This came from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy to-day. We have at this time 112 officers of the line on shore duty in the District of Columbia, and we have 426 on shore duty, both beyond the seas and in the United States, other than in the District of Columbia. Those beyond the seas are attachés at legations and embassies, and are very few in number. So we have here 500 officers now upon the active list on shore duty.

To give some idea as to how it is here in the District of Columbia I will quote from Navy and Marine Corps List and Directory, of February 1, 1915. These positions the Senate will understand. Some of them must be officers in the active service. Some at the heads of bureaus are required by law to be officers on the active list.

Aid for operations	1
Assistants	4
Aid for the Marine Corps	1
Aid for personnel (assistant)	1
Aid for material	1
Assistants	3
Aid for education	1

Those are the Secretary's personal staff, at it may be described.

Director of the navy yards	1
Aid for the Secretary	1
Admiral of the Navy	1
Assistants to the Admiral of the Navy	2
Director of the Office of Naval Intelligence	1
Assistants	8

I do not think there is any need of that number of young officers in the Bureau of Naval Intelligence.

Chief of Bureau of Navigation (that is, by law)	1
Assistants	5
Hydrographic officer	1
Assistants	3

That is an office where we must have scientific men; you can not avoid it.

Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks	1
Assistants	4
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance	1
Assistants	14

Fourteen officers in that bureau under the chief.

Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair	1
Assistants	7
Chief of Bureau of Steam Engineering	1
Assistants	16
Chief of Bureau of Supplies and Accounts	1
Assistants	6

That is work which can be done by civilian clerks perfectly well.

Chief of Bureau of Medicine and Surgery	1
Assistants	5
Judge Advocate General	1
Assistants	8
Commandant of the navy yard	1
Assistants	23
General Board:
Admiral of the Navy	0
Rear admirals	1
Captains	4
Other officers	5
Inspection Board	5
General inspector	1
Naval Examining Board	4
Retiring and Medical Examining Board	6

All those boards must be made up of naval officers.

Marine headquarters	9
Quartermaster's Department	4
Marine Barracks	6
Other officers on duty	42
Total	214

Here are all these young officers doing, many of them, purely clerical work in the Navy Department, and we are short of officers on our ships.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the total?

Mr. LODGE. In the District of Columbia, 112.

Mr. NORRIS. I mean the total of officers on shore duty.

Mr. LODGE. Officers on shore duty, 534.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give the number who are on shore duty where it is compulsory under the law?

Mr. LODGE. Very few. All the chiefs of bureaus—seven chiefs of bureaus—are under the law.

Mr. NORRIS. The balance are there by some detail?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, we must have a naval officer for Judge Advocate General and at the Hydrographic Office, and one to be director of the Naval Academy, making 10.

Mr. NORRIS. And the balance, something over 500, are on shore because they are detailed?

Mr. LODGE. They are on shore because they are detailed. Now, the purpose of this amendment is to make the competition for sea duty because their promotion would depend upon that instead of competition among the young officers for shore duty.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to know whether it would not be possible, even if the amendment were passed, for some of these officers to be detailed on shore duty without any desire on their part, and thus be prevented from gaining a promotion to which they would otherwise be entitled?

Mr. LODGE. There are more places on sea duty than there are officers.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true now, and yet we find over 500 of them are doing shore duty when there is a shortage of officers on sea duty.

Mr. LODGE. There would be no danger of that if they were obliged to perform 50 per cent of sea duty. They would seek it. There is nothing to prevent the employment of civilian clerks in these offices.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator. I am not asking these questions in any spirit of criticism.

Mr. LODGE. No; I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. What I want to get at is whether, even though this amendment were adopted, it would not be possible for some of these officers to be detailed against their wish for shore duty and thus be prevented from gaining a promotion.

Mr. LODGE. I can not conceive that the department would do a thing like that.

Mr. NORRIS. They have been detailing these men for shore duty.

Mr. LODGE. They have been detailing them for duty which they seek and orders which they request.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the letter I received this evening from the Secretary of the Navy shows that there would not be half a dozen officers who would be retired when you eliminate the ensigns by requiring half sea duty. The plucking board and the Secretary of the Navy require recently sea duty for promotion, and that has made a great many seek sea duty. The only people who would not get it to-day if they applied would be people who are inefficient for the command of a ship. If the man who wanted sea duty is inefficient and is not suited to have command of a ship, they could refuse it; and that would be one way to eliminate a man who was inefficient.

Mr. LODGE. That would operate to get inefficient men out of the service.

Mr. SWANSON. You have got to leave a discretion somewhere. As a means to get rid of inefficient men the board has not been satisfactory, and recently there has been a great demand for the repeal of section 9. They have never refused to give a man sea service, as I understand, either in England or here, if the man was capable for sea service.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to know why the officials of the Navy do this detailing when they do not need the men on shore but do need them at sea?

Mr. LODGE. I will answer the Senator that these heads of bureaus seek young officers for their assistants. Many of the young officers like to have shore duty here in Washington. It is very pleasant. If those men insisted on going to sea because it was necesary for their promotion, it could not be refused, if they were competent men; and if they were not competent men they ought to be refused. We have tried to meet that difficulty by the second part, to which I was going to call attention.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But up to this point, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, it seems to me the inevitable conclusion from what the Senator has said is that it is a very poor and weak administration of the department that allows this accumulation of officers where they are not needed on shore, and at the same time is complaining of lack of officers at sea. Officers ought not to be detailed here, if they are not needed, simply because they like it.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I think there is decidedly a less number on shore now than there were.

Mr. LODGE. They have been reduced very much under the present requirement.

Mr. SWANSON. They have been greatly reduced under the present requirement.

Mr. LODGE. Let me go back a moment. The personnel bill owes its existence very largely to the fact that the flow of promotion had become clogged with the creation of what they call a "hump," where men passed a lifetime in the inferior grades and then went through the last grades, perhaps being a couple of years a captain and one year an admiral. They all went through, with no men having any length of term in the upper grades, and it created this "hump," as they call it, where there was no promotion. They passed all the best years of their life when they could be most useful to the country as lieutenants and lieutenant commanders.

To meet that difficulty and open the flow of promotion the law provided that there should be as least 40 officers taken out of the service every year in addition to vacancies created by death and promotion. Of those 40 they provided that any officer who wished to voluntarily retire could retire for illness or for any other reason with one grade higher than the one he held, and if the number did not reach 40, then what was known as the plucking board was authorized to select not more than 15 men toward making up the 40—it has usually been much less than 15—from the grades of the Navy which were duly proportioned.

That started the flow of promotions and enabled officers to get higher commands while they were still in the prime of life and able to give the best service. The plucking board, for reasons I need not go into, has excited great hostility. It is generally believed, whether rightly or wrongly, that the plucking board is influenced by personal considerations in many cases and that officers have been retired by the plucking board who ought to have been kept and others should have been retired; that is, that some of those retired by the plucking board were superior to those who had been left in the service. I am not going into the truth or the falsity of that, but that was the general belief, and that is what has lead to the action of the House and caused the general feeling, as I understand, in the Senate to abolish the plucking board. If we do that and put nothing whatever in its place, we again stop the flow of promotions and we again choke up the officers into "a hump," as it is called, where they pass, as I have said, all the best years of their lives in the lower grades and never reach large and responsible commands, as they ought to do when they are of most value to the Nation.

For that reason the committee in its amendment adopted the English system and what has been the English system for years; that is, requiring a certain percentage of sea service out of the years of total service of an officer. In the Navy in England, I think, they require a higher amount of sea service. It has worked extremely well in that country for a great many years. The incompetent and inefficient men have been weeded out by a process of natural selection, the flow of promotion has been maintained, and officers have sought sea service.

There are two ways in which we can help this. I think the system will work of itself if we can aid it in two ways: One is to give civilian assistants in these offices which the laws have not yet given and which we can not provide for in this bill, but which can easily be done. The other is to avail ourselves of the retired officers, which we have done here. There are many men retired at the age of 62 under the law of our Navy—and it is a proper law—who are just as competent to take charge of a navy yard or of a naval station as they ever were. I have known many of them, men who would be glad to continue at their work. That is the practice in foreign navies; they do not take their men off the active list and put them in command of shore stations, but they avail themselves of the retired list so far as they can.

We have a great body of retired officers, many of whom are not only thoroughly fit to do work of that sort, better perhaps than many others who are appointed, and who desire work, but who are kept in enforced idleness. There is a large force that we can avail ourselves of. We have officers lower down in the service who have been retired because of some disability, who are perfectly competent to do office work. I remember a case that came to my own knowledge, and in which I took an interest, of an officer who had lost a leg in the line of duty. He was retired and left with only his retired pay. He was an excellent hydrographer, a well-trained officer, a graduate of Annapolis. A bill was passed by Congress, in which I took an interest, restoring him to the active list. I do not know where that officer is now at this moment, but I think he has been in the Hydrographic Office ever since. He was, of course, incapacitated for sea service. He had lost a leg in the course of his duty by an accident in the service. While he could not go to sea, he was thoroughly fitted to do that office work; and we availed ourselves of his services. If we had had this law, we need not have passed a special act to restore him to the active list, but he could have been put right in by the department.

In this amendment we now give the Secretary of the Navy the power to assign retired officers. He can not do so under the law now unless the retired officers are willing to take the duty. Many of them are willing to take duty, but they want to select it. This gives the Secretary the power to appoint retired officers who are physically fit to fill places which are now occupied by officers whom we need in the active service. Even with our present shortage of men and with our ships out of commission, we are still short of officers, and the Navy is complaining of it. What the committee desires to do in this amendment is to take such steps as will allow the Secretary of the Navy to get rid of active officers who are needlessly put on shore duty.

I think myself that if the plucking board is to be abolished we must have some method of keeping open the flow of promotion. I think this amendment will accomplish that. If it does not, then it will be very easy at another session to make some change. I think, however, to abolish the plucking board and put nothing in its place would be a great mistake. It would clog all the avenues of promotion. I think this amendment will also have the effect of using our present force to the best advantage, using the retired officers where they can be used, and in that way setting free a number of officers who are now taken from the active list and placed on shore duty.

I can only say, in conclusion, that this is not a new experiment. It has been in operation for years in the English Navy, and has there worked extremely well. So far as I know, it is not a service that is complained of at all. The English naval officer's one desire is to get to sea. If he shirks his duty and keeps away from it, he is retired when he comes up for promotion, or if for any reason he is inefficient or incompetent and not fit to be trusted to command a ship, he does not get the command of a ship.

This is a good system, and it can very easily be amended another year if there is found to be any trouble. As a matter of fact, it can not do any injustice.

The men who are now on the list who would be affected by it, as Admiral Blue told us, are almost all men who are physically unable to go to sea; and they ought to be retired. There are very few of these, not half a dozen altogether. Since the department has required 40 per cent of sea service, it has had the effect of sending men to sea. We ought not to have this mass of naval officers, whom we educate, pay, and keep in the service, doing clerical duty in the department, as many of them are doing. It is unreasonable on the face of it. We ought not to let them be doing work which the retired officers can do just as well.

That is the explanation of the amendment, in which I took a great deal of interest, as did all members of the committee, because we felt that if the plucking board was to be abolished, something should be put in its place.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I presume that what I may suggest may not have any particular effect in the solution of this question, but I wish to make a brief statement, for I hold very different views about the plucking board and the effect of the plucking board from those held by many Senators and Representatives.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me, of course he understands that when I was stating the objection to the plucking board I did not agree with a great many of the objections made to it. I simply stated the undeniable fact that the objections which have been made to the board led to the action of the House.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think I understand the position of my colleague, and I do not wish to take issue with what he has just said.

I desire, however, to refer to some considerations which were urged in favor of the legislation providing for the "plucking board" and to state some of the results of the operations of that board as I understand them. One of the difficulties, as I see it, in the development of our naval and military administration is that we are apt to do things in a lopsided way. There develops a demand for more ships, and we construct the ships without providing at the same time a suitable number of men for them. What we should do, if we want a homogeneous Navy, is to take a ton of a battleship as a unit, and for every ton of battleship there should be constructed a proportional tonnage of torpedo boats, battle cruisers, scout cruisers, and submarines, and there should be officers and men provided at the same time by the same provision sufficient to man each ton of shipping provided.

Mr. THOMAS. And transports.

Mr. WEEKS. And, as the Senator from Colorado very properly suggests, there should be provided a suitable tonnage of auxiliaries of all kinds at the same time. Then we would not have a condition where we would be short of officers and men; this method would prevent that condition in the Navy where at one time we would have much more material than we have men to man it, and at another time we would have a surplus of personnel—as, for instance, 35 years ago a large number of junior officers were mustered out of the naval service because we had insufficient ships.

The plucking board was provided for the purpose of stimulating promotion in the Navy in the higher grades. For a great many years we had had a captain's list where the average captain was between 55 and 60 years of age. In many instances we had lieutenants who did not get out of that grade and into the grade of lieutenant commander until they were nearly 50 years of age. In other words, many of these officers were too old when they passed into the command grades—very much older than such officers in any other service in the world.

There were suggested different methods of overcoming that difficulty, so that men should come into command rank at an age when their initiative is not entirely gone, when they are young enough to take the responsibility which men in middle life will take, but which frequently men who have passed the meridian of life will not take.

The plucking board was not provided primarily to take out of the service inefficient or mediocre men, but to retire a certain number of men in the higher grades each year, so that there would be a steady flow of promotion and officers would get into the commander's grade as early in their forties as possible; that they would get into the captain's grade before they were 50, and would become rear admirals by the time they were 55, 56, or 57 years old at the latest, so that we would have men of suitable rank who had had experience as commanders not only of ships but of squadrons and fleets years before they reached the retiring age, so that they would be trained for command in case we got into difficulty. That was the primary reason for the plucking-board provision.

I do not think any method which might be adopted for the retirement of officers would be satisfactory to the officers themselves in every case; I do not think it would be satisfactory to the Senate or to the House in every case. We are apt to have our sympathies appealed to by friends of ours who have been plucked by the board; and our judgments are formed on our knowledge of such men or our feeling toward them, rather than upon the best interests of the service.

Some of the men who have been plucked in recent years, and very recently, too, are among my most intimate personal friends, men with whom I served in the Naval Academy, whom I have known personally and intimately since. I am sorry they have been plucked. In some cases I myself could not see the reason why they had been plucked, and yet in other cases I knew of reasons which did not appear in the public record. Every Senator here knows men who go on through life without a scratch against their records in any way or shape, and yet they are men of very moderate capacity, and frequently are not men who would be put in positions of responsibility. That is true of the Navy. Then there are men in the naval service who are naturally martinets, who do not have a happy ship or a happy watch or a happy condition amongst those who are junior to them. The latter condition applies to one of the men who are going to be affected by this bill—I will not mention his name, but he has many friends in the Senate and House of Representatives who are anxious that he be restored to the service. His record is clear in the Navy Department, but he is a man who has not, in my judgment, treated his subordinates with fairness, and he was undoubtedly—I do not know this to be a fact—but he was undoubtedly plucked because he invariably had an unhappy watch, an unhappy ship wherever he served. You can not get the best efficiency in any occupation if you are not going to have thorough harmony between the senior and the junior and the men or employees in the service or in civil life. Even a mediocre man in command, if there is harmony and happiness on board his ship, is better than a man of much greater intellectuality but who is a martinet, who is unfair to those under him, either to his officers or the men, in which case the result is always unhappiness and inefficiency.

One of the men who are going to be affected by this bill as it stands now is an excellent officer, in my opinion, in most respects, and yet he had a ship that was in such condition at one time that a board of inspection asked that there should be a court of inquiry to determine why the condition of the ship was unsatisfactory.

All of such things, or most of them, do not appear in the officer's record; in the latter instance, of course, it did, but in many cases they do not appear in the officer's record.

Who have been the members of the "plucking boards"? They have generally been the very best officers in the service and have been frequently headed by a man who has commanded a battleship fleet during its last cruise, and by other admirals who have had intimate up-to-date knowledge, not only of the activities of the service but of the officers themselves. They meet in the Navy Department, they consider the records, and undoubtedly they are influenced by their own personal knowledge of the officers. I do not mean to say that in every case they have been entirely happy in the selections which they have made, but in most cases they have been. I remember when the first board sat, even though I had been out of the service nearly 20 years, I marked more than half of the men whom I believed should be selected out under the provisions of this act. It was perfectly apparent that certain men were inefficient; that certain men had habits which militated against the best interests of the service; that some of them had not those qualities which would make the most competent men, even in the grades which they held, and which would prevent their being placed in positions of greater responsibility in case of war.

In a general way, preventing that condition, that has been the kind of service the plucking boards have performed. In my judgment, the plucking board, with its defects, has done more than anything else to stimulate the officers of the service, to bring them up to a high degree of efficiency, to cause them to try to make themselves so competent in the requirements of the service that they would not be plucked by the next board. It has driven to sea men who ordinarily would have stayed ashore, if otherwise they had had an opportunity to have done so and before the establishment of the plucking board. They knew that if they stayed ashore beyond a certain limitation of time they would be plucked by the next board, and they have frequently asked permission to go to sea, even when the best interests of the service required that they remain on shore. In every way it has caused men to study, it has corrected the habits of men, and it has given us a list of captains which I believe has never been excelled and has never been equaled in the American Navy.

What are we substituting for this? If we are going to eliminate the plucking board—and I am not prepared to say that it could not be improved—I wish the substitution had been studied with great deliberation and not during the consideration and preparation of an appropriation bill. I am sure the members of the committee will not consider that I am criticizing them unduly when I say that the proposition which they brought into the Senate this afternoon, which appears in the bill which we would have considered until this bill was taken up, would have provided for the retirement of 137 ensigns, the whole construction corps of the Navy, the whole corps of civil engineers of the Navy, a portion of the chaplains' corps, and many paymasters and surgeons. It was not intended that those men should be eliminated from the service, but they would have been if this amendment which the Senator from Virginia has offered had not been prepared and corrected that condition. Even now, under the present conditions, as proposed in that amendment, in my judgment, we are going to establish a system which, from the standpoint of the best interests of the service, is so much more reprehensible than the plucking board that it ought not to be considered. What are we going to do? We are going to say that if a man has not served one-half his time at sea in a certain grade when he comes up for promotion he shall be retired.

Mr. LODGE. In all grades.

Mr. WEEKS. Well, in all grades. He is to be retired. Let us suppose that the Secretary of the Navy or the Assistant Secretary of the Navy or the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation wants to retire a man. Let us suppose that they do not like a man; that they are prejudiced against a man. They could keep him on shore until his service on shore would be longer than his service at sea, so that when he comes up he would be automatically retired. In other words, you are going to substitute the Navy Department itself for a board made up of the best and most efficient officers of the Navy.

I submit, Mr. President, that any man would prefer to have his conduct, his qualities, and his work passed on by his fellows, by his peers, than by those who have never seen him in action. How can the Secretary of the Navy know anything about the qualities of a naval officer when he never has seen that officer in service? Who can know any better about his qualities than can his commanding officer and his fleet officer, under whom he may have served on many cruises?

In other words, and in a word, I believe we are substituting for a system which is not perfect by any means, but which has done much for the service, a condition and a method which will not work as well, which will not be as fair, which will be no improvement whatever over what we have, and which, inside of a reasonable time, will go into the discard, just as the plucking board is likely to do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is very much more familiar with naval matters than anybody else on this floor. Does he think that that system has been a failure in the British Navy?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not understand that exactly that system has been in vogue in the British Navy.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I judge from their statutes and from what I have been told.

Mr. WEEKS. It has been a system of promotion up. There has been in Great Britain such laws that the board of admirals had the power to select an especially efficient man and promote him over the heads of his fellows. That is what has given the British Navy a list of commanding officers and of fleet officers younger in years than those of any other navy, and they are considered by many the best men in any navy. If they have been well selected, that would be the result.

I read in a paper the other day that Vice Admiral Beatty, who is commanding one of the divisions or a part of the fleet now operating in the North Sea, was a man in the forties. We have not now, and we have not had within my recollection, a rear admiral under 55 years of age. In other words, they take a man in middle life who has proven his efficiency, just as we have done several times in our Army, and give him a promotion which probably is justified. It is justified if absolutely good judgment and fairness are observed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that the Senator is opposed to this provision because the Secretary of the Navy can exercise a prejudice and refuse to send a man to sea even if he is efficient for sea service.

Mr. WEEKS. I say that is possible.

Mr. SWANSON. It is possible. Would the Senator recommend an amendment to this bill which would permit the Secretary of the Navy or the President to promote a man regardless of his position or grade in the Navy? Does not the Senator think that prejudice would be exercised in one case as much as in the other?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Senator has asked that question without giving my statement any consideration. I am talking about the English Navy. The English Navy is governed by an admiralty board, and the men on that admiralty board are naval officers themselves.

Mr. LODGE. They are civil lords and sea lords.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; they are civil lords and sea lords; but they have the same quality of opinion and judgment as the plucking board which has been in operation in this country; so that, in effect, they are promoting outside of the regular order while we are retiring men because they have been less efficient, because their habits have not been good or for some other reason, taking the men who can best be spared, and thereby bringing about a steady flow of promotion in the service.

I do not mean to say that any of these systems are perfect. No system can be perfect which has the human equation as a part of it, as any such system must have; but it is a subject that is so vital to the best interests of the Navy that, in my judgment, it should not be undertaken without the most careful consideration, and it should not be undertaken in the haste that is always found in the consideration of an appropriation bill, a haste which is accentuated at this time by the conditions surrounding legislation in this Congress.

I am not sure what the results will be. I can only hope for the best, because the Naval Committees of both House and Senate have decided that the plucking board must go—a decision which I can not help thinking has been brought about not by the judgment of the Members but as the result of sympathies which have been created by their unfortunate friends who have been plucked—but I am so anxious that our Navy shall be thoroughly efficient, that it shall not be influenced in any way by political conditions, that it shall not be influenced in any way by personal sympathies, that it shall not be influenced in any way by anything except a desire to have the best men in places of responsibility, that I can only express the hope that these important changes affecting the personnel may be considered and brought about at a time of deliberation, when we can have at our disposal the experience of all other nations as well as the testimony of the best officers in our own service.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to his colleague?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. LODGE. I believe that despite all its errors the plucking board should be retained; but I fear that if we abolish the plucking board and put nothing in its place we will restore the old condition, which, I think, is much worse than any other.

Mr. WEEKS. I am quite in agreement with that statement.

Mr. LODGE. I would keep the plucking board, if I could, despite its errors; and I do not think its members are guilty of all that is charged against them by any means. I think they have made some errors. That is human. I shall be sorry if Congress decides to abolish them; but if it does, I do think we ought to devise some method to keep the flow of promotions open. The committee has turned—I am aware it has been done in haste—to the British system. What my colleague says about promotions is quite true; but is it not also true that the British statute which I have read requires the sea service?

Mr. WEEKS. I think it does.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure it does.

Mr. WEEKS. That is my recollection, and I am not objecting to the sea service; but every Senator must remember that the duty performed by an officer is the duty to which he has been assigned by the department itself. If he does not have sufficient sea service to justify his promotion, then it is the fault of the department, rather than the fault of the officer; and he ought not to be held responsible because he has been performing the duties to which he has been assigned.

An old friend of mine whom I have not seen for 30 years came to see me to-day. He was "plucked" three or four years ago. He complained that he had been kept performing duty on shore when he had entered his protest several times against it, had asked for sea duty, had begged for sea duty, but had not been given it. When the plucking board came along, they decided, among other things, that he had not performed his proper share of the sea duty that he should have performed, so he was one of those plucked. I think he was a reasonably good officer; and he was kept on shore in that instance not by his own desire but by the orders of the department, against his own wish.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from Massachusetts, in his description of the English and American methods of improving the personnel of their respective navies, describes the English system as one in which the personnel is kept up to the mark by promotion for efficiency, while the American system apparently is that of punishment for inefficiency. One is a system of rewards and the other a system of punishments.

I think there is a great deal of force in what the Senator from Massachusetts has said about the effect of the fear of the plucking board keeping American naval officers up to the mark. I have talked with a good many of them about it, and I can see in my conversations with them that the possibility of such a thing as plucking occurring to themselves has a very decided effect upon the way in which they regard their duties, and particularly upon the way in which they regard the personal habits which they are at liberty to enjoy. Nevertheless, it seems to me—and this is what I am coming to—that while this plucking provision, as I understand it, is a compulsory plucking system—that is, a certain number or a certain proportion of the men have to be retired every year—it necessarily involves either that some men shall be retired whose inefficiency, if you choose to call it such, is not sufficient to justify it, or that some men are left in the service whose inefficiency is so great that they ought to be retired.

If it is going to be a compulsory retirement for the purpose of opening up the higher grades to the possibility of promotion for younger men, and that retirement is going to be made without any charges being brought against the men, why can not it be made without the attachment of the disgrace that comes from the use of the word "plucking"? Why can not a man be retired in such a way that there is no dishonor attached to it, and where it is distinctly understood that the only reason for it is not because there is any inefficiency attached to his service, but because it is necessary to open up the higher grades? In other words, why could not the declaration be made that there are too many officers in the Navy, and so the ones of a certain condition have to be retired?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am not quite sure whether the Senator was present when I commenced my discussion. If he was, he will recall that I said that the primary purpose of establishing the plucking board was to provide a steady flow of promotion. It did not necessarily mean that there were inefficient men to be plucked. It meant that the men who could be best spared would be plucked. They might be very good men, but their age was such that they were not reaching a suitable command age or a suitable flag age before they had passed the period required for the best results in those particular grades; and therefore the primary purpose was to stimulate promotions, rather than to get rid of inefficient men.

Mr. LIPPITT. That was just the point that I had in my mind. If men are retired on account of age, why should not their retirement be placed on that ground, and not on the ground of inefficiency?

The fact is that there has been connected with every man who has been retired by this board—I do not know whether "plucking board" is the official name for it or not; I presume not, but it is the common name—an element of disgrace. It has been regarded by his friends, both in and out of the service, that there has been a reflection on his professional character. In a few instances in which I have happened to know the individuals, it seemed to me like a very unjust thing that men who have arrived at the age that they have, who have had a long and apparently honorable service, should come to the conclusion of it and have to retire under a system by which a jury of their peers decided that they were unfit.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that is simply a conclusion to which the Senator has come without in my opinion any justification for it.

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, Mr. President, it is the common judgment.

Mr. WEEKS. I know that is the common judgment; but it is not the law, and it is not the purpose of the law, and it never was the intention of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is that not the effect, whether it was the intention or not?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the effect is to retire some men so that younger men can be promoted. If those who are selected out want to assume that it is a humiliation—and I think it is, to some degree—of course that is one result of it. But the conclusion I am afraid the Senator is going to come to is that we must give consideration to the feelings of men rather than to the best interests of the service. The best interests of the service require a steady flow of promotions.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me, the best interests of no service or of no employment anywhere in the world, whether Government employment or private employment, make necessary the disgrace of faithful servants because some other younger man comes up and wants his place. That is not the way to get good men into a service. That is not the way in which to keep good employees. The way to do is when they arrive at the time of life when their age makes it necessary that they should go into retirement of some sort to offer the most honorable means of retirement it is in the power of the employer to employ. That will be the duty of the Government as much as of private individuals.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island has set up a bogie man for which there is absolutely no reason. It should not disgrace a man socially or in any other way to have been plucked by this board. The purpose of the board is to stimulate promotions, and the board, if it does its duty, selects the man who can be best spared. It is all done for the best interests of the service, not from any other consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is undoubtedly true, is it not, that practically everyone recognizes the effect of the action of the plucking board as a reflection upon the officer who is removed from service by the action of the board. What I wanted to ask the Senator is this: Would it not be practicable, instead of having the plucking board which took out of service one from a number of the officers, to have a promotion board that would add from the lower ranks without taking the older officer out of the service?

Mr. WEEKS. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that I am not an advocate of the present system; but if it is to be changed I want something better to replace it; if not, we are going to see bad results in the service. Every man who is plucked goes to his Senator, to his Congressman, and to his friends, and he stimulates the sentiment that he has been humiliated, and he creates a sympathy among legislators, who as the result are doing what they can, as far as the elimination of the plucking board, without a substitute, is concerned, to decrease rather than increase the efficiency of the service.

Now, I want to go on for just a moment. It is not pleasant for me to stand here and say these things. Many of these men are my friends—pretty nearly everyone who has been plucked during the last 10 years. I am sorry for every one of them. Many of them seem to me to be good men. But I care a great deal more for the efficiency of the Navy than I do for the feelings of any one man or any half dozen men. We can not run the military establishment on any such basis. We are talking about and urging efficiency in civil life and in military life. Why do we not practice what we preach? We should not sweep away a system which has the indorsement of pretty nearly everyone who knows anything intimately about it without substituting for it something which will be more effective and better. As far as my personal feelings are concerned, I would be glad to have all those who have been selected out continued in the service, but I know well that a man should reach the grade of commander in the early forties, that he should reach the grade of captain before he is 50, and he should reach the grade of admiral, so that he will have an opportunity to command a fleet, long before he is 60. Unless we are going to have that condition we are not going to have the most efficient personnel in our Navy. That is what I want, and anybody who can bring about that kind of a result without humiliating anyone, without committing any injustice to anyone, will be a public benefactor, and the plan shall have my hearty support and indorsement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the Senator will not take his seat, because I want to hear from him further. I wish to say that, so far from disagreeing with the Senator about the absolute necessity for these promotions, I would vote to retain the plucking board if it was the only way to make the vacancies so that at an earlier age we may have men promoted to the highest ranks in the service.

But what I really wanted was to hear the Senator's opinion on this point, because I feel he is the one Senator who is in a position especially to give us information on the subject. Why is it not practicable to reach this end by a board of promotion rather than by a board of retirement?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, we have had several officers promoted in the Army over the heads of their fellows. In some cases they were promoted over one or two grades. You all have the individuals in mind. In my judgment in every instance, at least in every instance that I recall now, they have been excellent officers, and in some cases they have been remarkably good officers and were entitled to promotion if that kind of a system is going to be followed. Yet you know how much unhappiness there has been in the Army as the result of those promotions; how much criticism there has been of the President because he has selected this man or selected that man for unusual preferment and promotion. That method can not be followed and bring about satisfactory results, in my judgment, to the officers of the service. What the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] says is true, that you want to keep as nearly as possible a happy condition in the military service as in every other business. But the unhappy men are those who are going on the retired list, and the men who have striven as hard as they can to make themselves efficient and effective are the men who are remaining on the active list until, as I have said, in my judgment the captains' list in the Navy is more efficient than it has ever been before. Remove all this plucking-board system or substitute something for it less effective and you are going to lessen the efficiency of the Navy. I do care for my friends; I care for their feelings; but I care infinitely more for the best interests of the service than I do for the opinions or interests of any individual.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we ran the Navy, down to the time of the personnel act, on a sympathetic plan entirely. We got all our avenues of promotion clogged. We got them in such a condition as my colleague has described, when men would be admirals with only a year to serve, and all over 60. We got it into such a condition that it was felt absolutely necessary to do something.

Now, by abolishing the plucking board and putting nothing in its place you return to that old sympathetic system, which went on the principle that if a man lived long enough and did nothing that was bad, time and age would give him all the grades in the Navy. We are going to return to that if we abolish the plucking board and put nothing in its place. I should prefer to keep the plucking board and let the matter be settled by Congress in another year and see if we can not deal with it in some better way. But if it is to be abolished, and both Houses seem to be determined, then I say we must put something in its place.

It will be most unfortunate at this stage, with the great new Navy we have, with the dangers that may possibly come, to return to the old system and find ourselves in the condition we were at the time of the Spanish War, when we had to go to the captains' list to get our admirals, the condition in which we were at the beginning of the Civil War, when almost the first thing they had to do was to appoint a board of selection and get rid of all the upper grades and take men who had not risen above the rank of a captain, lieutenant commander, and commander to take charge of the Navy.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator, for information, some questions?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. As I understand it, all promotions in the Navy are made at present by seniority?

Mr. LODGE. Entirely.

Mr. NELSON. If that is the case, would it not be wiser to stop at the rank of lieutenant commander or commander, and say that all promotions beyond that grade should only take place after an examination by a board appointed, instead of applying the rule of seniority to the higher grades? Could it not be reached better in that way? Then all the junior officers would know what they would have to expect—that they would have to run the gantlet of that board.

Mr. LODGE. That is, a selection board?

Mr. NELSON. A selection board.

Mr. LODGE. We have, of course, promotion boards before which everybody has to go before promotion for examination, both physical and mental, but the fact is it is seniority. In the Army they have given the President the right to take any man he chooses, to take a lieutenant, if he wants, and make him a brigadier general. To the President we have confided the right to select the men who, in his judgment, are best fitted for promotion to the rank of brigadier general, and although all the Presidents have executed that duty with not only best intentions but with excellent results, it has not given satisfaction in the Army. I have seen again and again in this Chamber great contests made because the oldest man on the list was not taken. The moment you attempt to stimulate the flow of promotion or to get the best men you are met with the sympathetic cry. In order to get the best and most efficient naval service or Army service you have got to be a little hard-hearted, you have got to be a little unsympathetic. They should be retired on some system which will remove the less efficient. I think the plucking board, despite all that has been said against it, has been of great value to the Navy, and I shall be content to keep it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. But, if the Senator will permit me to finish my sentence, I do not want to abolish the plucking board and leave us now at this time, with this large Navy that we have built up, in the miserable condition we were in before the personnel act of 1899.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator speaks of the plucking board. If I understand the operation of that board, the inefficient men, or those deemed inefficient by the board, are plucked or set aside?

Mr. LODGE. Compelled to retire.

Mr. STONE. Yes; to make room for younger and more efficient men. The Senator says he does not wish that board to be dispensed with unless something as good is substituted.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say something as good, but I said something that would keep the flow of promotion open.

Mr STONE. I really ask to be informed. I am speaking with the greatest diffidence about the matter, knowing very little from personal examination into it. The Senator has given a great deal of attention to it. I want to know just what the effect is going to be of this provision that you have substituted here for the clause wherein you repeal the plucking board. It says that hereafter when officers of the line and Medical and Pay Corps shall be promoted, no officers shall be promoted who has not had active sea service covering half the time during the time he has been in service. To what extent will that open up promotions?

Mr. LODGE. I think it will have the effect of keeping up a flow of promotion about equal to that we get through the plucking board, or it might be more. I think it probably would be about equal to that in amount. I do not believe it would be much more; but it might be more.

Of course, the Senator can see very well for himself that the English system, which combines promotion with plucking, comes back really to the system of the plucking board. As a matter of fact, the Admiralty, I assume, does not give the sea service to inefficient men, and then they are retired by operation of law. Of course, in the English Navy there is a much larger navy now and more ships to make opportunity for sea service.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he can conceive of any method whereby there will not be heartburning and disappointment, whether you promote from below over older officers or whether you retire from above, as we have done in the case of the plucking board.

Mr. LODGE. There is sure to be. The men who are passed over by men being put over their heads or the men who are dropped by the plucking board, even if it was absolutely just, would feel wronged and hurt, and would come here with complaints.

Mr. PAGE. In this connection I think the Senator from Massachusetts will bear me witness that in many cases the men who appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs complaining because they had been plucked, so to speak, upon being asked, replied that they thought the plucking board was an honorable, upright body of men who designed to do exactly right. I think there has been nothing said before the committee that should discourage the Senate as to the plucking board, except that occasionally some men who thought they ought not to have been plucked were retired when others have not been.

But, Mr. President, as remarked by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], you can not have any board of that kind without disappointing those who are plucked. It has been my experience in my service upon the Committee on Naval Affairs that the friends of the men who have been plucked have made out that they have been the very best men in the service without exception, and you would think to sit and hear the claims made by the men who have been plucked that they were beyond question the very best men in the service.

Mr. President, if it is a certain fact that we must have something to promote the flow of promotion and we can not without misgivings and without heartburnings and trouble promote over the heads of others, I do not know to-day of any method that is going to be more efficient or better than the present method—the plucking board. Yet I have this serious charge to make, that almost every man who has been plucked has regarded the Committee on Naval Affairs as a board of review, and they have come before us. I have finally, in my own judgment, decided that I would not in any case vote to reverse the judgment of the plucking board, because I think if we did so we would soon come to a time when we would be a plucking board ourselves—a very unfortunate condition, it seems to me.

Mr. LODGE. There are three propositions involved in this amendment. If the Senate intends to adopt the House provision for the abolition of the plucking board, I think the second amendment, which provides for the retirement on failure of sea service, ought to go in; but the one clause about retired officers, I think, ought to be adopted in any event, no matter what we do. I think that is sound legislation, and I shall ask that they be separated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Massachusetts has suggested, as have several other Senators, that this must be done, that we can not have the present law. Is that necessarily true? Could we not have a vote on the proposition to retain the present condition if we have to choose between that and the proposition submitted by the committee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan or any other Senator asks to have the question divided and take a vote on what is really the first proposition, though it is put last on the page—the abolition of the plucking board—and decide that first, that is the way it ought to be decided.

Mr. BRYAN. Can we have the question put in that way?

Mr. LODGE. I think we can have it put in that way.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to have it put in that way.

Mr. LODGE. If the question is divided, the Senate can take the different divisions in any order they choose, I should think.

Mr. BRYAN. That would enable me to vote in accordance with my wishes. I should like to vote against striking out the House provision and leave the law as it is. If that is not done, of course I want to substitute something for the "plucking board."

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was the point I made.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I think. If we can have a vote first on the question of agreeing to the House provision, if it should be disagreed to, that would end it, except so far as the retired officers' provision goes. If, on the other hand, it be agreed to, then, I think, we ought to put in something, and that would be the second clause.

Mr. STONE. That is the way the bill ought to have been brought in.

Mr. LODGE. That is the way it was treated all along; but I do not think that made any difference.

Mr. SWANSON. The motion before the Senate is to strike out the House provision and to insert, which motion under the rules is not divisible.

Mr. LODGE. No; but it is in order to perfect what it is proposed to insert.

Mr. SWANSON. We can take a vote to strike out after we vote on the question to strike out and insert.

Mr. LODGE. But you must first determine what you are inserting.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is right. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts is through——

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me for just a moment, why can we not make a motion to strike out and leave the——

Mr. SWANSON. Because we have got a motion pending to strike out and insert, which I think takes precedence of the motion to strike out.

Mr. LIPPITT. It does; but can you not withdraw it?

Mr. SWANSON. I am not willing to withdraw it.

Mr. LIPPITT. That is different.

Mr. LODGE. I can move to perfect the amendment. I move to strike from the amendment the last clause from line 15 to line 19. That strikes from the amendment——

Mr. LIPPITT. What page?

Mr. LODGE. Page 30. That strikes from the amendment the repealing clause.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is good.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfecting an amendment, and it is perfectly in order.

Mr. STONE. What is the Senator's motion?

Mr. LODGE. To strike out——

Mr. SWANSON. That comes after the other motion.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. I can perfect either branch of it under our rules.

Mr. SWANSON. That is a separate proposition.

Mr. LODGE. It does not make any difference. The Chair has the rule before him. It is open to amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator can make his motion when the time comes.

Mr. LODGE. You can not put your motion first.

Mr. SWANSON. I have the floor now.

Mr. LODGE. No; not on the point of order. You have not the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. I am making a speech.

Mr. LODGE. I am making a point of order. I do not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. SWANSON. A Senator can not be taken off the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I made a motion, and I am going to show that it is in order.

Mr. SWANSON. I did not yield to the Senator to make it.

Mr. LODGE. I made the point of order before the Senator from Virginia took the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The recollection of the Chair is that the Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment to strike out the last clause, which is not a point of order.

Mr. LODGE. No; I made the point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. The question as to which should have precedence can be determined when the vote is taken.

Mr. LODGE. That is predetermining the whole question. My point of order is that my motion takes precedence; and I will——

Mr. SWANSON. The Chair is not putting that question. The Senator from Virginia claims that he has the floor to make a speech on the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Senator making as many speeches as he wants to make.

Mr. SWANSON. When the time comes, we shall discuss the question of order.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Virginia says that his motion to strike out and insert comes before a motion to perfect what it is proposed to insert; and that, I say, is not correct.

Mr. SWANSON. We are clearly entitled to perfect what we are going to insert before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; my motion to strike out a part of it is perfecting the text.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is not so complicated a question as the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] would have us believe. We now have a deficiency of 203 officers in the Navy. Thus we lack 203 officers who are necessary to-day to make our Navy efficient and to furnish officers for the battleships we have. We now have 980 officers on the retired list. We have 3,300 officers on the active list. I do not believe there is a navy in the world that has so many retired naval officers in comparison with the active naval officers. We pay $3,000,000 a year in salaries to retired naval officers. With this deficiency in officers, with this expenditure of $3,000,000 a year for retired naval officers, there are Senators who still insist that section 9 of the personnel act providing for retirement should continue in force. Let us see why it should continue. Are the retirements that are now made retirements of incompetent and inefficient men? What has been designated as the "plucking board" is compelled under the law to retire 15 officers every year, even if they are capable and efficient, unless 40 officers retire voluntarily each year. They must retire as many as 15 to make the retirement each year number 40. For what purpose? To give an opportunity for officers to get promotions.

If we had a surplus of officers, there would be some excuse for retiring efficient and capable officers. Who have been retired lately by this "plucking board"? Capt. Gibbons, superintendent of the Naval Academy, one of the most gallant naval officers that the Navy possessed, a man who had commanded a ship, a man who was at Vera Cruz; Capt. Rust, and Capt. Hill. There is no question but that the men who have been recently retired would add to the efficiency of the Navy and not detract from it. They were not retired because they were not competent, because they were not capable, because they were not ornaments to the Navy, but they were retired because section 9 of the measure, commonly known as the plucking-board provision, compelled the retirement of 15 officers a year, unless 40 officers had retired voluntarily.

The position I take is that with a deficiency of 203 officers, with a retired list of 980 officers, this "plucking board" should be discontinued, and the guillotine should not fall on the 30th of June and remove 15 capable officers from the Navy, with its present deficiency in number.

Is the Navy created to give promotions to officers? Is it created for the purpose of making an officer an admiral, a captain, or a lieutenant? This vast sum of money is expended, and cheerfully expended, by the people to give us an efficient Navy as cheaply as possible.

Now, let us see what the complaint is. Every officer of the Navy is automatically retired when he reaches the age of 62 years, whether he be competent or incompetent; so that age relieves a great deal of the inefficiency complained of. Under section 8 of the personnel act, which is not repealed, 40 officers are permitted to retire voluntarily each year. Complaint has been made that incompetent officers get into high places.

The law requires every officer before he is promoted to stand an examination as to his physical, mental, and moral qualifications. If the law is enforced, if the examinations are thorough, no officer can be improperly promoted so long as that requirement remains. If incompetency has crept into high places, it should be arrested when the promotions start in the lower, instead of in the higher grades. That is the place and time to purge the Navy.

It is also complained that men have been "plucked" by the board when they did not have sea service, and although, as suggested by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], they tried to get sea service, the department would not give it to them. The complaint he made against this substitute was that it required sea service and that the department might refuse to give sea service when an officer desired it. The same complaint that can be made in one case can be made in the other.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to suggest that Capt. Gibbons, to whom he has referred, had 35 years of service from the time he left the Naval Academy until he was retired by the board; and in that 35 years he had 18½ years of sea service. That ought to count, especially when his service was all distinguished and in places where at times the Navy found itself in very close quarters.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will state that I am in favor of repealing section 9 of the personnel act, and I am willing to vote for a substitute such as is desired by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who prepared this amendment and offered it in the committee, under which sea service amounting to half of the time the officer has been in the Navy would be necessary before he could be promoted. The effect of that would be to compel officers, before they shall be promoted, to go to sea and to secure the experience and the acquaintance with the management of ships gained from sea service. That is an element that is indispensable. Then they would also be required to stand an examination as to their physical, moral, and mental fitness for promotion, so that they would have the experience which would be gained by requiring sea service and the knowledge and acquaintance with the management of ships, and would also have to measure up to the naval standard of physical, mental, and moral fitness.

It seems to me it is a wise provision; but whether the provision is adopted or not, I, for one, favor abolishing section 9 of the personnel act. I can see no good reason for retiring 15 good, efficient officers on three-fourths pay in return for which they render no service to the Government, when the Navy is deficient in officers to the extent of 203 to-day. What excuse can we give the taxpayers of this country for retiring each year compulsorily 15 officers when we lack 203 officers to man our Navy to-day? What excuse can we give when, in the last two years, when retirements have been made under section 9 of the personnel act, committees of the House and of the Senate by a majority have decided that many of the officers retired were efficient and capable and worthy of trust and confidence in naval affairs? What excuse can we give when some of the men who have been plucked are the most capable, the most brilliant, and possess the most splendid records in the naval service?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the average age of the officers who have been "plucked"?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know their average age, but they have all been under 62.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Have not many of them been in the prime of life?

Mr. SWANSON. Capt. Gibbons was in the prime of life.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He was 54.

Mr. VARDAMAN. So that they frequently retire an officer when he is approaching the better part of his life.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, I can readily understand why the younger officers in the Navy, who are clamoring for promotion, would be glad to have the "plucking board" retire 50, 100, or 200 officers a year, if thereby they could secure rapid and quick promotion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator a question entirely for information. Would the amendment which the committee proposes result in retiring as many officers as are retired now through the "plucking board"?

Mr. SWANSON. This provision would retire very few at present, because most of them could comply with the service requirement; but it would require every officer to have to his credit a sea service equal to one-half of the years he has been an officer of the Navy before he could be considered for promotion.

Mr. NORRIS. Would there not be this danger: Could not the Secretary of the Navy, by detailing men to shore duty and preventing them from having the sea duty necessary for promotion, arbitrarily prevent the promotion of officers and compel their retirement? I asked the same question of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I desire to repeat it.

Mr. SWANSON. He could do so under this provision.

Mr. NORRIS. Could not the provision be amended in some way so that that possible injustice could be obviated?

Mr. SWANSON. We considered that; but to say if an officer applied for sea duty and it was denied him that it should be counted sea duty might compel the department to assign the command of a battleship to a captain who was incompetent. It might compel the department to give control of matters on the sea to officers they did not think ought to have such a responsibility.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, if an officer applied for sea duty it would not necessarily follow, would it, that he would have to be assigned to the command of a battleship?

Mr. SWANSON. If he was a captain it would follow. The higher officers are the ones it is desired to remove. The effect in the British Navy has been that officers who did not wish to go to sea and officers who could not go to sea and officers that the Government was satisfied ought not to be sent to sea were automatically retired by not giving them sea service; but the same thing is effected by section 9 of the personnel act.

Mr. NORRIS. I think to a great extent that is true, but I do not want to jump from one evil to another.

Mr. SWANSON. The plucking board has no responsibility to anyone; its decisions can not be reviewed. The plucking board is more intimately acquainted personally with the officers than is the Secretary of the Navy. The members of the board have gone to school with the officers whose names come before them; they have been their shipmates; they have been their schoolmates; so that the members of the board are better acquainted personally with the officers and have more personal prejudices and preferences than has the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. Would there not be danger of a Secretary of the Navy having a political connection that would be as much of an evil as the friendship which exists between the members of the board and other officers of the Navy?

Mr. SWANSON. There is that danger; but the responsibility must be put somewhere to determine who shall command the battleships, who shall command the fleet. My idea was that this power could be as well exercised as provided in the amendment as it could be under section 9 of the personnel act.

Mr. NORRIS. Would there not be danger, for instance, of Senators, Representatives, and other high officials in public life using their influence with the Secretary of the Navy to——

Mr. SWANSON. To prevent an officer going to sea? I do not see how they could prevent an officer from going to sea if he is efficient, when there is a deficiency of 203 officers in the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. There is a deficiency now, and still they have a surplus of men on shore duy. I can not understand that under present conditions.

Mr. SWANSON. That has been very much exaggerated, but if we are going to keep them all at sea, they would never have any shore duty.

Mr. NORRIS. But I understand we are now short of officers on the sea and have a surplus on shore.

Mr. SWANSON. We have about 500 officers on shore out of 3,300 officers. I am not accurate about the number on shore, but it is about one-seventh. If you are going to give them any shore duty—and it is absolutely necessary to do so—you can not have a much less number than one-seventh on shore.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand there are something over 500 officers now on shore duty.

Mr. SWANSON. Out of 3,300.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that a great many of those on shore duty could be assigned to duty at sea without affecting the work that must be done on shore?

Mr. SWANSON. They could, except that it is always thought that an officer is entitled to some little shore duty. You can not take an officer and keep him at sea for 10 years or 15 years or 20 years.

Mr. NORRIS. No; not all the time, of course; but is it not true that some of the officers on shore duty have not been on sea duty for several years?

Mr. SWANSON. I asked for a statement from the Secretary of the Navy as to how many officers would be retired under the law at present if this bill should pass requiring half sea duty. The Reporter has the letter. It would be one captain, one commander, and only five or six officers. Recently the demand for shore duty has ceased on account of the Secretary of the Navy insisting on this sea duty before he would recommend for promotion or promote officers, so that most of them have their requirement at present.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it true that under present conditions the officers are anxious to be detailed for shore duty in preference to sea duty?

Mr. SWANSON. Until recently it was. During the last two years, I am told, the demand for sea duty has exceeded the demand for shore duty on account of the Secretary of the Navy stating that he would not make promotions unless the man had sea duty. In the case of the admirals named for the chiefs of the various divisions here and for the commandants of the various yards, the Secretary of the Navy made the statement that he would not make appointments to these places unless the officer had sea duty. This declaration on the part of the Secretary of the Navy, made boldly at the beginning of his administration, has made officers desirous of going to sea instead of coming to the shore as heretofore.

Mr. NORRIS. I should say that was very commendable on the part of the Secretary.

Mr. SWANSON. This amendment does this, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me: We think no officer who has not had extensive sea experience should have the responsibility of managing ships and fleets. We think that is the sine qua non of responsibility in naval matters.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator in that respect. It seems to me that is reasonable.

Mr. SWANSON. We think no man can have that experience who has not spent half of his service at sea in direct command of ships, the management of machinery, maneuvering, and other sea duty. So this amendment provides that no officer shall be promoted unless he has had a sea service equal to one-half of the time he has been in the service. This does not preclude the other examinations, physical, mental, and moral. You then have the age of 62 for retirement. We believe, with these provisions, that that is all that could be expected to get the proper retirements and to have efficient, capable officers in command.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask the Senator from Virginia if he has an agreement with anybody that this bill shall go over until to-morrow?

Mr. SWANSON. I have no agreement, except that I am satisfied that we can not vote on the——

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask the Senator, then, if he will not lay it aside and let us take up the fortifications bill?

Mr. SWANSON. I would not be willing to lay it aside until we get rid of this plucking-board provision.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator realizes, however, that we can not pass the bill to-night?

Mr. SWANSON. I realize that if we come back here and discuss this provision to-morrow it will be gone over and we will be here all day on it, and I must insist on disposing of all the amendments I can.

Mr. LODGE. It is my motion, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I wanted to say a word or two about this matter. I did intend to say more than I shall say, but it has been very fully discussed, and I appreciate the anxiety of the Senate to vote and share in it.

Mr. President, I sympathize as much as any Senator does whenever a good man suffers what he considers a humiliation, when his sensibilities are wounded. It is a hard thing to strike a good man a blow. But I am so thoroughly in sympathy with what was said by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] that I feel that over and above considerations of the kind to which I have just adverted the tremendous importance to the country of having the very best possible available men in control of our Navy, in its actual command, should govern our judgment. I feel disposed to pass by these purely personal considerations and subordinate them to the higher obligation we owe to the public service.

Mr. President, I can not understand how any Senator should hesitate about adopting some rule of procedure by the operation of which the very best available men will be selected for this exceedingly important service. To place the power in the hands of a few men, constituting this so-called "plucking board," is to put in their hands a rather dangerous power—I admit that—for it is so subject to abuse. The officers composing the board are human beings and are apt to be more or less influenced by the considerations that affect most men when they come to act in matters of this kind. There is always a danger of acting from the standpoint of personal favoritism. It may be unconsciously done, but influences of that kind will operate upon men. But I believe, Mr. President, that even that danger can be reduced to the lowest minimum, and I do not know that the power has been abused in any instance. I only say that it can be, and therefore there is a certain element of danger in it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, right on that point, and quite to the point, that was the exact situation in which the last plucking board found itself. The truth is that there were 10 or 12 captains available for retirement who had demerit marks against them, who had taken their ships upon the rocks, who had been court-martialed for one offense or another, and the strange thing about it is that this board passed them all over and took men without a single blemish against their records. That shows the very thing of which the Senator has spoken—that they are prejudiced.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently advised to pass judgment upon the action of the board. A very excellent officer might in some circumstances run his ship into a shoal or against a rock. I do not know the facts or the circumstances. I assume that the board acting in the matter had far better knowledge of the facts than any Senator here. It is to be presumed that they did, or otherwise they were acting with absolute dishonesty.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Prejudice, possibly.

Mr. STONE. I say there is danger of that sort of thing, but it is not to be presumed that partialities or prejudices will operate very strongly.

Mr. President, personally I am inclined to favor the plucking board unless you can put something as good or better in its place. I was struck by what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] said as to the provision in this bill about retiring officers who have not had half their service at sea. I happen to know of one instance myself where an officer has not had half of his service at sea, but, as in the case referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, he desired such service. He sought it, he insisted upon it, but it was denied him. Now, men are detailed for shore service in numerous ways and in very important arms of the service, and they are doing an important work ashore. I am not speaking of men who are put into places of ease and who devote their time to social duties; but I do know of one or two men who are constantly engaged in the hardest kind of work and very useful work, and one of these men has sought to go to sea and he has not been permitted to go. I hardly think that is fair to that man, and therefore I do not like that provision; and if we can have a vote here to-night on the proposition to retain the plucking board as against the scheme proposed, I am going to vote for the plucking board.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it seems to me we have been discussing this case entirely upon the assumption that we must either keep the plucking board as it is or do without it altogether. If that were true, we certainly would be confronted with a most difficult problem in regulating the personnel of the Navy; but I do not understand that that is the case at all. It is perfectly feasible to retain the plucking board and this system of retiring officers, or at least the system of retiring them through the plucking board; but instead of leaving the plucking board as it is now, without any law either of God or of man to regulate its action, to provide a rule for the government of the plucking board in the performance of this business of retiring officers.

The plucking board, under the present system, meets in star chamber. No officer of the Navy knows that he is being considered for retirement. The plucking board considers his case and comes to the conclusion that for the benefit of the Navy and as promoting the efficiency of the Navy the officer under consideration should be retired. That is a severe judgment to render against a man who is serving his country in the Navy, and yet it is rendered without giving him an opportunity of being heard as to whether his retirement would conduce to the efficiency of the Navy. The matter is entirely in the discretion of this board of officers who meet and act in secret.

If the plucking board is retained—and this is all I wanted to say—and the provision of the House bill which abolishes the plucking board is stricken out by the Senate, there ought to be something further added to the bill providing a rule of action for the plucking board. There have been a number of cases where officers have been retired by this body who not only were efficient but who had been a credit to the Navy, who not only had good records but who had distinguished records. I have complete information about several of these cases where officers have been retired. The records have been made up. I have examined them in detail, and find they are men who not only have performed the duties that are required of them as naval officers, but have gone far beyond that, and have rendered services to the Navy entirely beyond and outside of the routine duties. They have invented devices which have been adopted and are in use by the Navy, and have increased its efficiency. They have written books upon various branches of their profession which have been adopted in the Navy and are used with profit and benefit by the Navy. The records which show the conduct of these men in the various grades through which they have risen to the rank which they held at the time they were retired are marked "good," "very good," and "excellent." If a merit roll were kept in the Navy they would stand far above a large number of officers who have been left untouched by this retiring board. That is unjust. It is manifestly unjust.

The Senator from Missouri says that this plucking board knows more about the cases than the Senate itself; but that is not necessarily true, because the action of the plucking board has been investigated by committees of Congress, members of the plucking board have been put upon the stand and examined, their testimony has been printed, and it has been found that they were unable to give any satisfactory reason for their action; that it was purely arbitrary.

Undoubtedly there ought to be some method by which the stagnation in the line of promotion of officers in the Navy could be done away with, and opportunities given for the lower grades to have some incentive to render faithful service by a reasonable hope of obtaining a higher grade. That can be done without vesting in the board the arbitrary and unrestrained license and discretion to retire anybody who in their secret minds they may select to retire.

There is a retirement system in the German Navy, but I am informed that is regulated by certain rules by which merit rolls of the officers in various grades are kept, and those who stand lowest on those rolls as made up from the daily and yearly performance of their duties are retired. It is perfectly feasible to keep such a roll as that. It can be kept with just as much accuracy as the rating of the midshipmen at Annapolis, which is highly commended by everyone for its justice. I do not think I have ever heard a single individual complain as to the system by which the naval cadets are rated in their several classes upon the work which they do from day to day. It is perfectly feasible to keep a similar rating by the reports of superior officers and the observations of officers under their command, and from that roll select those who stand lowest and retire the requisite number.

I rose simply to say that if we are to retain the plucking board there ought to be some provision adopted by which their actions would be based upon a regular system not left to the chances and to the secret will of these men. They are nothing but men, and they are liable to make the same mistakes that other men make. I am not charging them, far be it from me to charge them, with any willful injustice to any officer whom they retired, but they are officers in the Navy, and these officers are subject to all the prejudices and to all the preconceived opinions which arise among any set of men who are working together and come in contact and rivalry with each other in their profession, and those conditions are bound to influence their acts.

If this motion prevails, I shall offer an amendment providing that when the plucking board, as it is popularly called, selects officers for retirement they shall select those who upon their official record can be dispensed with from the service of the Navy with least detriment to the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to strike from the Senate committee amendment the last clause thereof, namely:

> Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate except to say—and I feel I ought to say it, as a member of the committee—that we fully agreed on this bill as it is presented here. Perhaps we did not meet the views of every Member as he would have liked to have had us do, but nevertheless it is the majority report from our committee.

I propose myself to stand by the committee's report. I find no fault with any Senator who takes any other view, but to retain the plucking board with its arbitrary power to fix conditions, without let or hindrance, upon which men shall be retired even at the age of 54, at the very best time in their lives, it seems to me is vesting in a board altogether too much power. I know they have exercised this power with very little discretion. Before the House Committee on Naval Affairs it appeared that several captains in the Navy were subject to retirement under this rule, with demerit marks against them, with courts-martial against them. Those were the men who ought to have been plucked first, and not the men who had no mark against them from the time they left the academy until they were plucked by this board.

If you tell me a man with an absolutely perfect title to become an admiral, for which he has labored all his life, may be deprived of that privilege by an arbitrary board when there are men subject to retirement for cause, I tell you that you are establishing a system in the American Navy that strikes at its very heart.

I feel very keenly about this matter. I asked one of the plucking board, before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, if the Navy had been improved by plucking these last officers, and he told me no, that the Navy had been weakened by plucking the last officers who were plucked. If that is the case, when we are short several thousand men and several hundred officers, I think we are pursuing a course not calculated to bring any credit to ourselves or any credit to our Navy or any efficiency in the Navy. That is all I care to say about it.

I thought the committee were quite in accord about what had been done and about our bill, but if members of the committee think otherwise, very well.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope my colleague listened to the remarks of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], which, in the confusion of the Senate, it seemed to me were not properly considered. It seems to me from what has been said here that there has been no system advocated or proposed which is entirely satisfactory, but I confess I have been very greatly impressed with the statement that as between the two systems that have been discussed the present one is better than the one proposed. If we were to restore the present law and then the law were amended, as suggested by the Senator from Washington, so that this plucking board must only pluck those whose records show that they are of the least service to the Navy, it would seem to me that we would have a guide to go by that would come as nearly to governing them in deciding the proper men to select as we could possibly hope to devise.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My colleague is entirely right. He has sensed, as he usually does, with great accuracy the merit in the suggestion of the Senator from Washington. Undoubtedly that is the proper thing to do, but that is just the thing that the plucking board do not do. It is undoubtedly the method that should be employed that those with the most demerit marks against them should fall first. But under the present system I do know it often shocks the men in the Navy beyond measure to see the character of men who are plucked.

I said a moment ago that before the House committee Admiral Knight made a statement and placed it upon the record that there were demerit marks against men who were available for retirement. Why were they not chosen? Will any Senator tell us why those with demerit marks to their credit were not chosen for decapitation instead of men of merit and faultless records?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. With pleasure.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator has asked a question and I feel that I can not sit here without answering that question. In my judgment, if we are to have any board to pass upon these matters a more honorable, upright, high-minded board can not be selected than the admirals who have been placed in charge of this service. When a case was before the Committee on Naval Affairs I asked the question of the man who had been plucked, "In your judgment, sir, have the board been unfair?" "No, sir." "Have they been influenced by improper motives?" "No, sir." "Do you regard them as an upright, honorable, and high-minded set of men?" "I do emphatically. I think they have not fully considered my case."

I do not think we have a right to sit silently here to-night and hear that board of men denounced as they have been denounced, and I want to answer the Senator from Michigan by saying that, in my judgment, they are a good board of men. They can not perform the duty they are performing unless they injure, or apparently injure, some admiral or some officer. That officer goes to his Senator or to his Congressman and he points out to him his good record, and it no doubt oftentimes is good; but I believe that that board look up the case, and when they have performed their duty they have tried to select fairly, honorably, and uprightly, but most of all for the good of the service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, there is no difference between the Senator from Vermont and myself. He is talking about one board and I am talking about another. Unfortunately, those who would naturally be appointed on that board were off with our fleet at Vera Cruz, and the men who sat upon that board, in at least two instances, were men whose shore duty had been quite as consistent and extensive as the shore duty of the men whom they criticized. I am not finding fault with the board of a year ago and I have not referred to them. The only strictures I make upon this board are, as Admiral Knight told me himself, that the Navy had been weakened by the retirement of these men. If that is a slander, charge it up to him; do not charge it to me.

Mr. PAGE. But, if the Senator will permit me, that board performed their duty as they understood that duty should be performed. They may have made mistakes. I do not think you can appoint any board that would not in the plucking of officials here and there be condemned by the friends of those officials. But those men have tried to do right. I do not think there is a more honorable set of men in our whole country than the admirals of the Navy, who have performed a very unpleasant duty simply because they felt it their duty to their country to perform it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have too much power; they are too far removed from the merit system; they are uncontrolled absolutely by anybody. There is no appeal. They can exercise their will or their judgment or their caprice or their spite, if they have any, and most human beings have it. In this case I think their verdict is quite generally disapproved in the Navy and throughout the country. I have not heard anybody apologize for them or excuse them. I have heard it very roundly condemned. They chose the very best men they had for sacrifice and overlooked men whose records warranted careful scrutiny at least. I know it has got to be done by some one. Whenever the retirements by death or resignation fail to reach 40, they must be brought up to that number by an elimination of some kind. But I like the suggestion of my friend from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] that the basis of elimination shall be the record these men have made, and that really ought to be the system.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I wish to make just one observation and then I will yield. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] said in committee the other day that he liked the merit system proposed by the Senator from Washington, but we can not whip it into form now; that the time is too short. If we repeal this law, it will certainly mean that there shall be no plucking board in June, and there will be no officers plucked in June. When we get back here and have an opportunity to study the question we may make a basis for the elimination of surplus officers that will be far more creditable to us than the basis upon which we are now acting.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, whether we ought or ought not to diminish the number of officers is not, to my mind, the great question before us to-night. To my mind it is unbelievable that a board of admirals of the United States Navy should act without an examination of the record, and I do not believe they have so acted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will look over the hearings before the House committee, which unanimously decided against the board, I think he will find sufficient testimony that they were not very thorough. That is all I have to say about that. The House committee unanimously decided that the board acted without information and without warrant.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Independent of the decision of the House in any of these particular cases, is it not the fact that the board is required to strike out 15 names where the retirement does not exceed 40, regardless of whether there is a single man who is subject to demerit or has any marks or charges against him?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; they may take any basis for elimination that they see fit.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; but they must still strike out 15.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. And if there are not officers there against whom marks exist they have got to take some other basis?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CLAPP. Is not that the inherent weakness and vice, if I may use that term, of the system itself?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is.

Mr. CLAPP. That is my view of it. I would not be in favor of the suggestion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] as applied to any board. We should prescribe the rules under which the elimination should take place, and leave it to the Secretary of the Navy to carry into effect those rules.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is perfectly satisfactory to me, and it was so when the Senator suggested it. I think that would be much fairer than the present system. That we have got to perpetuate a system which does work injustice and wrong and which is detrimental to the Navy is beyond my belief; and that this does work in that way no one denies.

Mr. CLAPP. And that at times it is inevitable that it should work in that way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; and it does work in that way.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, then, if we take a merit system or any system whereby we prescribe the rules, we shall not then need a board at all. It can be done by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not possible for us to agree upon some legislation of that character when we recognize that fact?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, certainly; and I think it ought to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No great harm is going to be done if we do not widen the breach between our necessities and the supply of officers we have. I see no harm to result from it.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to say, in regard to that board, that the testimony before the Senate Naval Committee always has been that there was no charge of any intended unfairness. The trouble is with the system. You can not get such a board as will not be subject to that criticism.

Mr. BRYAN rose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the Senator from Florida desire to ask me a question, or is he taking the floor in his own right?

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to take the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield the floor to my friend from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] makes the statement that we are short 203 officers; that we need 203 more officers to man our ships. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] pointed out that there were 534 men in the Navy performing shore duty, if there are any duties on shore for a naval officer. It occurs to me to inquire why not supply this need for 203 officers with the 534 that are now on shore?

Again, Mr. President, it is not accurate to say that we have 3,388 officers of the Navy. That is the personnel of the Navy; but the personnel of the Navy is made up of officers of the line, of staff officers, and of warrant officers. Of the officers of the line, there are but 1,878, and there are not 1,878 officers provided for in the personnel act. The personnel act, by section 7, provides for 18 rear admirals, 70 captains, 112 commanders, 170 lieutenant commanders, 300 lieutenants, and not more than 350 lieutenants of the junior grade and the ensigns in addition; and yet, reading from the list that the Senator from Virginia used to make up this enormous total of 3,388 naval officers, we find that there are additional numbers in the various grades.

There are 7 additional numbers in the grade of rear admiral; there are 20 in the grade of captain; there are 9 in the grade of commander; there are 36 in the grade of lieutenant commander; there are 51 in the grade of lieutenant; and 40 in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade), making 163 additional number officers.

Mr. President, it is all very easy to charge the plucking board with unfairness and injustice of every description; it is easy to say that the few men who have been plucked are the best officers in the Navy; it is easy to say that they ought to have been retained and that everybody else ought to have been retired. So far as I am concerned I was opposed to the repeal of the plucking board as constituted by section 9 of the personnel act. My vote in the Committee on Naval Affairs was to the effect that if the plucking board had to go I wanted to suggest something to take its place. If it has to go, I am in favor of the amendment, but surely enough consideration has not been given to this question, and enough consideration will not be given to it here to-night, in the midst of this hilarity, to determine what we ought to do with reference to this rather serious matter.

How did the personnel act originate? In the Spanish-American War, as has been stated here, the officers who had arrived at the highest grade were incapable of taking command of the fleet. We had to put the command of the battleships into the hands of the junior officers. They would rise to the highest grade, to the grade of rear admiral, and they would remain there until they had reached the retiring age.

Section 7 of the act of 1899 provides for 1,020 officers of the grade above ensign. Section 8 provides for voluntary retirement. Section 9 is for compulsory retirement. It is assumed that 40 men above the grade of ensign will quit the service each year. If they do not, then a board is established to make up the difference between the number that do retire voluntarily and the number of 40, provided that not more than 15 of such officers may be retired.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I understood the Senator from Florida to make the statement that it was presumed that there would be 40 retirements each year. Upon what fact is that presumption based?

Mr. BRYAN. It is based on the law. Section 8 provides for voluntary retirements.

Mr. POMERENE. I know; but what reason is there for saying that 40, rather than 35 or 75, should be retired?

Mr. BRYAN. The law fixes that number. I suppose if the law had said 35, somebody would have asked why not 40? It was assumed that that would be the number that would permit the required number of promotions.

Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has given notice that he will offer an amendment which would insert a provision that the board must consider efficiency, and discharge only the least efficient. The plucking board is not the only board. There are two other boards. There is the retirement board and there is the examining board. The question of efficiency, of mental equipment, of moral equipment, of physical ability, is taken into consideration by those boards. In fact, the examining board acts before a promotion is ever allowed to take place, and after officers are found to be fit physically and sound mentally, and the time for promotion arrives, their names are considered by the plucking board and a selection is made. The plucking board must select for retirement at least 15 officers from the various grades.

I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in arguing the question. The only case that was tried out thoroughly before the Committee on Naval Affairs developed the fact that an officer—a captain—was about to be made a rear admiral; that a new Secretary of the Navy, the present Secretary, had come in, and he said, "It occurs to me, as a landsman, that to learn a seagoing profession a man ought to go to sea," and he instructed the plucking board that he would not approve its recommendations for promotions unless the officers recommended had had adequate sea service.

The man who complained in the case referred to was one of four captains. Three were to be advanced and one was to be retired. Which one should the plucking board retire? I ask the Senate to determine which one of the four in the grade of captain it would have retired; and I will not mention any names. One of the four had a sea service of 2 years, 1 month, and 1 day; one had a sea service of 1 year, 5 months, and 11 days; one had a sea service of 2 years, 8 months, and 11 days; and the fourth had a sea service of 9 months and 15 days. Who ought to have been selected for retirement? This unfair board, this board that never considered the interests of the Navy, this board that, according to the Senator from Virginia, sits up nights to find out who is the best man in the service and then selects him for retirement, reached the absurd conclusion that the man who had only nine months' sea service ought to be retired.

The naval officer who appeared for the Secretary of the Navy explained thoroughly, and to my satisfaction, that if an officer wanted to go to sea, he never had any trouble in getting there; and he explained that in selecting the plucking board the department selected the commanders of the three fleets as a part of the board. That was the case made for this officer who wanted to be advanced, and yet a majority of the committee recommended that a bill in his behalf be passed.

Mr. President, if we adopt the amendment last reported, the same trouble will exist. There must be a way of arriving at the results desired; but I am so much in favor of that amendment, if we eliminate the plucking board, that I believe I will not dwell on the manner in which the same results would be attained. I am ready for a vote, but I did not want it to be understood that there were not available men to fill the 203 places which the Senator from Virginia said were vacant because of a lack of officers. That can not be so, because there are more than that number of men right here in the city of Washington, in the Capital of the Nation, on shore duty than are needed to fill the quota of our naval vessels.

As the Senator from Massachusetts has said, 534 of the 1,020 required by law are now doing shore duty. Is it unreasonable in the present Secretary of the Navy to say to an officer: "If you want to command a great battleship, costing millions of dollars, with the lives of thousands of men at stake, you must go to sea and learn how to command it or you will be retired. If you have wanted to stay on shore all your life up to now, we will give you a chance to stay on shore all the remainder of your life so far as the Navy is concerned."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to strike out the last clause of the committee amendment reported to the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say, Mr. President, that if that is stricken out, it means a continuance of the present board constituted under section 9 of the personnel act.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following:

Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to strike out the part of the committee amendment which has just been read. Those in favor of the motion will say "aye"; those opposed, "no." The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SWANSON. I call for a division, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for. As many as are in favor of striking out the provision will signify it by rising. [A pause.] As many as are opposed to striking out the provision will rise.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am in a little uncertainty as to this matter. I understand a vote in the negative abolishes the plucking board. I want to put it out of existence, and I desire to vote in any way I can to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator need only vote in the negative.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, so that there may be no misunderstanding, I will say that a vote for this motion means a vote to continue in power the board constituted under section 9 of the personnel act, while a vote in the negative is a vote to abolish it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is out of order. The Senate was dividing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who are opposed will rise. [A pause.] The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is carried.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the following amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment just voted on.

Mr. BRYAN. Before that is done, let me ask the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] if he will not allow the naval bill to be laid aside temporarily, so that I may move to take up the fortifications appropriation bill? He can proceed with the naval bill to-morrow.

Mr. SWANSON. I shall be willing to do that after the yeas and nays are ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota demands the yeas and nays on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment reported by the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan to withhold the motion. I promised the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to move to take up the fortifications bill. There is not a single amendment to it.

Mr. LODGE. It is a quarter to 11 o'clock now.

Mr. BRYAN. There has not been an amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not think the Senator ought to bring the bill up to-night.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21491) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SWANSON. Before that is put, I ask that the naval appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the naval appropriation bill will be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears none.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRYAN. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to proceed to the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I do not think a bill can be laid aside when the yeas and nays have been ordered on an amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] made a motion to take a recess.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, Mr. President; I made that motion.

Mr. NORRIS. Why has not that motion been put? It was made before this other one. The Senator from Michigan made a motion to take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was under the impression that he withdrew it.

Mr. BRYAN. Will not the Senator permit us to take up this bill? It will take only a short time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not believe I will insist on the motion if the Senator wishes to take up the fortifications bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21491) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations without amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 14 on page 3, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and to continue available until expended, namely:

FORTIFICATIONS AND OTHER WORKS OF DEFENSE.

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

For construction of gun and mortar batteries, $585,000.

The Secretary of War is authorized to grant to the Norfolk Southern Railroad Co., its successors and assigns, a perpetual right of way through the lands which have been or which may be acquired for fortification purposes at Cape Henry, Va., on such location as he may approve, in exchange for all of said company's lands and rights of way lying within the boundaries of the lands acquired or to be acquired for said fortification purposes: Provided, That the said railroad company may be reimbursed from appropriations which may be applicable to the construction of defenses at Cape Henry, Va., for the expense which may be imposed upon the said railroad company in changing the location of its tracks, stations, or other buildings and appurtenances from their present location on the said lands and rights of way of the said railroad company to the right of way hereinbefore authorized to be granted to the said company by the Secretary of War.

For modernizing older emplacements, $100,000.

For construction of fire-control stations and accessories, including purchase of lands and rights of way, purchase and installation of necessary lines and means of electrical communication, including telephones, dial and other telegraphs, wiring and all special instruments, apparatus, and materials, coast signal apparatus, and salaries of electrical experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the use of coast artillery; purchase, manufacture, and test of range finders and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $130,000.

For maintenance of Coast Artillery war-instruction matériel at Coast Artillery posts, including necessary material and labor therefor and for extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than 10 days, $500.

For installation and replacement of electric-light and power plants at seacoast fortifications, $50,000.

For purchase and installation of searchlights for the defenses of our most important harbors, $150,000.

For protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications for which there may be no special appropriation available, and of structures for the torpedo defense of the United States and for maintaining channels for access to torpedo wharves, $200,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Florida what is the total appropriation carried by this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Six million and sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is for coast defenses, I believe?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. By the appropriation of this $6,060,000 will the coast defenses be improved at all over the present condition?

Mr. BRYAN. What does the Senator suppose we are making the appropriation for?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am trying to find out what we are making it for.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what it is intended to do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator informed as to the correctness of the report, which has been more or less current, that the coast defenses are wholly inefficient as a defense of our seaports against an attack by modern guns such as foreign navies have?

Mr. BRYAN. It is wholly incorrect.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it the Senator's opinion that the guns that are mounted in the coast defenses for which this money is appropriated are capable of resisting attacks by modern battleships of foreign navies in case there should be such attacks?

If the Senator will pardon me, lest I should seem to be catechising the Senator from Florida, let me explain why I am asking him these questions. The reason is that in submitting this bill there was no statement whatever made as to the purposes of it or as to the present condition of the coast defenses of the country, for which these appropriations are intended.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Washington has discovered that fact. However, I desire to say that it was not thought necessary to prepare a report, in view of the fact that there are no amendments to the House bill and, further, in view of the fact that there was a very full and complete report by the House committee; and anyone who desires information can easily find it in the 250 pages of hearings held by the House committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Gen. Wotherspoon and Gen. Weaver, in a report to the Chief of Ordnance, recommended guns of larger caliber at Cape Henry, on the ground that the 12-inch guns which we have in our forts to-day are outranged by the guns now carried on the battleships of many powers. In other words, the battleships carry guns with which they can come and fire at those forts while remaining beyond the reach of the guns of the forts.

We have just had that exhibited. The allies attacked the forts in the Dardanelles. They shelled them at a range where the 12-inch guns of the Turkish forts could not reach them. They destroyed the forts, and to-night the news has just come, I am told, over the wires of the Associated Press, that they have forced the Dardanelles and are in the Sea of Marmora.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am informed, Mr. President—I am not able to state it on my own personal knowledge, although I have the report on my desk in my office; but I had no idea that we would take up another appropriation bill at this hour of the night, or else I would have had it here—that the report of Admiral Beatty, who commanded the English cruisers in the battle in the North Sea fought only a short time ago with German cruisers, says that he began firing upon the German cruisers at a range of 18,000 yards; that he secured hits at 17,000 yards; that long before he came within such a distance as would be within the range of any of our guns provided by this appropriation bill the battle was over, and the German ships had been put out of action; one of them had been sunk, and the others had gotten within the area of the German mines.

I do not care to provoke a discussion of this entire matter to-night; but certainly, instead of simply being referred to a report of the House, we ought to have some information here on which the Senate can determine whether the country will derive any benefit from the expenditure of this money.

The Senator from Florida, in answer to the first question which I asked him, said that it was intended by this appropriation to put the coast defenses in better condition than they are at present. I should like to know in what way they would be put in better condition. Are we going to have better guns? Are we going to arrange the guns that we now have or supply them with ammunition so as to give them a better range or make them more effective than they are said to be now by the experts of the Army, who testified before the committee in the hearings to the effect that they are utterly helpless in the face of an attack by modern guns on board modern battleships?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I think, if the Senator will read the bill, he will see the purpose under each item. If the Senator wants to ask me the question, I think I can answer it.

In the first place, the War Department states that the fortifications bill is not intended to place batteries all along the coast upon the Atlantic and Pacific. The Senator knows, I assume, that the first board to consider the question of coast defenses was the board of 1883, known as the Endicott Board. It made its report and recommended an expenditure of about $150,000,000. About 20 years later, in 1906, another board, appointed by President Roosevelt, known as the Taft Board, made its report, which increased the expenditure by about $22,000,000 for continental United States. From year to year Congress has been appropriating money to carry out the plans that have been developed from 1883 down to date. I supposed that everybody who had ever voted upon a fortifications appropriation bill knew that that was its purpose.

The Secretary of War says that the work is now about 91 per cent finished, which would indicate that if the reports of the Endicott Board and the Taft Board are of any value, if the plans there advocated, if carried out, would be of any benefit to this country in time of trouble, they have been about 91 per cent completed.

Another thing pointed out by the Secretary of War and his force that appeared before the House committee, and that is shown in full detail in the hearings, is that for the protection of cities in the harbors where these fortifications are placed it is not always necessary to have guns that will shoot as far as the guns upon the modern battleships. I remember noticing in the hearings that the statement was made that the port of Boston could be easily protected by guns which had a range of only 12 miles.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the port of Boston is attacked by guns which have a range of 14 miles, how is it going to be protected by guns that have a range of 12 miles?

Mr. BRYAN. Because until they are within 12 miles they can not get in position to attack the city of Boston.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Can they not come within 14 miles of the port of Boston? What is going to prevent them from coming into position?

Mr. BRYAN. Coming into position to attack the city? I have never been there, but I can very easily understand that various things might prevent it.

Mr. THOMAS. Submarines and mines.

Mr. BRYAN. For instance, while I do not know how far Boston is from the sea—take a city 20 miles up a river that had fortifications at the mouth of the river; it would not be necessary for those fortifications to have guns of as great capacity as the battleships that attacked the city.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not?

Mr. BRYAN. Because you could not hit the city 30 or 40 miles away.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; but you could first destroy the fortifications from a point so far away that the fortifications could not defend themselves, and then you could go up the river and take the city.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] interjected a very interesting remark in answer to the question which I asked the Senator from Florida—that we would defend the city with submarines. If we defend it with submarines, and depend upon submarines for it, there is no occasion to expend this money for guns which have a range of only 12 miles, while the guns of the enemy have a range of 14 miles.

Mr. THOMAS. Why not spend it on submarines, then?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would be far more logical than to spend it on inefficient guns, Mr. President.

This bill involves a question that has been under discussion before the country for a number of weeks. In view of the dispute over the coast defenses and the efficacy of the coast defenses and the lack of any information as to whether this bill provides any means of making them more efficient, I ask that it be allowed to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator withhold the motion for just a moment?

Mr. KERN. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have two bridge bills here of urgent importance, one of which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is very much interested in.

Mr. KERN. I yield to the Senator from Texas for that purpose.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They are of very great importance.

Mr. SMOOT. What are the bills?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Two bridge bills.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that the Senator report them in the morning. It is nearly 11 o'clock, and we have been here for 12 hours.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well; I will withdraw them.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m., Thursday, February 25, 1915) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 26, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 25 (legislative day of February 19), 1915.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

George W. Acklin, of Pittsburgh, Pa., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 12, in place of Mahlon M. Garland, resigned.

COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

John F. Haley, of Honolulu, Hawaii, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Hawaii, in place of Charles A. Cottrill, superseded.

Benjamin F. Davis, of Lancaster, Pa., to be collector of internal revenue for the ninth district of Pennsylvania, in place of Fred C. Kirkendall, nominated for collector for the twelfth district.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Melville J. France, of Brooklyn, N. Y., to be United States attorney for the eastern district of New York, vice William J. Youngs, resigned.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Samuel J. Burris, of Pueblo, Colo., to be United States marshal for the district of Colorado, vice Dewey C. Bailey, whose term will expire March 2, 1915.

Michael Devanney, of Cincinnati, Ohio, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Ohio, vice Eugene L. Lewis, whose term has expired.

William R. Bennett, of San Juan, P. R., to be United States marshal for the district of Porto Rico, vice Harry S. Hubbard, whose term has expired.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 25, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for that germ of divinity with which Thou hast endowed us, which makes us children of the living God, immortal souls. Help us with keen appreciation to strive earnestly to develop the God-giving quality of our being until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, and thus be worthy of such preferment; and everlasting praise be Thine, in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a concurrent resolution of the North Dakota Legislature directed to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a resolution passed by the Legislature of North Dakota directed to Congress. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether this is the same resolution that was presented by his colleague, Mr. YOUNG? I notice that the gentlemen from North Dakota are presenting these resolutions frequently for incorporation in the RECORD. The other day his colleague, Mr. YOUNG, asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a resolution. It is not customary to have these resolutions incorporated in the body of the RECORD.

Mr. NORTON. As far as my knowledge is concerned, this resolution has not been printed in the RECORD. It is a resolution pertaining to the public lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact is that a few years ago the legislature of my State, when it had nothing else to do, would pass resolutions on subjects that it knew nothing about, and we received something like 15 in one session. We did not then spread them upon the RECORD, but filed them away and let them lie dormant in the pigeonhole.

Mr. FERRIS. Is the gentleman speaking of his own State of Wisconsin?

Mr. STAFFORD. I said it was my own State. I will not object to this request, but I think it is a bad practice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, and keeper of the great seal thereof, hereby certify that the attached is a true and correct copy of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, and the whole of such resolution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at the capitol, in the city of Bismarck, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.]

THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

A concurrent resolution (Turner).

Whereas when North Dakota was admitted to statehood the State was given for State institutions by the Federal Government lands aggregating 500,000 acres. This land was divided among the various State institutions, and as these lands are sold the moneys derived from them go into a permament fund, the income of which is used, and shall be used, for the maintenance and support of the institution for which these lands stand as an endowment; and

Whereas there is in North Dakota to-day about 700,000 acres of vacant Government land remaining, much of which is subject to the 320-acre homestead, and may be subject to a homestead entry of 640 acres, provided a bill now before Congress shall be enacted into law; and

Whereas if this shall be done, the remaining public lands in North Dakota will only provide a little over 1,000 homesteads; and

Whereas if Congress should enact a law giving to every public-land State 500,000 acres of the remaining vacant public lands in the various public-land States, thereby benefiting all of the people of those States, and in a way in which and by which they would derive a much greater benefit than were the lands open for homesteads to a few: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring), That we respectfully request and petition the Congress of the United States, through our Senators and Representatives of Congress, that a law be enacted so that the States receiving these public lands shall be authorized, through their legislatures, to distribute the lands so given between the penal, charitable, and educational institutions of the State; but provided that one-fifth of the lands so given shall be set aside by the legislature as an endowment fund, the interest from which, when the lands shall have been sold, to be used for the purpose of building roads and bridges in the various States.

A. P. HANSON,
Speaker of the House.
ALBERT N. WOLD,
Chief Clerk of the House.
J. H. FRAINE,
President of the Senate.
M. J. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 19906) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. J. Res. 238. Joint resolution giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in the District of Columbia in the months of September and October, 1915, and for other purposes incident to said encampment.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16305. An act to reimburse Henry Weaver, postmaster at Delmar, Ala., for money and stamps stolen from said post office at Delmar and repaid by him to the Post Office Department;

H. R. 17424. An act for the relief of Hunton Allen; and

H. R. 17842. An act for the relief of George Richardson.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments and asked a further conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6493. An act for the appointment of an additional judge in the fifth judicial circuit of the United States;

S. 7509. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 7566. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 7597. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 7598. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 23, 1915:

S. J. Res. 187. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the International Congress on Education;

S. 604. An act for the relief of Sarah A. Clinton and Marie Steinberg;

S. 926. An act for the relief of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Co.;

S. 1880. An act for the relief of Chester D. Swift;

S. 3419. An act admitting to citizenship and fully naturalizing George Edward Lerrigo, of the city of Topeka, in the State of Kansas;

S. 3925. An act for the relief of Teresa Girelami;

S. 5092. An act for the relief of Charles A. Spotts;

S. 5254. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion to sell and convey a certain tract of land to the Mandan Town and Country Club;

S. 5449. An act to make Pembina, N. Dak., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement;

S. 5497. An act authorizing the issuance of patent to Arthur J. Floyd for section 31, township 22 north, range 22 west of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Nebraska; and

S. 5990. An act to authorize the sale and issuance of patent for certain land to William G. Kerckhoff.

On February 24, 1915:

S. 2334. An act for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell;

S. 4146. An act granting certain lands to school district No. 44, Chelan County, Wash.; and

S. 2335. An act to provide for the register and enrollment of vessels built in foreign countries when such vessels have been wrecked on the coasts of the United States or her possessions or adjacent waters and salved by American citizens and repaired in American shipyards.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 7509. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 7566. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 7597. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 7598. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. J. Res. 238. Joint resolution giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in the District of Columbia in the months of September and October, 1915, and for other purposes incident to said encampment; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16305. An act to reimburse Henry Weaver, postmaster at Delmar, Ala., for money and stamps stolen from said post office at Delmar and repaid by him to the Post Office Department; and

H. R. 17424. An act for the relief of Hunton Allen.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the following cases, no adverse reports having been made thereon;

Bill for the relief of Lydia Mahoney, H. R. 3294, Sixty-third Congress, first session;

Bill for the relief of Herman W. Reichow, H. R. 3298, Sixty-third Congress; and Bill for the relief of Ole Hamrey, H. R. 3291, Sixty-third Congress, first session.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency bill, and pending that I wish to inquire if we can agree on time for general debate.

Mr. GILLETT. I have requests for three hours of general debate on this side which I should be glad to grant.

Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I have a request to make. I want to rise to a question of personal privilege for about one minute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania later.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not agree to six hours' general debate.

Mr. GILLETT. Can the gentleman from New York give me some of his time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will make it four hours, I will give him three or four minutes of my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. This is the last appropriation bill upon which there will be general debate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and it is the last parasang in the journey. There will be conference reports coming in. If gentlemen on that side wish to indulge in harmless talk, I can arrange to accommodate them with time; but if they want to indulge in unjustifiable talk, we will have to use the time ourselves. It all depends on how gentlemen behave whether I give them any of my time or not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from New York, I want to make this statement: The conference report on the seamen's bill was filed yesterday and was ordered printed. It is here, and I desire to call that up and have it acted upon as soon as possible, as we want the bill to become a law before the end of the session. We are to act on it first in the House, and I would like to have it acted on to-day. For that reason I hope that debate on this bill will not be unduly prolonged.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think four hours for general debate is sufficient.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If we do not act on it to-day or to-morrow, I fear it will be too late.

Mr. MANN. Why do we not dispose of it now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would be glad to do so unless there is to be prolonged debate upon it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we can get started on the general deficiency bill, I will move to rise at half past 4 o'clock in order to take up the seamen's bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Missouri how long it will take to act upon the conference report?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not sure. I know that no member of the committee desires to discuss it at length. I am not informed whether there will be any opposition to the report or not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I want to state that I want some time on the conference report on the seamen's bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. How much?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not less than 30 minutes.

Mr. MOORE. And I would like to have some time on the seamen's bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask unanimous consent that general debate on the general deficiency bill be limited to four hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts and one-half by myself, and if that request is granted I shall withdraw the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union at this time to enable the gentleman from Missouri to proceed with the conference report at once.

Mr. MANN. Can not the gentleman make it four hours and a quarter?

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman from New York give me some of his time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will give the gentleman from Massachusetts one-quarter of an hour.

Mr. GILLETT. That is two hours and a quarter for this side and one hour and three quarters for the other side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I will yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate on the deficiency bill be limited to four hours, two hours to be controlled by himself and two hours by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] coupled with this request?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the gentleman from New York has stated that as soon as he obtains this agreement he will yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] to call up the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have just sent to the document room for a copy of the seamen's bill, and I have been advised that copies are not available at this time. I have a copy of the conference report, but I have no copy of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that I can go on until 1 o'clock.

Mr. GILLETT. The bill is here.

Mr. MANN. I understand the bill was printed a month ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands a copy of the bill is here. Does the gentleman from New York desire to go on with the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Missouri makes his motion, I shall not raise the question. I understand the gentleman from Missouri desires to call up the conference report on the seamen's bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri intend to call up that conference report at this time?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand the conference report is here.

Mr. MANN. The papers should be on the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, in the Post Office appropriation bill of the Sixty-second Congress, in what is known as the parcel-post section, a provision was inserted providing for a joint committee of the House and Senate to make inquiry into the subject of a general parcel post and all matters relating thereto. On the part of the House the Speaker appointed the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. Finley, the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. Gardner, and myself, and on the part of the Senate three Members of that body were appointed. The legal authority of that committee to act expired in December of last year. The committee itself never held a meeting, except one lasting about half an hour, at which time the Senator from Kansas, Mr. BRISTOW, was elected chairman. Despite the fact that the committee held no meetings whatever and had no consultations whatever, the chairman of the committee prepared a report, which the two members of the committee on the part of the Senate latterly signed, which has been issued since the date of the expiration of the power of the committee itself. The members on the part of the House have not joined in that report, and they have declined to do so, because no consideration of the subject by the committee had been had and the committee was without legal authority, in their judgment, to issue such a report. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the issuing of the report under these circumstances was a breach of the rules of this House, and the report ought not to be received by the House.

I wish now to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of dealing with the subject of the report so made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject about which he has spoken in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the conference report on the seamen's bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to know whether we can arrange some time for debate?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am entitled to an hour. How much time does the gentleman from Washington desire?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have 30 minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I shall want some time, if the gentleman can arrange it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire?

Mr. MOORE. About 15 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That would be 45 minutes. Does anyone else desire any time?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] says that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] wanted 2 or 3 minutes. I suppose he can obtain those from the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] desire any time?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, then, that the time be limited to an hour and a half, and in that connection I ask unanimous consent that those who speak on the bill may have leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the debate on the conference report be limited to an hour and a half, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half——

Mr. ALEXANDER. By the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE].

The SPEAKER. And the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], and that all gentlemen who speak shall have the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1439).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 136, "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

That section 4516 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4516. In case of desertion or casualty resulting in the loss of one or more of the seamen, the master must ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same or higher grade or rating with those whose places they fill, and report the same to the United States consul at the first port at which he shall arrive, without incurring the penalty prescribed by the two preceding sections. This section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels or yachts."

SEC. 2. That in all merchant vessels of the United States of more than 100 tons gross, excepting those navigating rivers, harbors, bays, or sounds exclusively, the sailors shall, while at sea, be divided into at least two and the firemen, oilers, and water tenders into at least three watches, which shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel. The seamen shall not be shipped to work alternately in the fireroom and on deck, nor shall those shipped for deck duty be required to work in the fireroom, or vice versa; but these provisions shall not limit either the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, the whole or any part of the crew are needed for the maneuvering of the vessel or the performance of work necessary for the safety of the vessel or her cargo, or for the saving of life aboard other vessels in jeopardy, or when in port or at sea from requiring the whole or any part of the crew to participate in the performance of fire, lifeboat, and other drills. While such vessel is in a safe harbor no seaman shall be required to do any unnecessary work on Sundays or the following-named days: New Year's Day, the Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day, but this shall not prevent the dispatch of a vessel on regular schedule or when ready to proceed on her voyage. And at all times while such vessel is in a safe harbor, nine hours, inclusive of the anchor watch, shall constitute a day's work. Whenever the master of any vessel shall fail to comply with this section, the seamen shall be entitled to discharge from such vessel and to receive the wages earned. But this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, or yachts.

SEC. 3. That section 4529 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4529. The master or owner of any vessel making coasting voyages shall pay to every seaman his wages within two days after the termination of the agreement under which he was shipped, or at the time such seaman is discharged, whichever first happens; and in case of vessels making foreign voyages, or from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, within 24 hours after the cargo has been discharged, or within four days after the seaman has been discharged, whichever first happens; and in all cases the seaman shall be entitled to be paid at the time of his discharge on account of wages a sum equal to one-third part of the balance due him. Every master or owner who refusese or neglects to make payment in the manner hereinbefore mentioned without sufficient cause shall pay to the seaman a sum equal to two days' pay for each and every day during which payment is delayed beyond the respective periods, which sum shall be recoverable as wages in any claim made before the court; but this section shall not apply to masters or owners of any vessel the seamen of which are entitled to share in the profits of the cruise or voyage."

SEC. 4. That section 4530 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4530. Every seaman on a vessel of the United States shall be entitled to receive on demand from the master of the vessel to which he belongs one-half part of the wages which he shall have then earned at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the voyage is ended and all stipulations in the contract to the contrary shall be void: Provided, Such a demand shall not be made before the expiration of nor oftener than once in five days. Any failure on the part of the master to comply with this demand shall release the seaman from his contract and he shall be entitled to full payment of wages earned. And when the voyage is ended every such seaman shall be entitled to the remainder of the wages which shall then be due him, as provided in section 4529 of the Revised Statutes: Provided further, That notwithstanding any release signed by any seaman under section 4552 of the Revised Statutes any court having jurisdiction may upon good cause shown set aside such release and take such action as justice shall require: And provided further, That this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States, and the courts of the United States shall be open to such seamen for its enforcement."

SEC. 5. That section 4559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4559. Upon a complaint in writing, signed by the first and second officers or a majority of the crew of any vessel, while in a foreign port, that such vessel is in an unsuitable condition to go to sea because she is leaky or insufficiently supplied with sails, rigging, anchors, or any other equipment, or that the crew is insufficient to man her, or that her provisions, stores, and supplies are not or have not been during the voyage sufficient or wholesome, thereupon, in any of these or like cases the consul or a commercial agent who may discharge any of the duties of a consul shall cause to be appointed three persons of like qualifications with those described in section 4557, who shall proceed to examine into the cause of complaint and who shall proceed and be governed in all their proceedings as provided by said section."

SEC. 6. That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to navigation," approved March 3, 1897, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That on all merchant vessels of the United States the construction of which shall be begun after the passage of this act, except yachts, pilot boats, or vessels of less than 100 tons register, every place appropriated to the crew of the vessel shall have a space of not less than 120 cubic feet and not less than 16 square feet, measured on the floor or deck of that place, for each seaman or apprentice lodged therein, and each seaman shall have a separate berth and not more than one berth shall be placed one above another; such place or lodging shall be securely constructed, properly lighted, drained, heated, and ventilated, properly protected from weather and sea, and, as far as practicable, properly shut off and protected from the effluvium of cargo or bilge water. And every such crew space shall be kept free from goods or stores not being the personal property of the crew occupying said place in use during the voyage.

"That in addition to the space allotment for lodgings hereinbefore provided, on all merchant vessels of the United States which in the ordinary course of their trade make voyages of more than three days' duration between ports, and which carry a crew of 12 or more seamen, there shall be constructed a compartment, suitably separated from other spaces, for hospital purposes, and such compartment shall have at least one bunk for every 12 seamen constituting her crew, provided that not more than six bunks shall be required in any case.

"Every steamboat of the United States plying upon the Mississippi River or its tributaries shall furnish an appropriate place for the crew, which shall conform to the requirements of this section, so far as they are applicable thereto, by providing sleeping room in the engine room of such steamboat, properly protected from the cold, wind, and rain by means of suitable awnings or screens on either side of the guards or sides and forward, reaching from the boiler deck to the lower or main deck, under the direction and approval of the Supervising Inspector General of Steam Vessels, and shall be properly heated.

"All merchant vessels of the United States the construction of which shall be begun after the passage of this act having more than 10 men on deck must have at least one light, clean, and properly ventilated washing place. There shall be provided at least one washing outfit for every two men of the watch. The washing place shall be properly heated. A separate washing place shall be provided for the fireroom and engine-room men, if their number exceed 10, which shall be large enough to accommodate at least one-sixth of them at the same time, and have hot and cold water supply and a sufficient number of washbasins, sinks, and shower baths.

"Any failure to comply with this section shall subject the owner or owners of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $50 nor more than $500: Provided, That forecastles shall be fumigated at such intervals as may be provided by regulations to be issued by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Department of Commerce, and shall have at least two exits, one of which may be used in emergencies."

SEC. 7. That section 4596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4596. Whenever any seaman who has been lawfully engaged or any apprentice to the sea service commits any of the following offenses, he shall be punished as follows:

"First. For desertion, by forfeiture of all or any part of the clothes or effects he leaves on board and of all or any part of the wages or emoluments which he has then earned.

"Second. For neglecting or refusing without reasonable cause to join his vessel or to proceed to sea in his vessel, or for absence without leave at any time within 24 hours of the vessel's sailing from any port, either at the commencement or during the progress of the voyage, or for absence at any time without leave and without sufficient reason from his vessel and from his duty, not amounting to desertion, by forfeiture from his wages of not more than two days' pay or sufficient to defray any expenses which shall have been properly incurred in hiring a substitute.

"Third. For quitting the vessel without leave, after her arrival at the port of her delivery and before she is placed in security, by forfeiture from his wages of not more than one month's pay.

"Fourth. For willful disobedience to any lawful command at sea, by being, at the option of the master, placed in irons until such disobedience shall cease, and upon arrival in port by forfeiture from his wages of not more than four days' pay, or, at the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not more than one month.

"Fifth. For continued willful disobedience to lawful command or continued willful neglect of duty at sea, by being, at the option of the master, placed in irons, on bread and water, with full rations every fifth day, until such disobedience shall cease, and upon arrival in port by forfeiture, for every 24 hours' continuance of such disobedience or neglect, of a sum of not more than 12 days' pay, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, at the discretion of the court.

"Sixth. For assaulting any master or mate, by imprisonment for not more than two years.

"Seventh. For willfully damaging the vessel, or embezzling or willfully damaging any of the stores or cargo, by forfeiture out of his wages of a sum equal in amount to the loss thereby sustained, and also, at the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not more than 12 months.

"Eighth. For any act of smuggling for which he is convicted and whereby loss or damage is occasioned to the master or owner, he shall be liable to pay such master or owner such a sum as is sufficient to reimburse the master or owner for such loss or damage, and the whole or any part of his wages may be retained in satisfaction or on account of such liability, and he shall be liable to imprisonment for a period of not more than 12 months."

SEC. 8. That section 4600 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4600. It shall be the duty of all consular officers to discountenance insubordination by every means in their power and, where the local authorities can be usefully employed for that purpose, to lend their aid and use their exertions to that end in the most effectual manner. In all cases where seamen or officers are accused, the consular officer shall inquire into the facts and proceed as provided in section 4583 of the Revised Statutes; and the officer discharging such seaman shall enter upon the crew list and shipping articles and official log the cause of such discharge and the particulars in which the cruel or unusual treatment consisted and subscribe his name thereto officially. He shall read the entry made in the official log to the master, and his reply thereto, if any, shall likewise be entered and subscribed in the same manner."

SEC. 9. That section 4611 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4611. Flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment are hereby prohibited on board of any vessel, and no form of corporal punishment on board of any vessel shall be deemed justifiable, and any master or other officer thereof who shall violate the aforesaid provisions of this section, or either thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than two years. Whenever any officer other than the master of such vessel shall violate any provision of this section, it shall be the duty of such master to surrender such officer to the proper authorities as soon as practicable, provided he has actual knowledge of the misdemeanor, or complaint thereof is made within three days after reaching port. Any failure on the part of such master to use due diligence to comply herewith, which failure shall result in the escape of such officer, shall render the master or vessel or the owner of the vessel liable in damages for such flogging or corporal punishment to the person illegally punished by such officer."

SEC. 10. That section 23 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended as regards the items of water and butter, so that in lieu of a daily requirement of 4 quarts of water there shall be a requirement of 5 quarts of water every day, and in lieu of a daily requirement of 1 ounce of butter there shall be a requirement of 2 ounces of butter every day.

SEC. 11. That section 24 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. That section 10 of chapter 121 of the laws of 1884, as amended by section 3 of chapter 421 of the laws of 1886, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. (a) That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order, or note, or other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages. Any person violating any of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100, and may also be imprisoned for a period of not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court. The payment of such advance wages or allotment shall in no case except as herein provided absolve the vessel or the master or the owner thereof from the full payment of wages after the same shall have been actually earned, and shall be no defense to a libel suit or action for the recovery of such wages. If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

"'(b) That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of any portion of the wages he may earn to his grandparents, parents, wife, sister, or children.

"'(c) That no allotment shall be valid unless in writing and signed by and approved by the shipping commissioner. It shall be the duty of the said commissioner to examine such allotments and the parties to them and enforce compliance with the law. All stipulations for the allotment of any part of the wages of a seaman during his absence which are made at the commencement of the voyage shall be inserted in the agreement and shall state the amounts and times of the payments to be made and the persons to whom the payments are to be made.

"'(d) That no allotment except as provided for in this section shall be lawful. Any person who shall falsely claim to be such relation, as above described of a seaman under this section shall for every such offense be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

"'(e) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels while in waters of the United States as to vessels of the United States, and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

"'The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel of the United States, or of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States, shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance, and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

"'(f) That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce the Commissioner of Navigation shall make regulations to carry out this section.'"

SEC. 12. That no wages due or accruing to any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and every payment of wages to a seaman or apprentice shall be valid in law, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment of wages or of any attachment, encumbrance, or arrestment thereon; and no assignment or sale of wages or of salvage made prior to the accruing thereof shall bind the party making the same, except such allotments as are authorized by this title. This section shall apply to fishermen employed on fishing vessels as well as to seamen: Provided, That nothing contained in this or any preceding section shall interfere with the order by any court regarding the payment by any seaman of any part of his wages for the support and maintenance of his wife and minor children. Section 4536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed.

SEC. 13. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seaman. Every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified for service as such on the seas, who is 19 years of age or upward, and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or coast-guard vessels; and every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified to serve as such on the Great Lakes and on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, who is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least 18 months' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or coast-guard vessels; and graduate of school ships approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea: Provided, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition, such persons or graduates are found to be competent: Provided further, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship a person found competent may be rated as able seaman after having served on deck 12 months at sea, or on the Great Lakes; but seamen examined and rated able seamen under this proviso shall not in any case compose more than one-fourth of the number of able seamen required by this section to be shipped or employed upon any vessel.

Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit and examination, under rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality and age of the applicant and the vessel or vessels on which he has had service and that he is entitled to such certificate under the provisions of this section, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued and shall keep on file the affidavits upon which said certificates are issued.

The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs or is scheduled to depart: Provided further, That any person that shall knowingly make a false affidavit for such purpose shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court. Any violation of any provision of this section by the owner, master, or officer in charge of the vessel shall subject the owner of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $500: And provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and nothing herein shall be held or construed to prevent the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, from making rules and regulations authorized by law as to vessels excluded from the operation of this section.

SEC. 14. That section 4488 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding thereto the following: "The powers bestowed by this section upon the Board of Supervising Inspectors in respect of lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, and other life-saving appliances and equipment, and the further requirements herein as to davits, embarkation of passengers in lifeboats and rafts, and the manning of lifeboats and rafts, and the musters and drills of the crews, on steamers navigating the ocean, or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States, on and after July 1, 1915, shall be subject to the provisions, limitations, and minimum requirements of the regulations herein set forth, and all such vessels shall thereafter be required to comply in all respects therewith: Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same."

REGULATIONS.

LIFE-SAVING APPLIANCES.

STANDARD TYPES OF BOATS.

The standard types of boats classified as follows:

Class.	Section.	Type.
I. Entirely rigid sides	A. Open	Internal buoyancy only.
	B. Open	Internal and external buoyancy.
	C. Pontoon	Well deck; fixed water-tight bulwarks.
II. Partially collapsible sides.	A. Open	Upper part of sides collapsible.
	B. Pontoon	Well deck, collapsible water-tight bulwarks.
	C. Pontoon	Flush deck; collapsible water-tight bulwarks.

STRENGTH OF BOATS.

Each boat must be of sufficient strength to enable it to be safely lowered into the water when loaded with its full complement of persons and equipment.

ALTERNATIVE TYPES OF BOATS AND RAFTS.

Any type of boat may be accepted as equivalent to a boat of one of the prescribed classes and any type of raft as equivalent to an approved pontoon raft if the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is satisfied by suitable trials that it is as effective as the standard types of the class in question, or as the approved type of pontoon raft, as the case may be.

Motor boats may be accepted if they comply with the requirements laid down for boats of the first class, but only to a limited number, which number shall be determined by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

No boat may be approved the buoyancy of which depends upon the previous adjustment of one of the principal parts of the hull or which has not a cubic capacity of at least 125 cubic feet.

BOATS OF THE FIRST CLASS.

The standard types of boats of the first class must satisfy the following conditions:

1A.—OPEN BOATS WITH INTERNAL BUOYANCY ONLY.

The buoyancy of a wooden boat of this type shall be provided by water-tight air cases, the total volume of which shall be at least equal to one-tenth of the cubic capacity of the boat.

The buoyancy of a metal boat of this type shall not be less than that required above for a wooden boat of the same cubic capacity, the volume of water-tight air cases being increased accordingly.

1A.—OPEN BOATS WITH INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL BUOYANCY.

The internal buoyancy of a wooden boat of this type shall be provided by water-tight air cases, the total volume of which is at least equal to 7½ per cent of the cubic capacity of the boat.

The external buoyancy may be of cork or of any other equally efficient material, but such buoyancy shall not be secured by the use of rushes, cork shavings, loose granulated cork, or any other loose granulated substance, or by any means dependent upon inflation by air.

If the buoyancy is of cork, its volume, for a wooden boat, shall not be less than 0.033 of the cubic capacity of the boat; if of any material other than cork, its volume and distribution shall be such that the buoyancy and stability of the boat are not less than that of a similar boat provided with buoyancy of cork.

The buoyancy of a metal boat shall be not less than that required above for a wooden boat of the same cubic capacity, the volume of the air cases and external buoyancy being increased accordingly.

1C.—PONTOON BOATS, IN WHICH PERSONS CAN NOT BE ACCOMMODATED BELOW THE DECK, HAVING A WELL DECK AND FIXED WATER-TIGHT BULWARKS.

The area of the well deck of a boat of this type shall be at least 30 per cent of the total deck area. The height of the well deck above the water line at all points shall be at least equal to one-half per cent of the length of the boat, this height being increased to 1½ per cent of the length of the boat at the ends of the well.

The freeboard of a boat of this type shall be such as to provide for a reserve buoyancy of at least 35 per cent.

BOATS OF THE SECOND CLASS.

The standard types of boats of the second class must satisfy the following conditions:

2A.—OPEN BOATS HAVING THE UPPER PART OF THE SIDES COLLAPSIBLE.

A boat of this type shall be fitted both with water-tight air cases and with external buoyancy, the volume of which, for each person which the boat is able to accommodate, shall be at least equal to the following amounts: Air cases, 1.5 cubic feet; external buoyancy (if of cork), 0.2 cubic foot.

The minimum freeboard of boats of this type is fixed in relation to their length; it is measured vertically to the top of the solid hull at the side amidships, from the water level when the boat is loaded.

The freeboard in fresh water shall not be less than the following amounts:

Length of the boat.	Minimum freeboard.
Feet.	Inches.
30	10

The freeboard of boats of intermediate lengths is to be found by interpolation.

2B.—PONTOON BOATS HAVING A WELL DECK AND COLLAPSIBLE BULWARKS.

All the conditions laid down for boats of type 1C are to be applied to boats of this type, which differ from those of type 1C only in regard to the bulwarks.

2C.—PONTOON BOATS, IN WHICH THE PERSONS CAN NOT BE ACCOMMODATED BELOW DECK, HAVING A FLUSH DECK AND COLLAPSIBLE BULWARKS.

The minimum freeboard of boats of this type is independent of their lengths and depends only upon their depth. The depth of the boat is to be measured vertically from the underside of the garboard strake to the top of the deck on the side amidships, and the freeboard is to be measured from the top of the deck at the side amidships to the water level when the boat is loaded.

The freeboard in fresh water shall not be less than the following amounts, which are applicable without correction to boats having a mean sheer equal to 3 per cent of their length:

Depth of boat.	Minimum freeboard.
Inches.	Inches.
12	2½
18	3⅜
20	5⅛
39	6½

For intermediate depths the freeboard is obtained by interpolation.

If the sheer is less than the standard sheer defined above, the minimum freeboard is obtained by adding to the figures in the table one-seventh of the difference between the standard sheer and the actual mean sheer measured at the stem and sternpost. No deduction is to be made from the freeboard on account of the sheer being greater than the standard sheer or on account of the camber of the deck.

MOTOR BOATS.

When motor boats are accepted, the volume of internal buoyancy and, when fitted, the external buoyancy, must be fixed, having regard to the difference between the weight of the motor and its accessories and the weight of the additional persons which the boat could accommodate if the motor and its accessories were removed.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CLEARING PONTOON LIFEBOAT OF WATER.

All pontoon lifeboats shall be fitted with efficient means for quickly clearing the deck of water. The orifices for this purpose shall be such that the water can not enter the boat through them when they are intermittently submerged. The number and size of the orifices shall be determined for each type of boat by a special test.

For the purpose of this test the pontoon boat shall be loaded with a weight of iron or bags of sand equal to that of its complement of persons and equipment.

In the case of a boat 28 feet in length 2 tons of water shall be cleared from the boat in a time not exceeding the following: Type 1C, 60 seconds; type 2B, 60 seconds; type 2C, 20 seconds.

In the case of a boat having a length greater or less than 28 feet the weight of water to be cleared in the same time shall be for each type directly proportional to the length of the boat.

CONSTRUCTION OF BOATS.

Open lifeboats of the first class (types 1A and 1B) must have a mean sheer at least equal to 4 per cent of their length.

The air cases of open boats of the first class shall be placed along the sides of the boat; they may also be placed at the ends of the boat, but not in the bottom of the boat.

Pontoon lifeboats may be built of wood or metal. If constructed of wood, they shall have the bottom and deck made of two thicknesses with textile material between; if of metal, they shall be divided into water-tight compartments with means of access to each compartment.

All boats shall be fitted for the use of a steering oar.

PONTOON RAFTS.

No type of pontoon raft may be approved unless it satisfies the following conditions:

First. It should be reversible and fitted with bulwarks of wood, canvas, or other suitable material on both sides. These bulwarks may be collapsible.

Second. It should be of such size, strength, and weight that it can be handled without mechanical appliances, and, if necessary, be thrown from the vessel's deck.

Third. It should have not less than 3 cubic feet of air cases or equivalent buoyancy for each person whom it can accommodate.

Fourth. It should have a deck area of not less than 4 square feet for each person whom it can accommodate and the platform should not be less than 6 inches above the water level when the raft is loaded.

Fifth. The air cases or equivalent buoyancy should be placed as near as possible to the sides of the raft.

CAPACITY OF BOATS AND PONTOON RAFTS.

First. The number of persons which a boat of one of the standard types or a pontoon raft can accommodate is equal to the greatest whole number obtained by dividing the capacity in cubic feet, or the surface in square feet, of the boat or of the raft by the standard unit of capacity, or unit of surface (according to circumstances), defined below for each type.

Second. The cubic capacity in feet of a boat in which the number of persons is determined by the surface shall be assumed to be 10 times the number of persons which it is authorized to carry.

Third. The standard units of capacity and surface are as follows:

Units of capacity, open boats, type 1A, 10 cubic feet; open boats, type 1B, 9 cubic feet.

Unit of surface, open boats, type 2A, 3½ square feet; pontoon boats, type 2C, 3½ square feet; pontoon boats, type 1C, 3¼ square feet; pontoon boats, type 2B, 3¼ square feet.

Fourth. The Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, may accept, in place of 3¼, a smaller divisor, if it is satisfied after a trial that the number of persons for whom there is seating accommodation in the pontoon boat in question is greater than the number obtained by applying the above divisor, provided always that the divisor adopted in place of 3¼ may never be less than 3.

CAPACITY LIMITS.

Pontoon boats and pontoon rafts shall never be marked with a number of persons greater than that obtained in the manner specified in this section.

This number shall be reduced—

First. When it is greater than the number of persons for which there is proper seating accommodation, the latter number being determined in such a way that the persons when seated do not interfere in any way with the use of the oars.

Second. When in the case of boats other than those of the first two sections of the first class, the freeboard, when the boat is fully loaded, is less than the freeboard laid down for each type, respectively. In such circumstances the number shall be reduced until the freeboard, when the boat is fully loaded, is at least equal to the standard freeboard laid down above.

In boats of types 1C and 2B the raised part of the deck at the sides may be regarded as affording seating accommodation.

EQUIVALENTS FOR AND WEIGHT OF THE PERSONS.

In test for determining the number of persons which a boat or pontoon raft can accommodate each person shall be assumed to be an adult person wearing a life jacket.

In verifications of freeboard the pontoon boats shall be loaded with a weight of at least 165 pounds for each adult person that the pontoon boat is authorized to carry.

In all cases two children under 12 years of age shall be reckoned as one person.

CUBIC CAPACITY OF OPEN BOATS OF THE FIRST CLASS.

First. The cubic capacity of an open boat of type 1A or 1B shall be determined by Stirling's (Simpson's) rule or by any other method, approved by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, giving the same degree of accuracy. The capacity of a square-sterned boat shall be calculated as if the boat had a pointed stern.

Second. For example, the capacity in cubic feet of a boat, calculated by the aid of Stirling's rule, may be considered as given by the following formula:

$$\text{Capacity}=\frac{l}{12}(4A+2B+4C),$$

l being the length of the boat in meters (or feet) from the inside of the planking or plating at the stem of the corresponding point at the sternpost; in the case of a boat with a square stern, the length is measured to the inside of the transom.

A, B, C denote, respectively, the areas of the cross sections at the quarter length forward, amidships, and the quarter length aft, which correspond to the three points obtained by dividing l into four equal parts. (The areas corresponding to the two ends of the boat are considered negligible.)

The areas A, B, C shall be deemed to be given in square feet by the successive application of the following formula to each of the three cross sections:

$$\text{Area}=\frac{h}{12}(a+4b+2c+4d+e),$$

h being the depth measured in meters (or in feet) inside the planking or plating from the keel to the level of the gunwale, or, in certain cases, to a lower level, as determined hereafter.

a, b, c, d, e denote the horizontal breadths of the boat measured in feet at the upper and lower points of the depth and at the three points obtained by dividing h into four equal parts (a and e being the breadths at the extreme points, and c at the middle point, of h).

Third. If the sheer of the gunwale, measured at the two points situated at a quarter of the length of the boat from the ends, exceeds 1 per cent of the length of the boat, the depth employed in calculating the area of the cross sections A or C shall be deemed to be the depth amidships plus 1 per cent of the length of the boat.

Fourth. If the depth of the boat amidships exceeds 45 per cent of the breadth, the depth employed in calculating the area of the midship cross section B shall be deemed to be equal to 45 per cent of the breadth; and the depth employed in calculating the areas of the quarter-length sections A and C is obtained by increasing this last figure by an amount equal to 1 per cent of the length of the boat, provided that in no case shall the depths employed in the calculation exceed the actual depths at these points.

Fifth. If the depth of the boat is greater than 4 feet, the number of persons given by the application of this rule shall be reduced in proportion to the ratio of 4 feet to the actual depth, until the boat has been satisfactorily tested afloat with that number of persons on board all wearing life jackets.

Sixth. The Board of Supervising Inspectors shall impose, by suitable formulæ, a limit for the number of persons allowed in boats with very fine ends and in boats very full in form.

Seventh. The Board of Supervising Inspectors may by regulation assign to a boat a capacity equal to the product of the length, the breadth, and the depth multiplied by six-tenths if it is evident that this formula does not give a greater capacity than that obtained by the above method. The dimensions shall then be measured in the following manner:

Length. From the intersection of the outside of the planking with the stem to the corresponding point at the sternpost or, in the case of a square-sterned boat, to the afterside of the transom.

Breadth. From the outside of the planking at the point where the breadth of the boat is greatest.

Depth. Amidships inside the planking from the keel to the level of the gunwale, but the depth used in calculating the cubic capacity may not in any case exceed 45 per cent of the breadth.

In all cases the vessel owner has the right to require that the cubic capacity of the boat shall be determined by exact measurement.

Eighth. The cubic capacity of a motor boat is obtained from the gross capacity by deducting a volume equal to that occupied by the motor and its accessories.

DECK AREA OF PONTOON BOATS AND OPEN BOATS OF THE SECOND CLASS.

First. The area of the deck of a pontoon boat of type 1C, 2B, or 2C shall be determined by the method indicated below or by any other method giving the same degree of accuracy. The same rule is to be applied in determining the area within the fixed bulwarks of a boat of type 2A.

Second. For example, the surface in square feet of a boat may be deemed to be given by the following formula:

$$\text{Area}=\frac{l}{12}(2a+1.5b+4c+1.5d+2e),$$

l being the length in feet from the intersection of the outside of the planking with the stem to the corresponding point at the sternpost.

a, b, c, d, e denote the horizontal breadths in feet outside the planking at the points obtained by dividing l into four equal parts and subdividing the foremost and aftermost parts into two equal parts (a and e being the breadths at the extreme subdivisions, c at the middle point of the length, and b and d at the intermediate points).

MARKING OF BOATS AND PONTOON RAFTS.

The dimensions of the boat and the number of persons which it is authorized to carry shall be marked on it in clear, permanent characters, according to regulations by the Board of Supervising Inspectors approved by the Secretary of Commerce. These marks shall be specifically approved by the officers appointed to inspect the ship.

Pontoon rafts shall be marked with the number of persons in the same manner.

EQUIPMENT OF BOATS AND PONTOON RAFTS.

First. The normal equipment of every boat shall consist of—

(a) A single-blanked complement of oars and two spare oars; one set and a half of thole pins or crutches; a boat hook.

(b) Two plugs for each plug hole (plugs are not required when proper automatic valves are fitted); a bailer and a galvanized-iron bucket.

(c) A tiller or yoke and yoke lines.

(d) Two hatchets.

(e) A lamp filled with oil and trimmed.

(f) A mast or masts with one good sail at least, and proper gear for each. (This does not apply to motor lifeboats or lifeboats on the Great Lakes or other inland waters.)

(g) A suitable compass.

Pontoon lifeboats will have no plug hole, but shall be provided with at least two bilge pumps.

In the case of a steamer which carries passengers in the North Atlantic, all the boats need not be equipped with masts, sails, and compasses, if the ship is provided with a radiotelegraph installation.

Second. The normal equipment of every approved pontoon raft shall consist of—

(a) Four oars.

(b) Five rowlocks.

(c) A self-igniting life-buoy light.

Third. In addition, every boat and every pontoon raft shall be equipped with—

(a) A life line becketed around the outside.

(b) A sea anchor.

(c) A painter.

(d) A vessel containing 1 gallon of vegetable or animal oil. The vessel shall be so constructed that the oil can be easily distributed on the water and so arranged that it can be attached to the sea anchor.

(e) A water-tight receptacle containing 2 pounds avoirdupois of provisions for each person, except on vessels navigating fresh water.

(f) A water-tight receptacle containing 1 quart for each person, except on vessels navigating fresh water.

(g) A number of self-igniting "red lights" and a water-tight box of matches.

Fourth. All loose equipment must be securely attached to the boat or pontoon raft to which it belongs.

STOWAGE OF BOATS—NUMBER OF DAVITS.

The minimum number of sets of davits is fixed in relation to the length of the vessel; provided that a number of sets of davits greater than the number of boats necessary for the accommodation of all the persons on board may not be required.

HANDLING OF THE BOATS AND RAFTS.

All the boats and rafts must be stowed in such a way that they can be launched in the shortest possible time and that, even under unfavorable conditions of list and trim from the point of view of the handling of the boats and rafts, it may be possible to embark in them as large a number of persons as possible.

The arrangements must be such that it may be possible to launch on either side of the vessel as large a number of boats and rafts as possible.

STRENGTH AND OPERATION OF THE DAVITS.

The davits shall be of such strength that the boats can be lowered with their full complement of persons and equipment, the vessel being assumed to have a list of 15°.

The davits must be fitted with a gear of sufficient power to insure that the boat can be turned out against the maximum list under which the lowering of the boats is possible on the vessel in question.

OTHER APPLIANCES EQUIVALENT TO DAVITS.

Any appliance may be accepted in lieu of davits or sets of davits if the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is satisfied after proper trials that the appliance in question is as effective as davits for placing the boats in the water.

DAVITS.

Each set of davits shall have a boat of the first class attached to it, provided that the number of open boats of the first class attached to davits shall not be less than the minimum number fixed by the table which follows.

If it is neither practicable nor reasonable to place on a vessel the minimum number of sets of davits required by the rules, the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, may authorize a smaller number of sets of davits to be fitted, provided always that this number shall never be less than the minimum number of open boats of the first class required by the rules.

If a large proportion of the persons on board are accommodated in boats whose length is greater than 50 feet, a further reduction in the number of sets of davits may be allowed exceptionally, if the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is satisfied that the arrangements are in all respects satisfactory.

In all cases in which a reduction in the minimum number of sets of davits or other equivalent appliances required by the rules is allowed, the owner of the vessel in question shall be required to prove, by a test made in the presence of an officer designated by the Supervising Inspector General, that all the boats can be efficiently launched in a minimum time.

The conditions of this test shall be as follows:

First. The vessel is to be upright and in smooth water.

Second. The time is the time required from the beginning of the removal of the boat covers, or any other operation necessary to prepare the boats for lowering, until the last boat or pontoon raft is afloat.

Third. The number of men employed in the whole operation must not exceed the total number of boat hands that will be carried on the vessel under normal service conditions.

Fourth. Each boat when being lowered must have on board at least two men and its full equipment as required by the rules.

The time allowed for putting all the boats into the water shall be fixed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

MINIMUM NUMBER OF DAVITS AND OF OPEN BOATS OF THE FIRST CLASS—MINIMUM BOAT CAPACITY.

The following table fixes, according to the length of the vessel—

(A) The minimum number of sets of davits to be provided, to each of which must be attached a boat of the first class in accordance with this section.

(B) The minimum total number of open boats of the first class, which must be attached to davits, in accordance with this section.

(C) The minimum boat capacity required, including the boats attached to davits and the additional boats, in accordance with this section.

Registered length of the ship (feet).	(A) Minimum number of sets of davits.	(B) Minimum number of open boats of the first class.	(C) Minimum capacity of lifeboats.

When the length of the vessel exceeds 1,030 feet, the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, shall determine the minimum number of sets of davits and of open boats of the first class for that vessel.

EMBARKATION OF THE PASSENGERS IN THE LIFEBOATS AND RAFTS.

Suitable arrangements shall be made for embarking the passengers in the boats, in accord with regulations by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

In vessels which carry rafts there shall be a number of rope or wooden ladders always available for use in embarking the persons onto the rafts.

The number and arrangement of the boats, and (where they are allowed) of the pontoon rafts, on a vessel depends upon the total number of persons which the vessel is intended to carry: Provided, That there shall not be required on any voyage a total capacity in boats, and (where they are allowed) pontoon rafts, greater than that necessary to accommodate all the persons on board.

At no moment of its voyage shall any passenger steam vessel of the United States on ocean routes more than 20 nautical miles offshore have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board.

If the lifeboats attached to davits do not provide sufficient accommodation for all persons on board, additional lifeboats of one of the standard types shall be provided. This addition shall bring the total capacity of the boats on the vessel at least up to the greater of the two following amounts:

(a) The minimum capacity required by these regulations.

(b) A capacity sufficient to accommodate 75 per cent of the persons on board.

The remainder of the accommodation required shall be provided, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, either in boats of class 1 or class 2, or in pontoon rafts of an approved type.

At no moment of its voyage shall any passenger steam vessel of the United States on ocean routes less than 20 nautical miles offshore have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board. The number and type of such lifeboats and life rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 15 to September 15, inclusive, any passenger steam vessel of the United States, on ocean routes less than 20 nautical miles offshore, shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 70 per cent of the total number of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than 50 per cent shall be in lifeboats and 50 per cent may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

At no moment of its voyage may any ocean-cargo steam vessel of the United States have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats on board. The number and types of such boats shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

At no moment of its voyage may any passenger steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, except over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, have on board a total number of persons, including passengers and crew, greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board. The number and types of such lifeboats and life rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 15 to September 15, inclusive, any such steamer shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 50 per cent of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than two-fifths shall be in lifeboats and three-fifths may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided further, That all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes, from September 15 to May 15 on the Great Lakes or for service on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry, and shall carry, enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew: And provided further, That no more than 25 per cent of such equipment may be in pontoon life rafts or collapsible lifeboats.

At no moment of its voyage may any cargo steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes have on board a total number of persons greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats on board. The number and types of such boats shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

The number, types, and capacity of lifeboats and life rafts, together with the proportion of such accommodation to the number of persons on board which shall be carried on steam vessels on the Great Lakes, on routes 3 miles or less offshore or over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, and on all other lakes, and on rivers, bays, and sounds, shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

All regulations by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, authorized by this act shall be transmitted to Congress as soon as practicable after they are made.

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized in specific cases to exempt existing vessels from the requirements of this section that the davits shall be of such strength and shall be fitted with a gear of sufficient power to insure that the boats can be lowered with their full complement of persons and equipment, the vessel being assumed to have a list of 15°, where their strict application would not be practicable or reasonable.

CERTIFICATED LIFEBOAT MEN—MANNING OF THE BOATS.

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified as follows: If the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 1; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 2; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 41 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 3; if the boat or raft carries from 61 to 85 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 4; if the boat or raft carries from 86 to 110 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 5; if the boat or raft carries from 111 to 160 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 6; if the boat or raft carries from 161 to 210 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 7; and, thereafter, 1 additional certificated lifeboat man for each additional 50 persons: Provided, That if the raft carries 15 persons or less a licensed officer or able seaman need not be placed in charge of such raft: Provided further, That one-half the number of rafts carried shall have a capacity of exceeding 15 persons.

The allocation of the certificated lifeboat men to each boat and raft remains within the discretion of the master, according to the circumstances.

By "certificated lifeboat man" is meant any member of the crew who holds a certificate of efficiency issued under the authority of the Secretary of Commerce, who is hereby directed to provide for the issue of such certificates.

In order to obtain the special lifeboat man's certificate the applicant must prove to the satisfaction of an officer designated by the Secretary of Commerce that he has been trained in all the operations connected with launching lifeboats and the use of oars; that he is acquainted with the practical handling of the boats themselves; and, further, that he is capable of understanding and answering the orders relative to lifeboat service.

Section 4463 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is hereby amended by adding the words "including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated," to the word "crew" wherever it occurs.

MANNING OF BOATS.

A licensed officer or able seaman shall be placed in charge of each boat or pontoon raft; he shall have a list of its lifeboat men and other members of its crew, which shall be sufficient for her safe management, and shall see that the men placed under his orders are acquainted with their several duties and stations.

A man capable of working the motor shall be assigned to each motor boat.

The duty of seeing that the boats, pontoon rafts, and other life-saving appliances are at all times ready for use shall be assigned to one or more officers.

MUSTER ROLL AND DRILLS.

Special duties for the event of an emergency shall be allotted to each member of the crew.

The muster list shows all these special duties, and indicates, in particular, the station to which each man must go and the duties that he has to perform.

Before the vessel sails the muster list shall be drawn up and exhibited, and the proper authority, to be designated by the Secretary of Commerce, shall be satisfied that the muster list has been prepared for the vessel. It shall be posted in several parts of the vessel, and in particular in the crew's quarters.

MUSTER LIST.

The muster list shall assign duties to the different members of the crew in connection with—

(a) The closing of the water-tight doors, valves, etc.

(b) The equipment of the boats and rafts generally.

(c) The launching of the boats attached to davits.

(d) The general preparation of the other boats and the pontoon rafts.

(e) The muster of the passengers.

(f) The extinction of fire.

The muster list shall assign to the members of the stewards' department their several duties in relation to the passengers at a time of emergency. These duties shall include—

(a) Warning the passengers.

(b) Seeing that they are dressed and have put on their life jackets in a proper manner.

(c) Assembling the passengers.

(d) Keeping order in the passages and on the stairways, and, generally, controlling the movements of the passengers.

The muster list shall specify definite alarm signals for calling all the crew to the boat and fire stations, and shall give full particulars of these signals.

MUSTERS AND DRILLS.

Musters of the crews at their boat and fire stations, followed by boat and fire drills, respectively, shall be held at least once a week, either in port or at sea. An entry shall be made in the official log book of these drills, or of the reasons why they could not be held.

Different groups of boats shall be used in turn at successive boat drills. The drills and inspections shall be so arranged that the crew thoroughly understand and are practiced in the duties they have to perform, and that all the boats and pontoon rafts on the ship with the gear appertaining to them are always ready for immediate use.

LIFE JACKETS AND LIFE BUOYS.

A life jacket of an approved type, or other appliance of equal buoyancy and capable of being fitted on the body, shall be carried for every person on board, and, in addition, a sufficient number of life jackets, or other equivalent appliances, suitable for children.

First. A life jacket shall satisfy the following conditions:

(a) It shall be of approved material and construction.

(b) It shall be capable of supporting in fresh water for 24 hours 15 pounds avoirdupois of iron.

Life jackets the buoyancy of which depends on air compartments are prohibited.

Second. A life buoy shall satisfy the following conditions:

(a) It shall be of solid cork or any other equivalent material.

(b) It shall be capable of supporting in fresh water for 24 hours at least 31 pounds avoirdupois of iron.

Life buoys filled with rushes, cork shavings, or granulated cork, or any other loose granulated material, or whose buoyancy depends upon air compartments which require to be inflated, are prohibited.

Third. The minimum number of life buoys with which vessels are to be provided is fixed as follows:

Length of the vessel under 400 feet, minimum number of buoys, 12; length of the vessel, 400 and under 600 feet, minimum number of buoys, 18; length of the vessel, 600 and under 800 feet, minimum number of buoys, 24; length of the vessel, 800 feet and over, minimum number of buoys, 30.

Fourth. All the buoys shall be fitted with beckets securely seized. At least one buoy on each side shall be fitted with a life line of at least 15 fathoms in length. The number of luminous buoys shall not be less than one-half of the total number of life buoys, and in no case less than 6. The lights shall be efficient self-igniting lights which can not be extinguished in water, and they shall be kept near the buoys to which they belong, with the necessary means of attachment.

Fifth. All the life buoys and life jackets shall be so placed as to be readily accessible to the persons on board; their position shall be plainly indicated so as to be known to the persons concerned.

The life buoys shall always be capable of being rapidly cast loose, and shall not be permanently secured in any way. The owner of any vessel who neglects or refuses to provide and equip his vessel with such lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, line-carrying projectiles, and the means of propelling them, drags, pumps, or other appliances, as are required under the provisions of this section or under the regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, authorized by and made pursuant hereto, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000; and every master of a vessel who shall fail to comply with the requirements of this section and the regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce, authorized by and made pursuant hereto, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500. Section 4489 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

SEC. 15. That the owner, agent, or master of every barge which while in tow through the open sea has sustained or caused any accident shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of sections 10, 11, 12, and 13 of chapter 344 of the Statutes at Large, approved June 20, 1874, and the reports therein prescribed shall be transmitted by collectors of customs to the Secretary of Commerce, who shall transmit annually to Congress a summary of such reports during the previous fiscal year, together with a brief statement of the action of the department in respect to such accidents.

SEC. 16. That in the judgment of Congress articles in treaties and conventions of the United States, in so far as they provide for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of the United States in foreign countries, and for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and the Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment and any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act, ought to be terminated, and to this end the President be, and he is hereby, requested and directed, within 90 days after the passasge of this act, to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, that so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign Governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions.

SEC. 17. That upon the expiration after notice of the periods required, respectively, by said treaties and conventions and of one year in the case of the independent State of the Kongo, so much as hereinbefore described in each and every one of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and to be of no force and effect, and thereupon section 5280 and so much of section 4081 of the Revised Statutes as relates to the arrest or imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment, shall be, and is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 18. That this act shall take effect, as to all vessels of the United States, 8 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except that such parts hereof as are in conflict with articles of any treaty or convention with any foreign nation shall take effect as regards the vessels of such foreign nation on the expiration of the period fixed in the notice of abrogation of the said articles as provided in section 16 of this act.

SEC. 19. That section 16 of the act approved December 21, 1898, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," be amended by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce, and under such regulations as he may prescribe, if any seaman incapacitated from service by injury or illness is on board a vessel so situated that a prompt discharge requiring the personal appearance of the master of the vessel before an American consul or consular agent is impracticable, such seaman may be sent to a consul or consular agent, who shall care for him and defray the cost of his maintenance and transportation, as provided in this paragraph."

SEC. 20. That in any suit to recover damages for any injury sustained on board vessel or in its service seamen having command shall not be held to be fellow servants with those under their authority.

And the House agree to the same.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The provisions of sections 1, 2, 5, 7, 10, and 17 of the House amendment are incorporated without changes in the conference report.

Section 2 of the Senate bill and section 3 of the House amendment are the same, section 7 of the Senate bill and section 8 of the House amendment are the same, section 13 of the Senate bill and section 15 of the House amendment are the same, section 14 of the Senate bill and section 16 of the House amendment are the same, section 17 of the Senate bill and section 19 of the House amendment are the same, and all these sections remain unchanged in the conference report.

Section 4 of the House amendment provided that demand for one-half part of wages earned should not be made oftener than once in five days. This provision is incorporated in section 4 of the conference report as follows:

Provided, Such a demand shall not be made before the expiration of nor oftener than once in five days. Any failure on the part of the master to comply with this demand shall release the seaman from his contract, and he shall be entitled to full payment of wages earned.

Section 6 of the House amendment as incorporated in section 6 of the conference report contains the following provision for a hospital compartment, to wit:

That in addition to the space allotment for lodgings hereinbefore provided, on all merchant vessels of the United States which in the ordinary course of their trade make voyages of more than 3 days' duration between ports, and which carry a crew of 12 or more seamen, there shall be constructed a compartment, suitably separated from other spaces, for hospital purposes, and such compartment shall have at least 1 bunk for every 12 seamen, constituting her crew, provided that not more than 6 bunks shall be required in any case.

Section 6 of the conference report also contains the following provision taken from section 5 of the Senate bill, to wit:

Provided, That forecastles shall be fumigated at such intervals as may be provided by regulations to be issued by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Department of Commerce, and shall have at least two exits, one of which may be used in emergencies.

These provisions are intended to add to the comfort, care, and safety of seamen.

The only change made in section 9 of the House amendment as incorporated in section 9 of the conference report is that making the vessel, as well as the master or owner of the vessel, liable in damages for flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment prohibited by the section.

Section 11 of the conference report is the same as section 11 of the House amendment, except that the following proviso at the end of subdivision (e) is stricken out:

Provided, That treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict herewith.

Section 12 of the conference report is the same as section 12 of the House amendment, except that the words "employed on a vessel of the United States" are stricken out, making the exemptions therein provided for apply to seamen generally.

Section 13 of the House amendment is the same as section 13 of the conference report, with the following modifications: As amended, the section applies to vessels of over 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the small inland lakes, etc. The language exempting the smaller inland lakes only, "where the line of travel is at no point more than 3½ miles from land" is stricken out and the small inland lakes are exempt from its provisions along with rivers. The section is further modified to provide that seamen serving on decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or coast-guard (revenue-cutter) vessels for the time prescribed shall be entitled to the rating of able seamen; also that graduates of school ships approved by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea; also cutting the requirement of 24 months' service on deck at sea, or on the Great Lakes, or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, to 18 months to entitle a person to the rating of able seaman and qualify him to serve as such on the Great Lakes, smaller lakes, bays, and sounds.

Persons who have served 12 months on deck on the Great Lakes as well as at sea are included among those who may become entitled to the rating of able seamen if found competent under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship; and the number of seamen examined and rated able seamen under the proviso that may be shipped or employed upon any vessel at one time is increased from one-fourth to one-half.

It is further provided that the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the section.

Said section 13 of the House amendment as amended and agreed to by the conferees and incorporated in section 13 of the conference report is as follows:

SEC. 13. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seaman. Every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified for service as such on the seas, who is 19 years of age or upward, and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or coast-guard vessels; and every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified to serve as such on the Great Lakes and on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, who is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least 18 months' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or coast-guard vessels; and graduates of school ships approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seaman after 12 months' service at sea: Provided, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition, such persons or graduates are found to be competent: Provided further, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship, a person found competent may be rated as able seaman after having served on deck 12 months at sea, or on the Great Lakes; but seamen examined and rated able seamen under this proviso shall not in any case compose more than one-fourth of the number of able seamen required by this section to be shipped or employed upon any vessel.

Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit and examination, under rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality and age of the applicant and the vessel or vessels on which he has had service and that he is entitled to such certificate under the provisions of this section, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued, and shall keep on file the affidavits upon which said certificates are issued.

The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs, or is scheduled to depart: Provided further, That any person that shall knowingly make a false affidavit for such purpose shall be deemed guilty of perjury and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court. Any violation of any provision of this section by the owner, master, or officer in charge of the vessel shall subject the owner of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $500: And provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and nothing herein shall be held or construed to prevent the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, from making rules and regulations authorized by laws as to vessels excluded from the operation of this section.

Section 14 of the House amendment is agreed to by the conferees and incorporated in section 14 of the conference report, with certain amendments hereinafter referred to.

The following proviso is inserted at the end of the first paragraph of section 14, and before the word "Regulations," to wit:

Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same.

While section 4488 of the Revised Statutes, which is amended by section 14, seems to apply to foreign vessels as well as to vessels of the United States, the proviso was inserted by the conferees to make it clear that it shall so apply.

Under the title, "Arrangements for clearing pontoon lifeboats of water," bags of sand as well as a weight of iron may be used in making tests.

Under the title "Equipment of boats and pontoon rafts": "First, the normal equipment of every boat shall consist of," in subdivision (f) lifeboats on the Great Lakes or other inland waters are not required to be equipped with masts and sails and gear for same, and under "Third, in addition, every boat and every pontoon raft shall be equipped with," subdivisions (e) and (f), the lifeboats and life rafts on vessels navigating fresh waters are not required to be equipped with provisions and fresh water, as provided in the House amendment.

The House amendment provides that all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes and on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry and shall carry enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew, not more than 25 per cent of such equipment to be in life rafts or collapsible lifeboats. The conferees modified this provision, as it affects the Great Lakes, to read:

That all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes or for service from September 15 to May 15, on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry, and shall carry, enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew: Provided, That not more than 25 per cent of such equipment may be in pontoon life rafts or collapsible lifeboats.

The conferees regarded the provision in the House amendment harsh and impracticable to apply to passenger vessels on the Great Lakes navigating during the summer months.

Section 14 of the House amendment, under the title "Certificated lifeboat men—Manning of the boats," provides:

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified as follows: If the boat or raft carries less than 61 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 3.

As amended by the conferees said provision reads as follows:

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified, as follows: If the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 1; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 2; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 61 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 3, etc.

This amendment was made to meet conditions on the Great Lakes and the other inland waters. The lifeboats in use on the Great Lakes will accommodate from 16 to 25 persons, and the life rafts from 12 to 15 persons. The conferees did not regard it reasonable to require a lifeboat carrying 25 persons or less to be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men, nor did the conferees regard it reasonable to require a life raft accommodating from 12 to 15 persons to be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men; hence, they divided these boats and rafts carrying less than 61 persons into three groups and undertook to provide for the manning of each according to its size and the number of persons carried. The section provides that at no moment of its voyage may any passenger steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, except over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, have on board a total number of persons, including passengers and crew, greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board. The number and types of such lifeboats and life rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 15 to September 15, inclusive, any such steamer shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 50 per cent of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than two-fifths shall be in lifeboats and three-fifths may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

The effect of the amendment made by the conferees is if the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less, it shall be in charge of a licensed officer or able seaman and 1 certificated lifeboat man, provided that if the raft carries 15 persons or less, a licensed officer or able seaman need not be placed in charge of such raft; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons, it shall be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and 2 certificated lifeboat men; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 61 persons, the same shall be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and 3 certificated lifeboat men. The amendment of the conferees further provides that "one-half the number of rafts carried shall have a capacity of exceeding 15 persons."

Section 18 of the House amendment provides that the act shall take effect as to all vessels of the United States 6 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except as otherwise provided. Section 18 of the conference report provides that the act shall take effect as to all vessels of the United States 8 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except as otherwise provided.

Section 20 of the conference report is taken from the proviso at the end of section 7 of the Senate bill.

Except as herein mentioned, the House amendment is agreed to by the conferees.

JOSHUA W. ALEXANDER,
RUFUS HARDY,
M. E. BURKE,
WILLIAM S. GREENE,
C. F. CURRY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that point temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington withdraws the point of order of no quorum. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to detain the House for more than 5 or possibly 10 minutes at this time.

There were five meetings of the conferees. We were in session from 8 o'clock until 11 or 12 o'clock each evening, and went through all the provisions of this bill with care, and finally came to a unanimous agreement. The conferees on the part of the House were myself, Mr. HARDY, Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, and Mr. CURRY. On the part of the Senate they were Senators DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN, JAMES K. VARDAMAN, KNUTE NELSON, and WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH. I need not say that the conference report in all of its provisions does not meet with the entire approval of all of the conferees, but we smoothed out our differences and agreed on the conference report as the best solution of many very important and difficult questions involved. A comparative print of the Senate bill, the House bill, and conference report has been made and is available for the use of the Members for comparison if they wish to utilize it.

In the statement just read by the Clerk the conferees on the part of the House have set out briefly the modifications made in the House bill. I might say that the House substitute or amendment for the Senate bill which was reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was accepted by the conferees as the basis of the conference report, and constitutes the conference report except as modified, as indicated in the statement of the managers on the part of the House, just read by the Clerk. It will be noted by reference to the statement that the provisions of sections 1, 2, 5, 7, 10, and 17 of the House amendment are incorporated without changes in the conference report.

Section 2 of the Senate bill and section 3 of the House amendment are the same, section 7 of the Senate bill and section 8 of the House amendment are the same, section 13 of the Senate bill and section 15 of the House amendment are the same, section 14 of the Senate bill and section 16 of the House amendment are the same, section 17 of the Senate bill and section 19 of the House amendment are the same, and all these sections remain unchanged in the conference report.

Section 4 of the House amendment provided that demand for one-half part of wages earned should not be made oftener than once in five days. This provision is incorporated in section 4 of the conference report, as follows:

Provided, Such a demand shall not be made before the expiration of nor oftener than once in five days. Any failure on the part of the master to comply with this demand shall release the seaman from his contract, and he shall be entitled to full payment of wages earned.

Section 6 of the House amendment as incorporated in section 6 of the conference report contains the following provision for a hospital compartment, to wit:

That in addition to the space allotment for lodgings hereinbefore provided, on all merchant vessels of the United States which in the ordinary course of their trade make voyages of more than 3 days' duration between ports, and which carry a crew of 12 or more seamen, there shall be constructed a compartment, suitably separated from other spaces, for hospital purposes, and such compartment shall have at least 1 bunk for every 12 seamen, constituting her crew, provided that not more than 6 bunks shall be required in any case.

Section 6 of the conference report also contains the following provision taken from section 5 of the Senate bill, to wit:

Provided, That forecastles shall be fumigated at such intervals as may be provided by regulations to be issued by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Department of Commerce, and shall have at least two exits, one of which may be used in emergencies.

These provisions are intended to add to the comfort, care, and safety of seamen.

The only change made in section 9 of the House amendment as incorporated in section 9 of the conference report is that making the vessel, as well as the master or owner of the vessel, liable in damages for flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment prohibited by the section.

Section 11 of the conference report is the same as section 11 of the House amendment, except that the following proviso at the end of subdivision (e) is stricken out:

Provided, That treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict herewith.

Section 12 of the conference report is the same as section 12 of the House amendment, except that the words "employed on a vessel of the United States" are stricken out, making the exemptions therein provided for apply to seamen generally.

Section 13 of the House amendment is the same as section 13 of the conference report, with the following modifications: As amended, the section applies to vessels of over 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the small inland lakes, etc. The language exempting the smaller inland lakes only, "where the line of travel is at no point more than 3½ miles from land" is stricken out, and the small inland lakes are exempt from its provisions along with rivers. The section is further modified to provide that seamen serving on decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or Coast Guard (revenue-cutter) vessels for the time prescribed shall be entitled to the rating of able seamen; also that graduates of school ships approved by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea; also cutting the requirement of 24 months' service on deck at sea, or on the Great Lakes, or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, to 18 months to entitle a person to the rating of able seaman and qualify him to serve as such on the Great Lakes, smaller lakes, bays, and sounds.

Persons who have served 12 months on deck on the Great Lakes as well as at sea are included among those who may become entitled to the rating of able seamen if found competent under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship; and the number of seamen examined and rated able seamen under the proviso that may be shipped or employed upon any vessel at one time is increased from one-fourth to one-half.

It is further provided that the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the section.

Section 14 of the House amendment is agreed to by the conferees and incorporated in section 14 of the conference report, with certain amendments hereinafter referred to.

The following proviso is inserted at the end of the first paragraph of section 14, and before the word "Regulations," to wit:

Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same.

While section 4488 of the Revised Statutes, which is amended by section 14, seems to apply to foreign vessels as well as to vessels of the United States, the proviso was inserted by the conferees to make it clear that it shall so apply.

Under the title, "Arrangements for clearing pontoon lifeboats of water," bags of sand as well as a weight of iron may be used in making tests.

Lifeboats on the Great Lakes or other inland waters are not required to be equipped with masts and sails and gear for same, and lifeboats and life rafts on vessels navigating fresh waters are not required to be equipped with provisions and fresh water, as provided in the House amendment.

The House amendment provides that all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes and on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry and shall carry enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew, not more than 25 per cent of such equipment to be in life rafts or collapsible lifeboats. The conferees modified this provision, as it affects the Great Lakes, to read:

That all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes or for service from September 15 to May 15 on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry, and shall carry, enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew: Provided, That not more than 25 per cent of such equipment may be in pontoon life rafts or collapsible lifeboats.

The conferees regarded the provision in the House amendment harsh and impracticable to apply to passenger vessels on the Great Lakes navigating during the summer months.

Section 14 of the House amendment, under the title "Certificated lifeboat men—Manning of the boats," provides:

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified as follows: If the boat or raft carries less than 61 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be three.

As amended by the conferees said provision reads as follows:

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified, as follows: If the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be one; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be two; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 61 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be three—

And so forth.

This amendment was made to meet conditions on the Great Lakes and the other inland waters. The lifeboats in use on the Great Lakes will accommodate from 16 to 25 persons, and the life rafts from 12 to 15 persons. The conferees did not regard it reasonable to require a lifeboat carrying 25 persons or less to be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men, nor did the conferees regard it reasonable to require a life raft accommodating from 12 to 15 persons to be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men; hence, they divided these boats and rafts carrying less than 61 persons into three groups and undertook to provide for the manning of each according to its size and the number of persons carried. The section provides that at no moment of its voyage may any passenger steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, except over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, have on board a total number of persons, including passengers and crew, greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board. The number and types of such lifeboats and life rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 15 to September 15, inclusive, any such steamer shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 50 per cent of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than two-fifths shall be in lifeboats and three-fifths may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

The effect of the amendment made by the conferees is if the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less it shall be in charge of a licensed officer or able seaman and one certificated lifeboat man, provided that if the raft carries 15 persons or less a licensed officer or able seaman need not be placed in charge of such raft; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons, it shall be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and two certificated lifeboat men; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 61 persons, the same shall be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men. The amendment of the conferees further provides that "one-half the number of rafts carried shall have a capacity of exceeding 15 persons."

Section 18 of the House amendment provides that the act shall take effect as to all vessels of the United States 6 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except as otherwise provided. Section 18 of the conference report provides that the act shall take effect as to all vessels of the United States 8 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except as otherwise provided.

Section 20 of the conference report is taken from the proviso at the end of section 7 of the Senate bill.

Except as mentioned, the House amendment is agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. In what respect does the conference report differ from the House substitute or amendment with respect to lake navigation; that is, in reference to life-saving apparatus and able seamen?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The bill as it passed the House provided that passenger vessels on the Great Lakes should carry enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate 50 per cent of the persons on board, two-fifths of the equipment to be in lifeboats and three-fifths in life rafts. Those are the minimum requirements. Of course the Steamboat-Inspection Service might increase the equipment, but those are the minimum requirements. As the bill passed the House it provided that the lifeboats and life rafts should be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men. The owners of passenger vessels on the Great Lakes, with reason, objected to the latter provision. The conferees did not change the provisions of the House substitute or amendment with reference to the number of lifeboats and life rafts that may be carried, but did modify the provisions with reference to the manning of lifeboats and life rafts. The committee in writing the bill and applying its provisions to the Great Lakes overlooked the provisions in section 14 that all lifeboats carrying 61 persons or less should be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the provision now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. On the Great Lakes the life rafts now in use carry from 12 to 15 people and the lifeboats 16 to 25. None of them have a capacity for more than 25, hence if you applied the rule as it was written in the bill when it passed the House to these smaller boats and rafts it would mean that they must have a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated boatmen in charge of each lifeboat and life raft with a capacity not to exceed 25 persons. Of course there is no necessity for any such manning scale for that size boat or raft. The conferees did not regard it reasonable for a life raft carrying from 12 to 15 people or a lifeboat carrying 25 people or less to be manned by an officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men. Hence we divided them into classes; that is to say, the lifeboats carrying 25 persons or less shall be in charge of a licensed officer or able seaman and a certificated lifeboat man.

Mr. MANN. That is, one certificated lifeboat man.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; one certificated lifeboat man. If it carries 26 to 41 persons, they shall be in charge of a licensed officer or able seaman and two certificated lifeboat men. If they have a capacity of between 41 and 61, they shall be in charge of a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men. Those are the modifications that have been made.

Mr. MADDEN. That applies to lifeboats and not rafts.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It applies to the rafts.

Mr. MADDEN. And boats?

Mr. ALEXANDER. And boats, too, except if the life raft carries 15 persons or less it may be in charge of a certificated lifeboat man.

Mr. MADDEN. Just one?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Just one. We did not regard there was necessity for any more. I will say this: This bill in its provisions as they apply to the ocean service are just as they were written in the House substitute for the Senate bill. The Senate bill provided for lifeboats for all on ocean-going vessels, and not less than two able seamen for each lifeboat, and the House bill provides lifeboats for all on ocean-going vessels except in certain circumstances. Twenty-five per cent of their equipment may be in life rafts, but that provision would only apply to very few ocean-going vessels. Section 14 of the House substitute carries out the provisions of the London Convention on Safety of Life at Sea, and embodies the provisions of that convention as regards lifeboats and life rafts and manning of same in that section, and provides that the manning of the boats and rafts shall be as prescribed in the London convention, except we provide that boats and rafts shall be in charge of a licensed officer or able seaman instead of licensed officer or seaman, and the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men is three, and from three up, depending upon the size of the boat or rafts. In other words, we provide, as does the London convention, for a class of men to man the lifeboats, in addition to the licensed officer or able seamen, known as certificated lifeboat men. In order to obtain the special lifeboat man's certificate, the applicant must prove that he has been trained in all the operations connected with the launching of lifeboats and the use of oars; that he is acquainted with the practical handling of the boats themselves, and further, that he is capable of understanding and answering the orders relative to lifeboat service.

Mr. MADDEN. So that at sea there must be not less than three certificated lifeboat men and an able seaman or officer in charge of the lifeboat and more, according to the size of the boat?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. While on the Lakes there shall be not to exceed three certificated lifeboat men, one able seaman or officer, and down to the minimum of one able seaman?

Mr. ALEXANDER. One certificated lifeboat man on a life raft carrying not more than 15.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will yield.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to say that you have covered one of the questions I desired to ask in regard to lifeboats. Having been a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee for eight years, during which time we had this under discussion many times, I am deeply interested. The question I wish to ask the gentleman is: What are the regulations for the health and comfort of the sailors as to air space, berths, and so forth?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have increased the crew space on vessels newly constructed from 72 feet to 120 feet.

Mr. GOULDEN. Cubic feet?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Cubic feet. And the provisions for their comfort are very ample. For instance, we provide for a hospital ward for seamen on all merchant vessels of the United States which in the ordinary course of their trade make voyages of more than three days' duration between ports.

Mr. GOULDEN. Which is very necessary, indeed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And we provide a better food scale. We also forbid advancements and allotments except to members of their families. And all the provisions, as they affect the welfare of the seamen, in the Senate bill and in the House substitute are incorporated in the conference report, and the comfort and welfare of the seamen are generously provided for.

Mr. GOULDEN. How far do these regulations that we are proposing now to adopt apply under the London convention and regulations of other nations in the merchant-vessel service of different countries?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The provisions of this bill apply to our own vessels and vessels of foreign nations leaving our ports.

Mr. GOULDEN. But to none others?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is about all there would be.

Mr. GOULDEN. I thought perhaps the London conference had agreed substantially along the line this bill proposes to cover. I had hoped so, at least.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The London convention does not cover the manning of vessels.

Mr. LEVY. I understand that this bill provides the manner in which foreign seamen shall be discharged when they arrive in American ports.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We make the same law apply to seamen in our ports, whether they are foreign or domestic seamen.

Mr. LEVY. Will not that be in defiance of all the treaties that we have with foreign countries?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We provide for abrogation of all the treaties in conflict with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LEVY. Does not the gentleman think that this is a serious time to provide for abrogation of treaties?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have always claimed the right to inspect foreign vessels entering our ports, but our navigation laws provide that where the inspection laws of foreign countries are substantially the same as our own we will, under certain conditions, waive inspection of their vessels. We do not inspect their vessels now if they meet certain requirements of our navigation laws, but the London convention, so far as the lifeboat equipment and the manning of lifeboats are concerned, is written into this bill, in section 14. The convention has been ratified by the United States Senate, and, as I understand, has been ratified by the principal maritime nations, and they obligate themselves to conform to those requirements.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to consume any more of my time now.

Mr. MOORE. Will my colleague yield for two questions?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Is your time up?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will take another minute or two to answer your questions.

Mr. MOORE. The statement on page 27 seems to indicate that the provision which would respect the treaties of foreign Governments in the matter of seamen has been taken out of the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We provide for the abrogation of all treaties in conflict with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. You do provide for their abrogation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Then we are to disregard the treaties or give notice of their dissolution?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Abrogation; whenever they conflict with the terms of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. One other question as to the manner in which men may become able-bodied seamen. They must serve three years. Is there any system of apprenticeship provided for in this bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. We provide that any seaman, after one year's service at sea, upon passing an examination as to eyesight, hearing, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship, may be rated an able seaman.

Mr. MOORE. How does he get on the ship under the law to qualify after one year?

Mr. ALEXANDER. He can receive a certificate as such. The Department of Commerce has the power under the provisions of the bill to provide rules and regulations.

Mr. MOORE. Before he has qualified as an A. B. he must have had three years' service?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly; except as I have already explained.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Just for a moment.

Mr. FESS. There is some fear expressed in a resolution of the Ohio Legislature that this legislation will be very hurtful to shipping on the Great Lakes. What, in your opinion, would be the effect on the Great Lakes of the legislation as now proposed by this conference report?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think one effect will be this, that during the excursion season, when lake excursion boats carry such large numbers of people, it will curb that disposition somewhat, and I think in the interest of safety of life that should be done. If they insist upon carrying such great numbers of people, they will be compelled to equip themselves proportionately Now, of course, the lake people stoutly objected to the Senate bill, known as the La Follette bill, and they objected to some of the provisions of the House substitute. They would rather not have any regulation at all, except under the Steamboat-Inspection Service; but the provisions of the House substitute or amendment, as modified by the conference report, I think, meet the views of every reasonable operator of passenger steamers on the Great Lakes.

Mr. FESS. That it would not interfere with legitimate traffic on the Lakes?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It would not. I would regret very much to have it do so.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have not any more time now.

Mr. SWITZER. I should like to know how it affects the Ohio River.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not affect the Ohio River at all.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I made a point of no quorum, but some gentlemen thought that it might inconvenience some Members, and so I withdrew it. The reason why I made that point of no quorum was this, that I do not believe that very many Members of this House outside of those on the committee understand the provisions of this bill, and I think that if they did we would not have passed it. I made the statement on the floor of the House the other day—and I was simply quoting newspaper statements, and perhaps I was not correct; I do not know—but according to the statements that came to me, the President of the United States does not believe that this is an opportune time to pass this bill.

Now, all of the Members of this House on each side of this aisle have applauded the President for every step that he has taken to preserve the peace and the neutrality of this country. We all want to do everything that we can to uphold his hands in that respect. But if I understand the provisions of this bill, we are now passing legislation that is going to lead us directly into danger, and I can not see the emergency that would justify us at this particular inopportune time, when the whole world is ablaze, in passing a bill that violates every treaty we have with every commercial nation of the world, and is likely to lead us into friction with all the shipping countries that send their vessels to our ports.

And what is the emergency? They tell you that the emergency for the passage of this bill is to keep the American seamen from being imprisoned. Everybody is in favor of that proposition. But what is the emergency that it should be done just now in violation of our treaties, without giving notice to the foreign countries? It is not in behalf of the American sailor. We have no American sailors to free. That is simply a fiction. That is imagination only that has been appealed to in order to get this bill passed through the House. We have not to-day 500 American sailors upon the Pacific Ocean. We have very few anywhere.

Now, I want to call the attention of this House to the provisions of the bill, and I am going to leave out all discussions in regard to its effect on our domestic trade. I believe it is a much better bill than that which came over from the Senate. I think it is a better bill than the one we passed through the House once before, but its provisions in regard to the foreign vessels are the same. I do not believe the Members of the House know the conditions that we prescribe on every vessel, foreign as well as our own, that comes into American ports. Now, let me read some of the provisions. I read:

That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order, or note, or other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages. Any person violating any of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100, and may also be imprisoned for a period of not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court. The payment of such advance wages or allotment shall in no case, except as herein provided, absolve the vessel or the master or the owner thereof from the full payment of wages after the same shall have been actually earned, and shall be no defense to a libel suit or action for the recovery of such wages. If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

Then it goes on and prescribes various other conditions in relation not only to our vessels but to any foreign vessel that comes into this country. Now, suppose a German vessel should come to our shores. Perhaps that is rather a violent presumption just at this time, in the situation we are in; but the war is not going to last always. Suppose a Japanese vessel comes into one of our ports—and they are coming in every day—and upon that vessel is a seaman who has been paid some of his wages in advance—a Japanese sailor, or perhaps it may be a Chinese sailor, paid in accordance with the laws both of China and Japan. He comes into one of our ports. Some irresponsible person files an affidavit, as provided under this bill, to the effect that there has been a payment made to that man in advance, although it was perfectly lawful in his own country, and, in fact, in the two countries, in the illustration I have made; yet immediately upon the filing of that affidavit they arrest the captain of this vessel and fine him or imprison him.

Is any self-respecting nation going to submit to any such performance as that?

That is clearly what might happen under the terms of this bill. I think if I would ask my distinguished friend, Judge ALEXANDER—although perhaps I ought not to say so—he would tell you that if that performance were gone through with perhaps the Attorney General of the United States would hold that we had no authority to make any such provision. But if that is so, why should we go through the idle performance of irritating some foreign country? What is the purpose of all this? Are we simply legislating to deceive somebody or to obtain the good will of some one?

But that is only one of the many pernicious provisions in regard to foreign ships. Let me read you some more of them. I read:

SEC. 13. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seaman. Every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified for service as such on the seas, who is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or Coast Guard vessels; and every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified to serve as such on the Great Lakes and on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, who is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least 18 months' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or Coast Guard vessels; and graduates of school ships approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea: Provided, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce, as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition, such persons or graduates are found to be competent: Provided further, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce, as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship a person found competent may be rated as able seaman after having served on deck 12 months at sea or on the Great Lakes; but seamen examined and rated able seamen under this proviso shall not in any case compose more than one-fourth of the number of able seamen required by this section to be shipped or employed upon any vessel.

Now, if they were prescribing that for some of our own ships, that would be our own business. I am not saying now but what that is a regulation that ought to be adopted for our own vessels. But what is "an able seaman"? They go on and tell you that "an able seaman" is a man that has had 18 months' service at sea. You have changed it, have you not? I make this inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Three years' service on the ocean or 18 months on the Great Lakes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; 3 years' service on the ocean, or 18 months' service on the Great Lakes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. After 12 months' service at sea or on the Great Lakes if he stands the examination provided for.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. And he must be 19 years of age. Whatever the precise qualifications are, it does not matter. But it is not the qualifications prescribed that I have objected to. What I want to call your attention to is the fact that it says "no vessels," clearly including foreign as well as American. Now, for fear that they might in the courts construe the words "no vessels" as not including foreign vessels, although it is as broad as you can make it, in section 14 there is this proviso:

Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that section 14 applies those provisions of international convention on safety of life at sea to which the principal maritime nations have given their assent, and it meets their views.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That part of it is perhaps true. But I want to ask the gentleman if it was not the intention and the understanding of the conferees that these provisions of section 13 should apply to foreign ships?

Mr. ALEXANDER. We amend section 4488 of the Revised Statutes, which applies to all vessels, whether domestic or foreign; and I thought, without that clause written in expressly so stating, the section would apply both to domestic and foreign vessels. But some members of the conference were so insistent that the provisions of section 14 should apply to foreign as well as United States vessels that I consented that that provision might be inserted, which would make it doubly certain.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. So that it is absolutely sure, so far as the intention is concerned, that these provisions shall apply to foreign ships?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The provisions of section 14?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The provisions of section 13.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is nothing to indicate that it shall apply to foreign ships, except that it says any vessel of more than 100 tons gross departing from a port of the United States shall be manned in a certain way.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to state further to the chairman of the committee, I think in all fairness to this House we ought to know whether it is intended that the provisions of section 13 shall apply to foreign vessels; because I have been a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries for 10 years before this Congress, and a similar bill was before that committee during all the time I have been a member of it. I know that it is the very foundation of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Washington 10 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know that it has always been the one great motive back of this bill to make it apply to foreign ships. I know that is what the president of the Seamen's Union is contending for, and I know that it would not receive sanction from that source for five minutes if it was not intended to apply to foreign ships. The gentleman ought to be fair with the House and with the country. You either intend this to apply to foreign ships or you do not. Now, I should like to know if it is understood, and if the gentleman will accept an amendment providing that this shall apply only to American ships? If so, then it will remove many of the objections to this bill, because it will prevent the violation of these foreign treaties. It will avoid the complications that are likely to arise. Much of my opposition, so far as that portion of this bill is concerned, is based upon that fact; and I should like to know whether it is the understanding of those advocating the bill that section 13 applies to foreign ships. I think the time has come when we ought to know. You have no right to keep this information from the House or the country. I will yield to the gentleman [Mr. ALEXANDER] to state whether it is the intention to apply this to foreign ships or not, as he understands it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know of anybody objecting to that provision except the gentleman from Washington. The conference report can not be amended. That is very clear. It was intended to apply indiscriminately to domestic and foreign vessels departing from our ports. That is the theory upon which the bill was drawn. It was in that form when it passed the House in the last Congress and the Senate and was pocketed by President Taft.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I thank the gentleman. So we agree. I have always contended that it was intended to apply to foreign ships. So now, having settled that point, I want to point out——

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to section 16, which says:

Any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act ought to be terminated, and to this end the President be, and he is hereby, requested and directed, within 90 days after the passage of this act, to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, that so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign Governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and section 18 provides that it shall take effect as to all vessels of the United States 8 months after its passage and as to foreign vessels after 12 months, and then it provides further in the bill that the President shall give notice to foreign countries, and so forth.

As a matter of fact, it violates some treaty with almost every nation in the world. There is no question about that. No one disputes it. We will have to set aside many treaties that we have with these foreign countries.

But now let me call attention to a situation——

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say that we have no treaty with a foreign nation relating to the manning of vessels.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That may be true in particular respects, but I think it is a violation of many of our treaties to impose the conditions which we are going to impose in this bill upon foreign ships.

I take conditions on my own coast, because I am more familiar with them; but exactly the same conditions would apply at all ports. I want to give you a specific illustration of what is going to occur under this bill. Then I shall have done my duty. I think if we pass this bill we are going to have difficult situations to face. I think it will lead us possibly into war. But after having made my statement, which I have made repeatedly on the floor of the House, I am not going to refer to this matter further. I have heretofore had to point out to the Members of this House that for the sake of doing an imaginary right to somebody who does not suffer, at this time when almost the whole world is engaged in war, we are going to enact legislation that will bring us trouble. The question I want you to consider is whether or not you are willing to do it. This bill is no more to me personally than it is to any other Member of this House. I never directly or indirectly had a penny's worth of interest in any ship or in shipping, domestic or foreign.

But to illustrate the working of this bill, a Japanese vessel comes into the city of Seattle, one of those great transoceanic liners with a crew of from 600 to 800 men. That vessel comes in to our wharf and is taking on a cargo. She is loaded and ready to put to sea. Any person, it makes no difference how irresponsible he may be, can file an affidavit under the terms of this bill, saying that the men upon that vessel do not understand the language of their officers, saying that some of them have been paid in advance, saying that some of them are under 19 years of age, saying that some of them have not had the required experience to make them able seamen, and immediately the collector of customs must cause a muster of that crew and not permit the vessel to sail. Now, how long is it going to take to muster that crew? It will take from 6, 10, and probably 24 hours to do it, and after it is done and over with, under the provisions of this bill another affidavit can at once be filed that some other of the numerous provisions have been violated. The dangers of this provision can not well be overestimated.

I want to ask this House if it thinks that any of the great nations are going to submit to such a humiliation? What is the justification for such action? Why should we tell Japan how old her sailors should be; why should we tell her how she shall pay her sailors? It does not affect our safety; it does not have anything to do with international relations or domestic affairs that will justify us in taking such action.

Further, they provide that if sailors desert they can not be taken back on board. I would like to see that provision in force if it can be done by international agreement, but we are the only one that takes that step. If negotiations were entered into, the other nations might join us.

The president of the sailors' union told me that if the bill went into effect Japanese seamen would desert, and that was one of the reasons why he wanted the bill.

If this crew of 600 or 800 men desert at Tacoma or Seattle, that vessel is not permitted to sail until they have a crew that understands the language of the officers, and that would be a Japanese crew. Where are you going to get that crew? It could not be gotten on the Pacific coast without great delay and cost. But this vessel from a friendly nation is not permitted to depart from our ports until they have conformed to our laws in these matters relating entirely to their own sailors. If it was a matter in regard to the use of the port or any way affecting our trade or commerce, it would be a different proposition.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Would not those Japanese leaving their vessel, deserting, conflict with our exclusion law in our own port?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It would if they were Chinese. I do not know whether it would if they were Japanese or not, but it would violate our immigration laws. The point to which the gentleman from Ohio calls attention is a very important one that the Immigration Committee ought to take notice of. This bill leaves the gate wide open, and you can bring in an unlimited number of men if it goes upon the statute under the guise of sailors that come here and desert.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What law is there that would keep Japanese out?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Nothing, except the general immigration laws.

Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LEVY. The gentleman is familiar with the coastwise traffic on the Pacific coast. I would like to ask him how this law would affect the Pacific coast traffic, and if he does not consider it a very onerous burden on the coastwise ships.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As far as the coastwise trade on the Pacific coast is concerned it will not affect it materially. As far as the over-sea trade is concerned it will destroy it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In legislative matters conflicting with treaties, what has been our custom? Is it to get an agreement for a change of the treaty, or is it first to pass a law and then abrogate the treaty?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I can not say what our custom has been, because I have not looked it up; but I can say that reasonable courtesy would suggest that we get an international agreement first, or, at least, attempt to get one. What is the necessity of our passing this law now, without giving time to other nations of the world to join with us if they so desire?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Has the gentleman made up his mind that this is a violation of the treaty?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no doubt about it, and there can be no question about it. I have talked with no one who has studied the bill that does not agree that this is in violation of many of our commercial treaties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to discuss this matter locally, but since the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] asked how it will affect the Pacific coast, I will say that if a Japanese vessel comes into our port they at least have the possibility of the desertion of their crew. They at least have the possibility of some one attempting to enforce this law. They are at least subject to the chance of some one harassing them.

Over at Vancouver, just across the line, they have every advantage that they have at Seattle, and I am unable to understand why any foreign ship should come to Seattle, where it is possible to harass them under this hostile legislation, where we hold out an invitation to the crew to desert, where we place it in the power of any irresponsible citizen to annoy them, to call a muster of their crew, why a vessel should come down there instead of going to Vancouver. I have not a particle of doubt that if this law goes on the statute books it will largely destroy Seattle as a great shipping port and transfer much of our business to Vancouver, British Columbia. It is bound to do that.

I want to say in conclusion that I have confidence that the President of the United States will have patriotism enough, if we do not, not to permit this law to go on the statute books at this time. I believe when the President looks at the bill and discovers that it is in violation of the various treaties we have with other countries, and when he looks at the conditions as they are to-day, believing that its enactment may lead to friction, that he will not approve it.

I thank the House for the time I have taken. I hope I shall never be called upon to talk on the seamen's bill again.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is certainly one of the radical opponents of most any legislation proposed to amend our navigation laws by way of reforming them. He says that if the Members of this House understood this bill they would not pass it. That is a very poor compliment to the members of the conference committee, who spent five nights in conference, after weeks and months, and some of them years, in study of the bill, who, when they got together in conference, every single, solitary member signed this report. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. No; I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But the gentleman misquotes me there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HARDY. I can not yield. Now, the whole committee signed this report of this bill, after mutually yielding and conceding, so that probably it is not exactly what any one of them would have written. The gentleman says that there is no emergency for this bill. We are not presenting this bill as an emergency bill, but as a long-needed reform. Let me call the attention of Members of the House to the fact that for years the fight has been going on before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the appropriate committee in the Senate to secure the reforms provided in this bill. At the last session, toward the close of Congress, this bill virtually was passed, and suffered a pocket veto, because the President either did not approve it or have time to examine it. Years before that this bill, or nearly its equivalent, was before the same committee, but the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] was on the committee and fought it hard, and so now, after years of labor on it, it nears a triumphant passage. Emergency! Why, for 20 years the friends of seamen have been fighting to strike the shackles off the wrists of the seamen, and so abolish the last relic of slavery that exists in any enlightened country; and this bill does that.

The gentleman from Washington says he does not oppose the abolition of involuntary servitude provided in this bill, and yet concludes his argument with the statement that that provision will cause Seattle to lose its commerce to Vancouver, because he says ships will go to Vancouver, where seamen are not free men, in preference to Seattle, where they are free men. I predict that when we have passed this bill there will not be an enlightened nation on the earth that will not follow our example and strike the shackles from the wrists and ankles of the seamen of their country. [Applause.] The gentleman says when we get this bill we are going into danger, and the President is not going to approve it, because we would get in danger. Why? Because we strike the shackles from the wrists of our seamen? He overestimates the power of his sophistry with the President, for you know and I know that no enlightened nation is going to make such a proposition a bone of contention or a ground of quarrel with the United States, nor will any Government quarrel with us for imposing in our ports the same rules on their vessels which we apply to our own. What nation would complain, and if it did complain could further complain when we say, "Mr. Britisher, Mr. Frenchman, the rules we apply to your vessel we apply to our own"? But this matter has been gone into, as to whether foreign ships might be made subject to our rules, and in the bark Endora case, a case in reference to our allotment law, which was made applicable to foreign ships as well as our own, our court said that on English or foreign vessels the law of the country to which the vessel belonged applied to rules governing the vessel, and so forth, by courtesy of nations, but if a nation saw proper to assert its own authority within its own jurisdiction, the implied consent to the rule of the law of other nations was withdrawn, and our laws would apply. That was the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Make these rules which we apply to our vessels apply to foreign vessels? Of course that is the purpose of this bill. Why? For this reason. We are struggling to build up an American merchant marine. If you do not have rules that restrict competitors of the American merchant marine, to the full extent and just as you restrict the American merchant marine, you never can have an American merchant marine. The real milk in the coconut seems to be this.

Gentlemen like my friend from Washington do not want any American merchant marine unless they can get it by the pathway of subsidy, and they would like to talk in the future as they have in the past about the restrictions on our merchant marine being such that they prevent us from competing with other merchant marines that are not governed by those restrictions. For instance, they would say an American shipowner must pay half of the wages due to his seaman at any port he enters, but that that is not so with the British shipowner navigating our waters. They further would say we have passed a law that strikes the shackles from the seamen in our port, but we have left the law so that the foreign shipowner can manacle his seaman through his hunger and thirst and want. Also that we require our ships to be efficiently manned, but permit foreign ships to do as they please. What about it? A seaman comes from Naples here on a low wage. When he gets into the port of New York, he is dissatisfied. He has been out a month, the ship is safe in port, and some wages are due him. The shipmaster, fearing that perhaps he will not return, will not give him a dollar. He can not go out in New York and pay for a night's lodging or for a meal. Had you not just as well have the law say, "We will arrest him and put him back," as to have the law say that when he gets to New York he can not get a dollar or a dime of the wages due him simply because he has contracted that way across the water? We provide here that when these men come to our ports they shall be entitled to demand half the wages earned, and if refused to go to our courts and sue for one-half of the wages due them. Mark you, we do not encourage the seaman to desert, and we make him lose all he leaves—one-half his wages and his clothing and property on board the ship—but we give him a little mite, so that he may buy a night's lodging or pay for a breakfast.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. No; I can not.

Mr. LEVY. I have no time to speak myself, and this is the only way in which I can have myself heard.

Mr. HARDY. I decline to yield. The gentleman from Washington says that under these circumstances the seaman under this bill goes and has the officer of the vessel arrested, and that will get us into trouble. The gentleman is mistaken. All he can do is to go to our courts and sue for the wages that are due him, and that is not going to get us into any trouble. It is a strange thing to me that men like the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] are here constantly fighting the battles of the foreign shipowner. Why? What bond of sympathy is it that makes the gentleman from Washington stand up here and defend the so-called or suppose rights of the shipowner of Great Britain, Norway, or Germany? The answer to all of it is this, that if we exempt foreign ships from the restrictions we put on our own the gentleman from Washington can then urge that we have so restricted the shipowner of the United States by constraints that are not upon the shipowners of other countries that he can not compete, and that therefore we must give our shipowner a subsidy.

No, my countrymen, I tell you what we want. We want to build up an American merchant marine. We want to put the American shipowner on the seas governed by the same rules, subject to the same restrictions that the foreign shipowner is under; no more, no less, and this bill in addition to striking the shackles from the limbs of the seaman places our shipowner on the ocean on equal terms with the shipowner of any other nation with one exception, and that is that he may have to pay more for his vessel, but if it is one in the foreign trade only he gets his vessel on equal terms. Then when you put two vessels under different flags, plowing the same waters, and the seaman is free, the seamen of those two vessels will receive the same wages because the seamen will go to where they can get higher wages. But if you shackle them, if you say we will arrest you if you desert, or we will hold you to your ship by the pangs of your stomach, or we will not let you sleep, we will not let you eat, we will not give you anything you have earned if you leave the ship, if we do that then the shipowner abroad can hold in chains his seamen as long as he pleases. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts use some time?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN].

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, a very ordinary way to attempt to destroy a meritorious measure that can not be met upon its merits by argument is by invoking the specter of fear, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is past master of the art of evoking specters. To my mind there is absolutely no reason why any man in this Chamber should hesitate in voting for this conference report. The bill, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] has just clearly stated, has been carefully considered, has been the subject of the best study of the best men in this Chamber for many years. It is the result of the judgment of the conferees, and, in my opinion, it commends itself to every thoughtful man. Not one argument has been urged against it upon the merits of the measure, and when gentlemen try to defeat it by talking war and the danger of war they belittle the intelligence of the House and discredit their own. There is no reason why this Nation should be involved in war because, forsooth, a Japanese vessel which sails into the port of Seattle has to submit to the provisions of this bill. The gentleman offers the suggestion that the provisions of this law may be by some irresponsible person insisted upon and embarrassment thereby result. This is purely imaginary. The Empire of Japan is governed by intelligent, patriotic men. They are not going to invoke the terrible catastrophe of war because the men operating vessels under their flag are subjected to exactly the same treatment as men operating our vessels are subjected to in our own ports. An irresponsible man in Seattle might get us into trouble with a foreign power by dynamiting one of their vessels, but not by invoking the provisions of a law deliberately passed by a great government and applied to all alike.

The argument, to my mind, is absurd, and I do not believe the gentleman himself considers it any more than a specious argument, a special plea. This conference report ought to be accepted; this bill ought to be passed. The toiling men in the merchant-marine service have been demanding this legislation for years. We must encourage and protect them. It is the only way we can get the right kind of men to go into the service and build up a merchant marine. It is the only way we can do justice to the sailors upon the seas. It is the only way we can——

Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman yield? How many sailors have we now in the service?

Mr. MANAHAN. Only a few, because the laws we have in force have been infamously unjust to sailors, and that is why we ought to make this bill a law and enforce it honestly; then, as the years come and go, you will find under its provisions a great merchant marine built up of American sailors to man American ships——

Mr. LEVY. We have not any at all.

Mr. MANAHAN. Because they will get a square deal under its provisions which they do not get now. The very question of the gentleman from New York, as to how many sailors we have, discredits our present law and emphasizes the necessity for this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, there are two men in this House whose consistency I admire. One is the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who from the beginning to the end of his career in the House has been a consistent advocate of tariff for revenue only. He has held to it through the course of the tariff bill which bears his name, even though the country is sorely distressed, and he refuses to admit the error of his policy when unemployment prevails around about him. He stands by his guns, though the industries shall be closed down. The other gentleman whose consistency I admire is the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], whose course in relation to shipping legislation has been very much like that of the distinguished Democratic leader, Mr. UNDERWOOD. He wants to revise the shipping laws of the United States. He wants to introduce a new merchant-marine system. He has undertaken to do it, partly by suggestion from the White House, by the introduction of certain bills and the repeal of others, until to-day we have the crowning effort of his maritime career. He wants to do to-day with the shipping of the United States what the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has done with the industries of the United States—turn them over to our foreign competitors.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MOORE. No; I can not.

Mr. GORDON. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question——

Mr. MOORE. I would like to answer, but I have not the time. In his efforts to change the merchant marine, the gentleman approved the bill which came from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in the Panama Canal act, granting American registry to foreign ships. That meant to confer the American flag upon foreign ships built by foreign cheap labor. The boon of the American flag on foreign craft is of inestimable value to foreigners upon the high seas to-day. Then we had what is called the ship purchase bill, introduced at the instance of the President of the United States, to buy foreign ships. Thank God, it has not yet passed the other Chamber, though it passed this one. That meant the transfer of American money to foreign shipyards. Then we had the bill providing for war-risk insurance for foreign ships that were given the American register. Two ships have already gone down under this system—ships built by foreign cheap labor—which because they were wrecked had had conferred upon them the right to use the American flag. The Government has already lost through insuring these two foreign-built vessels about $660,000, which the people staked against premiums amounting to $21,000. Then we had what was called the wreckage bill, brought in by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] and his committee. That bill proposed that where old foreign hulks were wrecked upon the American coast and repaired somewhere in American shipyards they shall be given the right to use the American flag. Thus we see how, in the matter of building a new marine industry in the United States, the gentleman from Missouri has been absolutely consistent in his course, as the gentleman from Alabama was consistent in his course in helping—unwittingly, of course—to close up the industries of this country for the benefit of our foreign competitors.

Through the vast imports that come into this country from foreign mills—both British and German—even during the war, we have been able to discern just what it means to have the low tariff in this country. The imports have not fallen off to any great extent relatively, so far as the activities of the mills in Germany and Great Britain have been concerned. We have been sending them more raw material than ever, especially cotton, to work up into competitive manufactures to batter down our own industries.

The damage has been great, not only to the employers and the labor in the textile industries in the United States but the loss to the Treasury has been most acute. That our own industries suffered while we have been feeding foreign mills to compete with us under the low tariff, even during the war, is attested by the hundreds of thousands of unemployed workmen in our own country. I have not overindulged the temptation to tell of the misery that exists in the textile districts of Philadelphia, but I know there is lack of employment both in the mills and in the shipyards, and I further know that it is due not to the European war but to the legislation recently passed and proposed in this Congress which favors the European manufacturers and European shipbuilders above the men and the women who obtain their livelihood here. The closing of at least 12 hosiery mills in Philadelphia alone during the last year is but a drop in the bucket of industrial depression that has prevailed since the low-tariff law went into effect. The imports from Germany have been so steady and so heavy that it was useless for these mills to undertake to do business against so cheap and so formidable a foreign deluge.

And we have the unemployed with us still, not only in the textile industry but at the shipyards, in the iron and steel industry, and in various other industries all over this country.

Now, what does this shipping bill propose to do? In short, it proposes to turn over about everything we have left in the way of an advantage to American shipping to our foreign competitors. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] makes a most brilliant and eloquent speech about the gyves that are upon the wrists and the shackles that are upon the legs of American seamen, but the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN] says there are no American seamen. Then what becomes of this beautiful bit of sympathetic oratory from Texas? If there are no American seamen, it is useless to talk of shackles upon American seamen. The bill is weak in this particular, because it speaks of "involuntary servitude." I do not believe in shackles or involuntary servitude, and I am not prepared to weep crocodile tears over any such pretense of slavery. The American workman does not yield to shackles or slavery anywhere in this country. It is a favorite expression with agitators, but it belies the spirit of the man who works for a living in the United States. We have no slaves in the United States to-day. It is idle to talk of "slavery" in connection with this bill. We abolished slavery long ago. We struck the shackles from 4,000,000 slaves, and did it effectively and well, and there have been no slaves in this country since.

What does this bill propose? It proposes that inasmuch as we have no Amreican sailors we shall give the American sailors' rights to foreign sailors, that inasmuch as we have no American ships we shall confer every American right upon foreign ships. We have done that right along in every bill that has been introduced under the present administration. We provide in this bill that no man shall be qualified as an able-bodied seaman unless he has had three years' actual service upon the high seas. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] admitted that in a question put to him by me a little while ago. Where, in the name of heaven, are we going to get American men equipped to be American seamen unless we provide for some sort of apprenticeship? Where are we going to get able-bodied American seamen when the only men qualified to serve under the law are the men who have had three years' experience on the high seas? What men are qualified to become able-bodied seamen? The fact is that under this bill the only man who can claim to be an able-bodied seaman, there being no American seamen, is the man who has served three years on a foreign ship and who speaks some foreign language. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman who applauded that sentiment does not know the provisions.

Mr. MOORE. I think that was the Seamen's Union.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The bill provides that graduates of school ships may become able seamen after 12 months' service.

Mr. MOORE. If that is provided in this bill, it may help a little; but the three-year seaman is a foreign seaman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is provided in this bill. It also provides that any seaman after 12 months' service at sea or on the Great Lakes, and who passes an examination as to eyesight and seamanship, may become an able seaman.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the gentleman where we will get American seamen while we are waiting for the three years to pass by?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why, we have not any American seamen in any number.

Mr. MOORE. Then, we will have to fill up this new American merchant marine, of which the gentleman from Missouri is the father, by employing foreign seamen on foreign ships flying the American flag. Take foreign material, foreign labor, foreign workshops, foreign shipyards, and foreign ships and put foreign labor on them, and then we have an American merchant marine. Do not do any of the work in this country; do it abroad. That is the proposition in this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman let me answer that question? All ships under the American flag employ the same class of seamen as vessels under foreign flags, and we have no law, and have not had for 20 years, requiring them to be American seamen.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this: That while the gentleman has devoted himself to this work, and very consistently as I have said, the gentleman is mistaken if, in his opinion, American advantages will be derived from the passage of this bill. What will become of the man with small capital who operates a single ship along the Atlantic seaboard stopping from port to port, or any small corporation for that matter, subjected as they will be to the restrictions and limitations imposed by this bill? The crew can do substantially what it pleases with the vessel. With the great corporations owning large steamships and able to employ counsel and maintain an organization for protective purposes it will be different. They can drive the small operator away from the coast or off the seas. The man who owns a yacht is exempted from the provisions of this bill, but the small shipper will have a hard fight for existence under it. The advantage, if any, will be with the large foreign corporations, many of which now have a firm foothold in this country. Apart from the fact that the grant of the American flag to foreign ships has had the effect of increasing foreign wages, there is no advantage in this kind of legislation. It will not help to build up an American merchant marine. On the contrary, while it involves complications in the matter of our treaty relations with foreign countries, it is more in the interest of the great foreign corporations that now do the American carrying trade over the seas than it is in the interest of American shipping. It certainly will not help American shipyards or American labor. It will have the one effect of increasing the wages of foreign seamen and of reducing the opportunities of the American workingman generally for employment.

One other point. The course which the gentleman from Missouri has been pursuing with regard to the merchant marine has not all been smooth sailing. For several days I have been calling attention to the menace of the War Risk Bureau created at the instance of the President. I have called attention to the sinking of the two foreign-built vessels that secured the American flag, under which to carry cotton into the war zones. I have referred to the power of the President to interfere with this hazardous business if he saw fit to exercise his power. Apparently the President has seen fit to take steps in this regard. It is with much pleasure I read from a report in the Washington Herald this morning:

WAR INSURANCE HELD UP—DAMPER ON SHIP DANGER—ACTION FOLLOWS LOSS OF TWO AMERICAN SHIPS IN MINE AREA.

The first tangible result in Washington of the sinking of the American steamships Evelyn and Carib in the mine area of the North Sea was the action of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance yesterday in deciding upon temporary suspension of insurance on ships bound for north European ports.

This decision followed a conference by President Wilson with Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Peters at the White House. The decision reached was that there should be an immediate horizontal increase in the rates on risks in the zone of war. Pending a meeting of the advisory insurance board to fix new rates no policies will be issued on such risks.

While it is represented officially that the decision is a purely technical result of the newly demonstrated dangers in the North Sea areas, it is pointed out that one effect of the Government's action will be to discourage in some measure American ships from entering the mine and war-zone areas.

In addition to this report, Secretary McAdoo, of the Treasury Department, is declared to have given out a statement admitting the loss on the steamships Evelyn and Carib. I append that statement, which verifies the information given by me to the House yesterday, and which was subsequently confirmed in the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]:

The total insurance carried by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance of the Treasury Department upon the steamship Evelyn, reported sunk off Borkum Island February 19, and the steamer Carib, reported sunk in the North Sea February 23, is $659,103, which is covered entirely by premiums already earned by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the War Risk Bureau was to have been the inspiration of the new American merchant marine, especially to get our exports into the war zone. The business was a thriving business while the premiums were coming in, but the loss of two ships of the hundreds that have been insured wiped out more than one-third of all the collections. It is possible the President has yielded to the demands made upon this floor for a halt in the reckless business we seem to have been doing. I am grateful that the President, whether he has responded to the demands made upon this floor or not, has decided to take action on a matter so fraught with peril.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. MOORE. I regret I have not the time. I am glad that in the mad rush to pass shipping legislation that is in the interest of the foreign corporations and against legitimate American shipping our protests have at last been heard. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, in extending my remarks, I desire to insert an editorial from this morning's Philadelphia Record. The Record is a Democratic paper which is devoted to President Wilson. It does not approve this so-called seamen's bill for reasons which are very clearly stated. It is as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record, Feb. 25, 1915.]

WAGES FOLLOW THE FLAG.

It is a curious thing that the foreign officers and men of American-owned, but foreign-built, vessels demanded American wages just as soon as the flag was changed, and it is a more curious thing that the owners found it necessary to increase the wages very nearly double as soon as the nationality of the ship was changed, though the owners and the crews were identically the same as before. Senator GALLINGER has sought information on this point from companies that have had their property transferred from foreign to the American flag, and all of them tell the same story.

If men will work under a foreign flag for about half what they demanded under the American flag there is a very obvious and simple reason, of unquestionable solvency in commerce, for letting them go on working under the Norwegian, or Danish, or Dutch, or Italian flag. What is the use of raising the American flag over them and doubling their wages?

If it will cost a great deal more to operate steamers under the American than under a foreign flag private capital, which has a sordid interest in profits, will for the most part keep clear of American steamers. The loss will not be endured by private capital, and if there is a loss to private owners it can't be turned into a profit by making good the deficit out of the Public Treasury, whether by subsidizing privately owned steamers or by defraying the expenses of steamers owned by the Government. All that can be done is to transfer that loss from individual owners to all the people of the Nation.

There are two conditions that would justify the Nation in operating American steamers at a loss. One would be the lack of transportation facilities. The amount of shipping in our ports before the war and the rapid increase of our exports refute this. Whatever deficiency there is at the present time is greatly exaggerated, as is proved by the enormous amount of our exports.

The other condition is the importance of being able to invade some other country. The one strong, consistent argument for the support of an American merchant marine out of the Public Treasury, which rests upon facts and not dreams and fictions, is the need of a large mercantile marine to support the Navy and transport the Army in the event of an aggressive war. Here the advocates of a merchant marine supported in considerable part by the proceeds of taxation have plenty of facts. When we invaded Cuba with a small Army we had trouble in getting a sufficient supply of transports and store ships. If we should undertake to invade England, or France, Germany, Italy, Russia or Japan we should find it almost impossible to get vessels enough to carry the troops and their war material. If we are planning a war of aggression on any country except Mexico and Canada, both of which we can enter by land, then there is undoubtedly a reason why public moneys should be freely used in acquiring and maintaining a merchant fleet that we could commandeer on the instant.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], who, I understand, has 20 minutes, if he intends to occupy that time himself?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I can not have more time than three minutes on this very important measure. I myself am a friend of the sailors and seamen. My father was a cabin boy on one of Stephen Girard's ships, and followed the sea all his life. Therefore I am a friend of the seamen. In my opinion this bill is directly against the interests of the seamen, and I think it will prove disastrous to the shipping interests of the United States—what little we have left.

Do you want to drive out the little remnant of trade that still remains? The gentleman stated that we have but few sailors in the United States on account of our poor laws. It is because of our shipping laws, which have driven American ships from the sea. We have comparatively few sailors; only a few thousand. It is a disgrace. American sailors are absolutely ignored in this bill. This bill is in the interest of foreign sailors. Here is one item alone which I will read which proves that the measure is injurious to the American sailor:

That is shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order, or note, or other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages. Any person violating any of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100, and may also be imprisoned for a period of not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court. The payment of such advance wages or allotment shall in no case except as herein provided absolve the vessel or the master or the owner thereof from the full payment of wages after the same shall have been actually earned, and shall be no defense to a libel suit or action for the recovery of such wages. If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment, as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

Why, under this section they will not be allowed to advance a poor sailor a few dollars if he needs the money. Suppose a sailor is in trouble and wants money. The captain, if he gives him aid, will be libeled when he returns to port, and he can be annoyed by no end of litigation.

The shipping laws as administered in every port can take care of our ships. Our officials know how they are manned. Anyone can go and complain to-day and have an investigation made of a ship before sailing.

Take, for instance, the business on the Pacific coast. Many have stated that the coastwise trade has been lucrative. I know that in many cases 97 per cent of the gross receipts of steamships has been expended on the upkeep and running expenses of the ships, allowing nothing for deterioration or anything that would add to the value of the vessel. This condition has prevailed for the last three or four years in the hope that prosperity might come, and in the hope that some good might come from this Congress in the interest of shipping. There are some good features in this bill which will aid and protect life at sea, but little or no encouragement is given our merchant marine.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LEVY. I regret I have not the time. I have only three minutes. I will state now that every Member of this House ought to vote against this bill, because it will not in any way aid the shipping interests of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] has 17 minutes left.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. If I mistake not, there is a determination on the part of the public in this country to assert an American doctrine in reference to the merchant marine of this country.

We have lived for a long time under the idea of doing something that will please the foreigner. We have tried to handle our ships to the satisfaction of foreign nations. We have heard the arguments about English, German, Belgian, and other ships, and how they are maintained, and that we had to align ourselves in some way to their policy. Where have we gone on that theory? What have we accomplished? We have no foreign merchant marine now. We have practically no foreign ships upon the seas. We have no ships that are ready to be turned into transports in case of war. We have none of the glory that comes from having ships in the ports of the world. We have got to change our policy. We have got to adopt an American policy.

The gentleman from my State [Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington] comes and says that over in Vancouver there are certain conditions, and he wants us to pattern our shipping laws after the laws that obtain over at Vancouver. He does not believe in applying labor conditions obtaining in Vancouver to other matters in the State of Washington, but he wants an American standard established where lime, fish, lumber, and other industries are involved. In all matters except ocean shipping he wants standards established that will be satisfactory to the American people, and he wants those standards to be applied to labor in all its various forms, except when it comes to the Shipping Trust, when it comes to vessels; then it seems that it is necessary for us, in his judgment, to so handle our shipping industry that we may be in accord with the laws of British Columbia, that we may be able to stop at their ports and compete with their labor. But I say we have got to adopt an American policy.

Reference has been made to the coastwise trade, which has been so carefully protected. But even our coastwise shipping is not a haven for American sailors. Chinese employees are found there. Chinese crews are permitted in our coastwise traffic on both oceans

We have no recognition of American standards, even in our coastwise traffic. I do not believe that the American people are going to continue to stand for that kind of thing. I believe that the action of the administration and the conditions that obtain now internationally have forced the problems of our American merchant marine to the front and that the American people are going to rise up and demand an American policy, one commensurate with the dignity of the American people and in accord with our traditions as to justice and fairness to the seamen and to the passengers on the vessels.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am anxious to vote right on this bill. I do not know a thing about it. I wish the gentleman would tell me why I should vote for it.

Mr. BRYAN. If the gentleman is a ranking minority Member, a leading Republican here on this floor and has been for all these years, and does not know anything about this bill at this day and stage of the game, I am sure I could not inform him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Men differ about it——

Mr. BRYAN. I refuse to yield further. I will not yield to ignorance on a matter of this kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You are giving the House a whole lot of ignorance now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BRYAN. There is one difference between the gentleman and myself. The gentleman admits his absolute ignorance, says he does not know about it. He has been a Member on the floor all this time. He admits his ignorance, and I do not admit mine.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They can prove it on you.

Mr. BRYAN. I decline to yield. We are spending a million dollars a month, we are spending over $12,000,000 a year in keeping up our lighthouses, our coast guards, and various agencies of the Federal Government to help ships, to make their course clear, and to help the traffic up and down our coasts. Then, we are spending something like $50,000,000 a year on rivers and harbors. We spent $400,000,000 for the Panama Canal, and are spending a million a month to operate it. But when the time comes when we want an American merchant marine, when an emergency arises and we look for our ships, we find that American capital is invested in foreign ships. We find the American Mercantile Co. owning English companies and owning American companies, and the English companies own ships and the American companies own ships, but still the proprietorship of the whole fleet and the series of subsidiary companies is down on Wall Street, in New York. And in their report just a few months ago the American Mercantile Co. stated that they had decided to transfer their two American-built vessels from the English company to the American company, because since they were American-built vessels they might take part in the coastwise trade. So they stand there as high lords of the admiralty and are able to transfer from one flag to the other, in accordance with the way that the nation to whom they may appeal will favor them. The shipping organizations stand at the threshold of parliaments and at the doors of the kings of the world, and they say to the Governments, "You want a merchant marine; you want ships to carry your troops; you want the glory of your flag maintained on the high seas; you want the advantage of having a merchant marine of your own to carry your commerce. We have the boats. We will come and enlist under your flag, provided you give us the money." And so they bluff nation after nation and make the Governments of the earth stand as bidders for their boats, and they come here to this Congress and expect the American people to give them subsidies, to pay them cash by the million, in order that we may thereby have ships to carry our commerce. But we are not going to do it. That is not going to be the American policy. A better policy will be worked out. I believe that the people are back of the present plan. I believe that the people are willing to go into the ownership of these ships and the handling and operating of them if it is necessary in order to promote the American merchant marine. We are not going to be ridiculed, we are not going to be laughed at and scoffed at by the men who own the ships, when the time comes. If we have to vote the money, we will at least have the ships to show for it. We are not going to have our sailors driven off the sea, either. We are not going to have every American standard forgotten and all the means of ocean transportation under our flag taken away from us by the hiring of cheap labor, by the hiring of Chinese and all kinds of crews. This is an emergency. It is a matter that calls for the highest and most profound patriotism. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman from Missouri prepared to conclude in one speech?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There will be two other speeches on this side.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have one other speech on this side.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before Congress for a number of years, and has received very careful attention. The conference report now before us was signed by all five of the House conferees and all five of the Senate conferees. I shall vote for the conference report without hesitation.

However, there is one matter that I have a question about. I do not know how far the passage of this bill might interfere in any way with our foreign affairs at this time or involve us in any foreign complications; but I shall vote for the conference report, assuming that if the Department of State or the President of the United States, upon examination, finds that the passage of this bill at this time might be embarrassing to our country in dealing with foreign countries under the existing conditions the President will take the responsibility, if necessary, of vetoing the bill and stating the reasons why. And if he should veto the bill because of these reasons, I do not think I would be willing to vote to pass the bill over the President's veto. I am satisfied that the administration will do everything within its reasonable power to prevent our country becoming involved with foreign countries in such complications as might lead now to war or even to misunderstandings now which might bring war in the future. And in this matter, where we have not yet been advised by the President and the State Department that there are such fears or difficulties, we must, in my judgment, leave the matter at present in the sound and wise discretion of the President. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] four minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to occupy but a moment. I want to call the attention of my colleague to one fact in regard to which he was mistaken when he said that they used Chinese crews in the coastwise trade. That is not true upon the Pacific coast nor upon the Atlantic coast. The sailors' union dominates the coastwise trade on the Pacific coast, and they do not allow Chinese sailors to be employed; and I am glad that they do not.

My colleague spoke about the transfer of business to Vancouver that now comes to Seattle. This will certainly be the result of this bill if it is enacted into law. The result of this bill will be to place all American shipping on the Pacific under the Japanese flag. It will be easier for the great Pacific mail vessels to change their flag than it will be to change their crew. That is what will occur. I am not blaming my colleague. I know that he does not think it is true. It is not an error of the heart on his part, but a lack of understanding of the situation.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman take the position that no Chinese are employed in the coastwise trade?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. None are employed that I know of as sailors, and I think I know what I am talking about.

Mr. BRYAN. Maybe the gentleman thinks he knows, just as I think I know; and I know I am right.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The evil I fear is the one spoken of by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, and that is the situation to-day is such throughout the world, and especially upon the Pacific coast, that I anticipate great danger if this bill is passed. I can not conceive of any emergency at this time in our country requiring us to take any chances of becoming involved with foreign countries. The tension to-day is such that I think that unless there is some great reason for it we ought to keep away even from the shadow of trouble. It is not a question of how close we can come to war and escape it; the thing to do in the mind of every true American citizen is how far we can keep away from trouble, and that is the reason why I am opposed to this bill at this time. I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for one minute.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, in one minute I want to simply say that I shall vote for the bill because of three things I hope the law will accomplish which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] apparently does not know. It abolishes arrest for desertion and makes the rules for shipping in our ports the same for all ships that enter, and adds to safety at sea. I had hoped that some one would discuss the bill as to these purposes of the bill and give us some real reasons for supporting it. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] apparently does not know the purposes of the bill. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I can afford to vote against this bill because of the great merit that is contained in many of its provisions. I vote for it, however, at this time with some apprehension. Like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I am willing to pass the responsibility in this instance to the President of the United States; but I will go further than the gentleman from Illinois, in that if the President vetoes it because of the dangers that may come to us by reason of its passage and enforcement, I will not vote to pass it notwithstanding his veto. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the gentleman from Kansas was here all the time, but if he was I do not feel complimented at all if he did not understand the explanation I undertook to make to the membership of the House of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have not the time nor the disposition to answer all the objections which have been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to this bill. I never can understand his logic; there is not much sequence between his premises and his conclusions.

Just how this bill is framed in the interest of the foreign sailors and shipowners I confess I can not see. I have never heard that charge made before. It is proposed by the Seamen's Union and has the unqualified support of the Federation of Labor, and I assume that these gentlemen understand the bill from the standpoint of labor better than does the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I have observed this fact: That the most of the propositions coming up in the House having the support of the Federation of Labor and the Seamen's Union are opposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Now, this bill proposes to abrogate so much of our treaties with foreign nations as provide for the arrest of sailors or seamen who have violated their civil contract of service.

Article 13 of the Constitution of the United States, section 1, provides:

> Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

And yet our Supreme Court held that the vocation of seamen was so different from that of service on land that seamen were not included in this provision of the Constitution of the United States. The Democratic national platform of 1912 contains the following plank:

> We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for greater security of life and property at sea, and we favor the repeal of all laws and the abrogation of so much of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with violation of their contracts of service. Such laws and treaties are un-American and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

The Republican platform of 1912 also contains this declaration:

We favor the speedy enactment of laws to provide that seamen shall not be compelled to endure involuntary servitude and that life and property at sea shall be safeguarded by the ample equipment of vessels with life-saving appliances and with full complements of skilled, able-bodied seamen to operate them.

Hence the provision of this bill that abrogates so much of our treaties as require us to arrest and return deserting seamen for the violation of their civil contracts of service carry out the pledges of the two platforms, and we are pledged to the abrogation of those treaties.

As declared in the Democratic platform, "such laws and treaties are un-American and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States."

The provisions of this bill which appeal to me more strongly than any others are those which provide for greater safety of life at sea, and I am very sure this bill does provide for greater safety of life at sea. On ocean-going vessels we provide that there shall be lifeboats enough for all. When the Titanic went down provision was made for only 30 per cent of those on board. This is the first time such ample provision has been made for the safety of those who go down to the sea in ships. We provide for the efficient manning of those lifeboats. We provide for the efficient manning of vessels. We do not impose any additional burdens on the vessel owners by unnecessarily increasing the crew. We provide for greater efficiency.

We have never heretofore defined by law who may be rated an able seaman. We make provision in this bill that certain service at sea shall be required to entitle a man to the rating of able seaman. Heretofore this vast power, affecting as it does so vitally the safety of life at sea, has been vested in local inspectors. They are human. They must come in contact with vast and powerful interests; and if the vessel owners have exercised an unwholesome influence in this regard—in other words, if the provisions in the matter of manning vessels and in the equipment of vessels have not been up to the high standards necessary to safety of life at sea—we should not find fault with the local inspectors. The duty has been with us all of the while to prescribe the minimum standards, and hence in this bill we are prescribing minimum standards in order that there may be greater safety of life at sea. We are taking away from the local inspectors part of the discretion heretofore vested in them under the law. I feel sure they will welcome relief to that extent from the very great responsibilities with which they are charged.

This is a good bill. It not only ameliorates the lot of the seaman but it provides a far greater means of safety of life at sea.

No one questions the desirability of applying the standards of safety provided for in this bill to vessels of the United States. If they are reasonable and should be applied to vessels under our flag, there is no good reason why they should not apply to foreign vessels entering and departing from our ports.

More than 90 per cent of our over-seas commerce is carried in foreign ships, and nearly all American citizens going to and returning from foreign countries travel in foreign ships. Why, then, should we not require foreign vessels to comply with our standards of safety?

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] expresses the fear that if this bill becomes a law it may involve us in serious difficulty with Japan. Mr. R. P. Schwerin, vice president and general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., in letters to me of recent date, expresses the opinion that if this bill becomes a law the effect will be to give Japan the monopoly of the over-seas trade on the Pacific. If that should be the effect, Japan will not have occasion to complain. But I think both of these gentlemen are wrong.

Mr. Schwerin bases his contention on the provision in section 13 of the bill, requiring not less than 75 per cent of the crew to understand any order given by the officers of the vessel. He fears that the effect of this provision will be to force the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. to discharge its Chinese crews and make it impossible to compete with the subsidized lines of Japan.

Mr. Schwerin states that wages of the European seamen out of Pacific coast ports vary in the different departments from $40 to $55 per month gold, while the wages of the oriental seamen out of oriental ports vary from $7.50 to $9 gold, and that the cost of feeding the European sailor is 55 cents per diem, while that of feeding the oriental sailor is 13 cents. There is therefore a great difference of operating vessels in the same trade where one pays oriental and the other pays European wages; but would Mr. Schwerin be compelled to discharge his Chinese crews? In his testimony before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, when this bill was under consideration in the last Congress, Mr. Schwerin stated that the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. does not have to handle its Asiatic crews through interpreters, as these men understand the sea language of the officers. Mr. J. Kruttschnitt, chairman of the executive committee of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., in a letter to me of date January 20, 1915, referring to and discussing the seamen's bill, makes the statement that the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. does not have to handle its Asiatic crews through interpreters, as these men understand the sea language of the officers and answer individually all orders, irrespective of any statements to the contrary. Hence I am at a loss to know why it would be necessary for the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. to discharge their Chinese crews. The Chinese crews on their vessels should be able to meet the requirements of the language test. This provision in section 13 is not intended to vex vessel owners, but to insure the efficiency of crews. If the wages of oriental seamen are only from $7.50 to $9 gold per month and the cost of feeding oriental sailors only 13 cents per day, and if there is any doubt of the Chinese crews on the vessels of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. being able to meet the language test, it would not involve much expense to have schools of instruction in which they might be qualified to meet the requirements of the law. As I had occasion to remark in my report on this bill, while it may be true ordinarily that the orders of the officers may be communicated to the crew through an interpreter, yet there are times and circumstances under which this would not be practicable, and it is the duty of the vessel owner to provide a crew to meet every exigency in the event of fire or collision or other circumstances resulting in panic on board ship. The officers and crew should act promptly and the crew should be under perfect discipline, and the safety of the vessel and her cargo and of the persons on board should not be imperiled by any such limitation as would be imposed by requiring orders of the officers to be conveyed to the crew through interpreters. It is not hard to imagine cases where, by casualty, the services of the interpreter might not be available when most needed.

It is the duty of the owners of steamers carrying goods and passengers not only to provide a seaworthy vessel, but they must also provide a vessel with a crew adequate in number and competent for their duty with reference to the exigencies of the intended route—not merely competent for the ordinary duties of the uneventful voyage, but for any exigency that is likely to happen.

Section 13 further provides that the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of such section. I assume that the regulations will be reasonable and will be enforced impartially and with a view solely of securing efficient crews.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] was very insistent that any irresponsible person can secure a muster of the crew and occasion vexatious delay in the departure of a vessel from port. The bill provides that the collector of customs may, upon his own motion and shall upon the sworn information of any responsible citizen of the United States setting forth that the law is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact, and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of the section. The section further provides, however, that the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs or is scheduled to depart; and further, that any person who shall knowingly make a false affidavit for such purpose shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court. The penalty prescribed should be sufficient to prevent any irresponsible person from making the affidavit, and I hardly think the gentleman's fears are well founded.

It has been insisted in some quarters that the provision of the bill with reference to lifeboats and life rafts and the manning of same should be the same on passenger vessels on our inland waters, including the Great Lakes, as the requirements on vessels on the high seas. The bill as it passed the Senate applies the same rules to passenger vessels on our lakes, bays, and sounds as are applied to ocean-going vessels in the merchant marine. The committee, after extended hearings, at which the vessel owners on our lakes, bays, and sounds were heard, as well as those who took the contrary view, were of the opinion that it would be unreasonable to apply the same rules as to lifeboat equipment on the Great Lakes and on the bays and sounds as should be applied to ocean-going vessels. The conferees take the same view. The bays and sounds are exempt from the provisions of the bill as regards lifeboat equipment. The duty will devolve upon the Steamboat-Inspection Service as heretofore to provide the equipment in the matter of lifeboats for passenger vessels on rivers, bays, and sounds and on the Great Lakes on routes less than 3 miles offshore and over waters whose depth is not sufficient to entirely submerge the vessel.

The following article was prepared by Mr. M. E. Farr, president of the Detroit Ship Building Co., and is a fair statement of the present conditions on the Great Lakes as regards safety of travel, as shown by the hearings on the bill before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and by affidavits filed with the committee by the passenger-vessel owners, all of which testimony was carefully considered by the committee in framing section 14 of the bill as it affects the Great Lakes. The article follows:

SAFETY OF TRAVEL ON THE GREAT LAKES.

FEBRUARY 4, 1915.

Coincident with the use of steel in the construction of lake passenger steamers began an era of safety in transportation on the northern Lakes. Before this time many steamers plying on the Great Lakes met with disaster, and compared with the number of passengers carried the loss of life and property was considerable. The substitution of steel for wood construction made it possible to introduce safeguards for the protection of life and property that were impossible under the practice of wooden construction. It was impossible to provide water bottoms and water-tight bulkheads in a steamer built of wood, and there was little advantage in having the fireroom, smokestack, and cabin casings of material other than wood, for the reason that the entire ship was built of this material. In case of serious accident through collision or stranding, or from fire, which generally originated in the fireroom, the galley, or lamp room, and often in the crew's quarters, there was little hope of saving the wooden vessel, and the lives of the passengers and crew were in distinct peril.

In the older type of ship the lamp room had no metal protection whatever, and in later vessels built of wood this room was covered with ordinary galvanized iron tacked on without any insulation whatever. In the earlier steamers fluid and later kerosene oil was used for illuminating purposes. The quality of either of these illuminants was not always the best, and many serious fires originated from this source.

These wooden passenger steamers carried wooden lifeboats, or rather yawls, which were seldom lowered from the davits from the beginning to the end of the season, and often when these yawls were launched they swamped immediately, for the reason that the seams had opened through the neglect of the crew to keep water in the boats to prevent shrinking. Often the davit falls were rotten, and it was not infrequent that the eyebolts would pull out through the rottenness of the yawl. The life raft was practically unknown and life boards were used instead. The life preservers generally were not of the best quality, and cases have been known where these have been weighted with metal to give them the weight required by law.

Since the advent of the use of steel in the construction of lake passenger steamers not one passenger's life has been lost, and no steamer has been lost through stranding, collision, or stress of weather. Modern passenger steamers are now equipped with water bottoms, collision and other bulkheads, steel decks, steel engine room, smokestack, cabin and other casings, which practically eliminates the danger of fire so far as the hull is concerned, and reduces to a minimum danger of loss of the steamer through collision or stress of weather.

We now find all life-saving equipment of the best and strictly in accordance with the highest practice and in conformity with Government regulations. Instead of the wooden yawl we now have not only a serviceable lifeboat built of steel and equipped with air tanks, which affords stability in case of filling, but davits, falls, and releasing devices, insuring speedy and certain launching of the life-saving equipment; also crews familiar with the handling of this equipment through frequent drills not only required by law but by other demonstrations insisted upon by Government inspectors and also the steamboat managers. Instead of kerosene oil we now have electricity for illuminating, and instead of a single fire pump we now have numerous pumps with many hydrants placed throughout the ship, together with a sprinkler system and an automatic fire-alarm system, which reduces the fire hazard to a minimum.

Above all, the manager of the modern lake steamer insists upon discipline and sobriety, and I have yet to find a master or any other important officer of a passenger steamer who not only qualifies as a nondrinker but as a most careful and level-headed navigator.

The fact that the passenger lines operating steel steamers upon the Great Lakes, carrying millions of passengers, have not lost a single passenger should be ample proof that the modern steamer is a stable and safe vehicle for water transportation, and also that these steamers are controlled by careful and efficient men, whose success and the success of their transportation companies depends entirely upon the safety of the passengers and the property intrusted to their care. No navigable waters in the world have a better record for safety in transporting passengers than the Great Lakes of North America. Great disasters have occurred in harbors and on inland rivers, but we have yet to record a serious accident which has occurred on the Great Lakes since steel has been used in the construction of lake passenger steamers.

The following tables were prepared for me by my request by Gen. Uhler, Chief of the Steamboat-Inspection Service:

Table A shows the equipment now required by the regulations of the Steamboat-Inspection Service on vessels on the Great Lakes on routes and under the conditions shown in the table.

Table B shows the lifeboat equipment and manning that would be required on the Great Lakes under the provisions of the Senate bill.

Table C shows the lifeboat equipment and manning that would be required by the conference report on vessels on the Great Lakes on routes more than 3 miles offshore, except over waters whose depth is not sufficient to entirely submerge the vessel.

I do not see any occasion to discuss the bill further at this time, as I had occasion to discuss the various provisions of the bill somewhat in detail in my report accompanying S. 136, made to the House on the 19th day of June last.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HAMILTON of New York was granted leave of absence for the remainder of the week, on account of illness.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday the Chair appointed the gentleman from Maine, Mr. MCGILLICUDDY, one of the conferees on the bill providing for an additional judge for the southern district of Georgia. Mr. MCGILLICUDDY reports that he can not serve, because he is so busy with other matters. The Chair therefore appoints the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. FLOYD, in his stead.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 12303. An act to amend section 3246 of the Revised Statute of the United States as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill H. R. 17869, entitled "An act providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. CLARK of Wyoming as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 2642, entitled "An act authorizing the President to reinstate Joseph Eliot Austin as an ensign in the United States Navy."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 19422, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up the conference report on the District appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the report, and I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman that we dispense with the reading of the report and then he may make his point of order.

Mr. MANN. We have to read either one or the other, and one is about as long as the other.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that and will protect the gentleman in his rights.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1438).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 7, 8, 14, 16, 17, 25, 27, 28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39, 43, 46, 48, 52, 58, 59, 64, 67, 68, 73, 75, 76, 77, 79, 85, 89, 99, 103, 111, 112, 118, 119, 120, and 121.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 19, 20, 29, 31, 33, 34, 38, 40, 44, 45, 47, 49, 50, 53, 55, 57, 60, 61, 66, 69, 70, 71, 72, 80, 82, 83, 84, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102, 106, 107, 108, 109, 115, 116, 123, 124, 126, 127, and 128, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$47,576"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and, on page 17 of the bill, line 7, strike out the words "force and"; and in line 8 strike out the words "fire department"; and in line 7, after the word "police," insert the following: "crossing police, park police, and fire department"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For constructing market buildings on the site of the present municipal fish wharf and market, including refrigerating and cold-storage plant, which shall be equipped for the accommodation of such retail business as may obtain at that point and shall serve as the wholesale receiving and distributing point for marine and other products to be retailed elsewhere in the District, within a limit of cost of $185,000, which is hereby fixed, $125,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$29,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$118,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$160,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$49,015"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33 of the bill, line 6, strike out "$124,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$119,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$27,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter all pupils whose parents are employed officially or otherwise in the District of Columbia shall be admitted and taught free of charge in the schools of said District, and hereafter the members of the board of education shall be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$48,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Gallinger Hospital: Toward the construction and equipment of the Gallinger Hospital, including grading of the site, $150,000, and the limit of cost of the construction of said hospital and accessory buildings, and equipment, is hereby fixed at $1,000,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$60,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$96,080"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and, on page 73 of the bill, in line 4, strike out the following: "and of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

"ANACOSTIA RIVER FLATS.

"For continuing the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, to be expended for the purposes and under the conditions specified in the item for this improvement contained in the 'District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915,' $100,000; and authority is hereby granted to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, to enter into a contract or contracts for and on account of said work in an amount not exceeding $100,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 51, and 105.

No. 128: Inserts the authority, proposed by the Senate, for the payment of "engineering and other" expenses from the "miscellaneous trust fund" appropriation account.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the following amendments of the Senate:

No. 1: Relating to the proportion of appropriations to be paid, respectively, from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia.

No. 51: Relating to the appropriation of $18,000 for the construction of a new public convenience station at the intersection of Fifteenth Street and Maryland Avenue and H Street NE.

No. 105: Relating to the appropriation of $50,000 for the construction of a new building for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital.

ROBERT N. PAGE,
T. U. SISSON,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the language in line 3, page 3, of the report, after the word "District":

And hereafter members of the Board of Education shall be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires to discuss it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I would like to have the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that the gentleman's point of order is well taken, but I want to say to the House in that connection—and I do not know whether it will affect the gentleman's attitude or not—that the members of the school board for the District of Columbia under existing law, and for that reason I am frank to say I think the gentleman's point of order is well taken, are appointed by the members of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Just why this was done a few gentlemen on the floor know possibly better than I do, and I shall not enter into a discussion of the reasons leading up to the enactment of that law. But I do know the results that have followed that legislation and this method of appointing the members of the school board of the District of Columbia. It removes the members of the school board absolutely from under any control or supervision of the governing board of the District, the commissioners. The members of the school board have complete control over the management of the schools of the District of Columbia. The members of the Board of Commissioners are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. All of this has resulted in such a condition that no committee of this House, in spite of the most diligent efforts, has been able for three years to receive any report from this board of education relating to school questions, and your conference committee on the part of the House, meeting with the approbation of the conferees on the part of the Senate, believe that the only way the schools could be brought under the supervision of the Congress was to have the members of the board appointed by the Commissioners of the District, who have to deal with the Congress. For that reason, believing that it was in the interest of good administration of the schools of the District and good administration otherwise, the conferees have placed this in their report, fully conscious of the fact that it might be made the subject of a point of order, and I very much hope that the gentleman from Illinois, who I know has at heart the good of the school system of the city of Washington, will not insist upon his point of order and that this change may be made in the law so that the school system of the District may be more efficiently administered and that they may be accountable to somebody, and that there will be some way in which to reach them.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I recollect very well when the transfer of the power was made from the District Commissioners to the Supreme Court of the District to make these appointments. It so happened that the then District Commissioners were appointed by a Republican President, and this change was made in the form of a trade with one or two Democratic Members of the House, members of the Committee on Appropriations, who believed that they had influence enough with the judges who were to make the appointments not to appoint men of a certain race.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Were not the judges of the Supreme Court also appointed by a Republican President?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but wait. It so happened that the agreement that was had was had with a court totally different from the court which was finally given power in the bill, and they did not keep what was said to be an agreement, because they did not understand anything about the agreement. But it now happens that the District Commissioners are men who would probably carry out the agreement that was supposed to have been entered into at that time, if they had the power to make the appointment. I believe that the members of the board of education ought not to be in politics, either directly or indirectly, and that they ought not to be appointed by any political power, and that the appointments made as they are now keep them further away from politics than they could be kept if they should happen by any chance to be appointed by the District Commissioners. Hence, believing that the power rests where it should and where it is giving the best results, I feel constrained to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Has the gentleman thought of this phase of the present law? It was suggested to me by one of the members of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia—and in that connection I want to say that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are not, so far as I know, in favor of this legislation on this conference report; they have never said so to me if they are—but several members of the supreme bench in the District of Columbia have suggested that the matter is none of their business as a court, and they doubted seriously whether or not that Congress should place this obligation upon them.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that in the State from which I come the legislature grants the power to circuit judges of our State to appoint the members of park commissions and boards of that character except one, and this board is appointed by the governor of the State, and we find that the men who are appointed by the courts are absolutely out of politics, and in my judgment the management of the parks under their jurisdiction is superior to the management of the parks where the commissioners are appointed as a result of politics, and we are waiting for the day to come when every appointment of the class that I have described will be made by the courts.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I could convince the gentleman privately that instead of taking the appointment by these commissioners out of politics, by placing the appointment in the hands of the Supreme Court they are kept in politics.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I can not understand how a man, as a judge appointed for life, would allow himself to be influenced by politics, but I can understand how a man appointed to a political job, holding that job during the administration that appointed him, might and probably would be affected by politics.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute or two?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course I have not taken any part on the floor on the point of order, but I want to straighten out the historical facts. The truth about this transfer of the power to appoint the school board from one set of men to another was simply one feature in the fight for the reorganization of the whole school system of the District of Columbia. The history of the transaction is that a boy, 13 years old, was the cause of that fight. My son came to me one night, said that two of his teachers wanted to come and see me, and he wanted me to treat them well. You get very tired of these people legging around here sometimes, and you grow somewhat cross with them sometimes, and they frequently have no claim whatever to any consideration. So I told him I would see them. The two women came down the next night. They had a real grievance, and they had it worked out with the facts and figures. They demonstrated that the whole school system of this District was top-heavy; that the upper ones, these high ones anyway, were getting more pay in proportion than the ones below. So I participated in the debate next day, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Gardner, I think, was controlling the thing, or Mr. McCleary——

Mr. MADDEN. It was Mr. Morrell, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Anyhow, it came so we were about to get what we wanted, and then finally he promised me that if I would withdraw the opposition to the bill the next year they would fix it somewhat on the basis that Mr. Cochran, of New York, Mr. GOULDEN, and myself wanted it fixed. I do not think there was a particle of politics in it. The commissioners were Republicans, those judges were Republicans, and everybody was tired of that old school board and wanted to get rid of it. We wanted to get rid of it, but we thought these commissioners would reappoint that school board.

And while I never liked to give this power to the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and thought it was ultra vires and clear out of their line of business, we could not think of anybody else on whom to confer the power. There was no politics in it. It was simply for the good of the community.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The result has been, if the gentleman will permit me, whatever may have been the intention—and, of course, the Speaker knows the facts that he has related—to absolutely remove the school system of the District of Columbia from the control of the Congress of the United States. And it will be so as long as they owe their appointment to a body that is appointed for life and is itself not answerable to the Congress of the United States. And if the gentleman wants to continue the former condition of affairs of the District of Columbia, he is proceeding now to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very sorry that I can not agree with my friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], but I do not see it as he does.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield for a moment. I find in going back to April 23, 1906, that what the Speaker says is absolutely correct. And, being recently from New York City, where I had served as a commissioner of education, when I landed here the teachers and others interested in school matters immediately secured my attention in the matter of improvement of the public schools. In connection with our late lamented colleague, Mr. Foster of Vermont, I undertook the contract. Both of us introduced bills. I will never again undertake another like it, for it took much of my time during four years following. However, the matter came up and the greatest opposition we had to relieving the school system of the top-heaviness to which the Speaker has alluded were the District Commissioners, and we determined to put them out of it so far as the schools were concerned. And Mr. Foster offered the amendment that took the power away from the Board of Commissioners and put it into the hands of the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and we carried it. There was not a bit of politics in it at the time, because Mr. Foster was a very ardent Republican, and, I hope, I was an equally ardent Democrat. I do not think it was a mistake then; not a bit of it; but I believe, with the present Board of Commissioners, a new set of public officials, and with the great importance of the school system, greatly improved the last eight years, we might very properly, I think, go back to the old system of allowing the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make the appointments, especially as the judges of the district wish to be relieved of the responsibilities.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, your conferees agreed to this item in the bill with this amendment; and if it had not been for the amendment I think I know what I say when I tell you I would not have agreed to the present amendment of the Senate. The language to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes objection is the language that we were desirous of having in the bill. Now, I think if you gentlemen were on the Appropriations Committee and on this subcommittee you would feel about it like the conferees of the House and the Senate feel. I do not believe that any man who knows the conferees of the Senate would believe that they would agree to anything that was not for, as they thought, the good of the school system of this District. Now, so far as your House conferees were concerned, I feel that I speak the sentiment of all of them when I say to you that we have at heart as much as the three Senators the good of the schools of the District. But we do not feel it is proper that we should lose absolute control of the school system of the District of Columbia, as we have done. As was explained to the House by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], as chairman of the conferees on the part of the House, we know nothing about how this money is expended. We can get no report. No report has been made to us for three years, and the judges do not feel it is their duty to do it. They feel they have enough of other duties to perform without devoting their time and attention to the internal plans of the public schools of this District. The result is that the trustees appointed by them have their own way. They are appointed by the judges; and the judges, having all their time, as they say, taken up, can not devote all their attention to the public schools, and therefore they leave it entirely in the hands of the trustees whom they appoint, and the trustees decline to make a report to the District Commissioners, who are appointed and under the control of Congress, and from whom we get no report. And the Senate as well as the House agrees that this is a good amendment.

I want to say this to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that my understanding of the parliamentary status is that if your point of order is sustained the whole conference report goes out. Is that true, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. SISSON. Now, what I want is to be sure that the whole item goes out, and I presume that, with the whole conference report, will go out, and that will leave the bill just where it was when it went into conference, with your conferees' hands untied in reference to the item itself to which we agree with this amendment. And if the Chair sustains the gentleman's point of order, my understanding is that the House has lost nothing so far as the first part of the item is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to yield first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] one minute.

Mr. PLATT. I want to read, Mr. Speaker, the last speech made by my colleague, Mr. Payne, in this House on the 10th of December, the day of his death. It consisted of about 15 lines, in which he said:

> Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I am very much interested in his discussion of this question, and also his proposition to investigate it. I remember very well when this change was made, during a wave of reform that passed over the House. Nothing could stop it, because some gentlemen had some difficulty with the members of the old school board as it then existed, and it was claimed that everything was to be happy and lovely if they could get these appointments made by the supreme court. It seemed to me at the time that the members of the Supreme Court of the District were the last persons in the world to make these appointments, and while some of us fought it and voted against it, yet the reform, so called, prevailed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] wants a minute.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon this point of order, because it throws out the entire amendment. I am particularly interested in this amendment, because it provides that the children living in my State and around the District may come here and attend the public schools.

It is an injustice that children of parents working in the District of Columbia but living in Maryland should be debarred from a schooling in Washington without paying a tuition fee therefor. The parents of most of the children affected by that change have gone on the outskirts of the District for the pure air and open surroundings of the country, where they may have a few chickens and a small vegetable garden, acquire a vote, and buy a home at a price within their reach. I deny that the schooling of these children works a hardship upon the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. One-half the cost of maintaining the District schools is borne by the National Government. As offsetting the other half, I would recall that the trade of the great majority of these people is almost exclusively with Washington merchants. Indeed, so closely identified are these people with the social and business interests of Washington that they feel themselves nearly as much residents of the District as of Maryland. Washington is the center of their interests. They read its papers, attend its churches and theaters, and welcome their Washington friends into Maryland, who make our State, particularly during the summer, a pleasure ground. We do not believe the people of Washington think the schooling of these children much of an injustice to them.

Mr. MADDEN. This would not discriminate against them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This would throw out the entire amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. It leaves it open for the conferees to fix that part of it, though.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know that; but if he would not insist on the point of order at this time, that vexatious question would be closed and children would be able to come into the District and attend school when their parents are officially or otherwise employed in the District.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] is mistaken about the effect. It is this part that the conferees put in.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think I understand about that, Mr. Speaker, but if the gentleman from Illinois insists on the point of order, the entire conference report goes out.

The SPEAKER. Of course it does. The whole thing goes back to the conferees.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am aware of that; but the session is getting very short, and I would like to see this thing closed up now, so that these children will be provided for whenever their parents are officially or otherwise employed in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman from Maryland will possess his soul in patience, the matter will be properly taken care of. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, there are three amendments that are still in dispute in this report. I would like to have them disposed of before this matter goes back to conference.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want to make a motion?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes. I move that the House further disagree to all the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's motion is to further insist upon disagreement. That is a privileged motion.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I move, Mr. Speaker, to further insist.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from North Carolina. Three of the amendments go back in disagreement. We might just as well reserve those and settle them if they can be settled at this time.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is possible to settle the half-and-half proposition at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We might find out.

Mr. MANN. The House at this time will certainly insist upon its disagreement. It is not yet near enough to the end of the session to yield. Of course, we will get there after a while.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that I would like to move to concur in one of these items, although I do not wish to proceed otherwise than as the gentleman desires.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 1, one of the three amendments in disagreement on the report that was filed and which has been disagreed to by a point of order, namely, amendment No. 1, is known as the Johnson amendment, and affects the proportion of the amount paid by the National Government for the support of the District of Columbia. That is in disagreement between the conferees. If anybody has any motion to make other than the one I have made, to insist upon a disagreement, he has opportunity now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the managers on the part of the House be instructed not to agree to the amendment No. 1.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not in order now. That motion is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To instruct the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My motion, Mr. Speaker, was that the managers on the part of the House be instructed not to agree to Senate amendment numbered 1.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I would like to ask that the amendment in reference to the $50,000 item for the hospital be concurred in.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is amendment numbered 105, if the gentleman wants to make that motion.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. What motion?

Mr. LINTHICUM. That amendment No. 105, in reference to the $50,000 for the Emergency Hospital here in Washington, be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] moves to concur in amendment numbered 105.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see if we can reach an agreement as to the length of time for debate on this amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to have five minutes on this.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not want more than five minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Say, 25 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this motion close in 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on amendment 105 close in 35 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this item, carrying an appropriation of $50,000 for the purpose of constructing or helping to complete the Emergency Hospital in the District of Columbia, was placed in the bill in the Senate. It has never been considered in the House, for the reason that the District Commissioners have never estimated for it, and it has never been presented to the House Committee on Appropriations. A year ago it was inserted in the bill in the Senate and went out in conference. At this time we find it again in the bill making appropriations for the support of the District of Columbia, inserted therein by the Senate.

The history of this attempted piece of legislation is this: The Emergency Hospital, a private corporation, over which the Government has absolutely no control, is located at the present time on Fifteenth Street in a block of buildings that was condemned by the Government. Under the condemnation proceedings this corporation was paid $80,000 for their property. I am not here to say whether that was less than it was worth or more than it was worth, but gentlemen who are familiar with prices placed on property under condemnation proceedings when the Government is the purchaser may draw their own conclusions. It certainly was enough for this property. In addition to that, and since that time, by an amendment similar to this, an appropriation was made by Congress of $50,000, a gift to a private corporation, for the construction of this Emergency Hospital.

My understanding is that they have in course of construction and practically now completed a hospital located somewhere beyond the War and Navy Department Building. They have consumed the $80,000 that was paid them for their old property, together with $50,000, a contribution that was made by the Government, and approximately $100,000 raised by private citizens in the city of Washington, making in all $225,000 or $230,000. The building is practically completed, but it lacks equipment.

I have to say to the House only this, that it is a private corporation. It is not, as I understand, operated for profit; but at the same time we are asked in this amendment to go into the Treasury of the United States and donate $50,000 for the construction of a hospital over which the Government has no control.

Now, I have no feeling against this hospital, and it has served a magnificently useful purpose in this city. There is no question about that, but it is a matter of policy about which I am talking. I do not believe it is good policy for the Government of the United States to contribute money for the erection or equipment of an institution over which it has and can have absolutely no control. I do not believe that is the proper governmental policy. For that reason I have all the while opposed this appropriation which has been placed in the bill by an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman says the Government has and can have absolutely no control over this hospital. Why is it that Congress can not make such regulatory provisions as in the wisdom of Congress may seem necessary?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Congress can, but Congress will not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Congress can, however. It has the power to regulate such institutions. It can regulate any hospital or eleemosynary institution.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. But it would have to amend the charter that has already been granted to this institution.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But it could do that.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It could do it, of course, but I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that whenever you undertake to do things of that kind you meet with obstacles which you can not overcome.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Just one minute more. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. I rise for information. Has the municipality any hospital that performs similar service to that performed by this Emergency Hospital?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, the municipality practically has no hospital. I have another item in this bill in which I am trying to get a hospital for the municipality, and that proposition meets with objection on the floor of this House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it perform similar work?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not know that it would. It might, of course, be made to do it, but it is not so contemplated.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I very seldom make a speech on an item in an appropriation bill, and I would not call this question to the attention of the House if I did not consider it a very meritorious and a very important matter.

The Emergency Hospital has been conducted for a good many years by an association composed largely of the good women of this District, and it has rendered efficient service to the people of the District of Columbia and the strangers within its gates.

Not because of any desire upon the part of the people who conduct this hospital, but because the Government wanted to acquire the block in which it was located, the property was condemned and a price fixed upon it, and it must be torn down. The Government paid $80,000 for the property. It is to be assumed that they got what it was worth and got no more.

The old hospital was not large enough for their business and to properly take care of their patients. They had $80,000. They raised $100,000 themselves and the Government donated to them $50,000 to complete a new building for this great charity. It is a beautiful building, well constructed, up to date in every way, an ornament to the city of Washington. They have reached a point where the building is nearly completed, but they have no money for equipment. I am informed that the ladies in charge of this hospital have arranged to raise another $100,000 themselves for the equipment and installation of this hospital, but that is as far as they can go, and it will take $150,000 to put this hospital on its feet and enable it to render the service that is necessary to the people of this District.

Now, I want to say to the House that I think often the city of Washington is far behind other cities in the donations of its own people to charitable and other institutions, but that is not the case here. The gentleman from North Carolina says we are going to take this money out of the Treasury of the United States. This is not the Government of the United States paying this $50,000. It is the government of the District of Columbia. It is true that under the arrangement with the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States some of that money actually does come out of the Treasury of the United States, but that is not the proposition. This is an effort to secure an appropriation from the District of Columbia for a great charitable purpose, not only for the people of the District but for any strangers who may be within the District and may here meet with unforeseen accidents. It may be a citizen who lives in the District who meets with an accident and is carried to this hospital for immediate relief, or it may be my child or your child that is knocked down by a street car or injured anywhere in this great District and carried to this emergency hospital for immediate relief to save its life or its health.

The Government of the United States is about to close the present hospital because it has condemned the property on which it is located, and this District of Columbia is now asked to contribute out of its public funds a portion of the money that private charity has contributed to take care of the wounded and unfortunate. As a matter of fact, it might be well if the District of Columbia paid every dollar for the maintenance of this Emergency Hospital that will be conducted and run by private charity in the future; but here you are facing an emergency. This session of Congress is about to close. The credit of these good women is exhausted when they have raised an additional $100,000 to commence the operation of this new hospital. They must have that relief, and they are asking that the District of Columbia out of its public funds contribute one-half of what they are themselves prepared to contribute. Why, I hardly know of a city in this country where the city government is not willing to contribute to good charities in emergencies of this kind. They do in my city, and I have no doubt they do in your cities. Why should we attempt to treat the people of the District of Columbia, because they may be orphan children in the Government of the United States, in a different way from that in which our own people act at home? I am not in favor of increasing appropriations, and I have made an earnest effort to hold them down; but this is a governmental necessity. There is no greater charity that I know of, when a stricken man falls by the wayside, his friends not about him, his home perhaps a thousand miles away, than to have an ambulance come to his assistance and, whether he has a dollar or whether he has not, carry him to a place where his life may be saved and he may be nursed back to health and happiness for his family.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman lose sight of the fact that there are several other very finely equipped hospitals in the District that would take these people, and that we have spent nearly $2,000,000 in the construction of them?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They do not do this emergency work. They are not equipped for this emergency work at this time. And why ought you to make this appropriation? This is a public service. It is a public duty; and I say to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], chairman of this great committee having in charge the appropriations for the District of Columbia, carrying the purse strings of the District in his hand, he owes a real responsibility to these people to see that their health and their lives receive proper protection in the governmental utilities of this District.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Now, if the gentleman will permit, these people have had at their command more than $250,000 for the construction of a hospital, and they constructed one that cost $400,000. What was the necessity for it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I admit that they have built a very handsome and beautiful building. It is possible that in the immediate future a smaller building might have answered the purpose, but, building for the future, I do not think they have built this hospital one foot too large. The real economy was in constructing a building that may last and serve these people for generations yet to come, and they have built on that plan. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZHENRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. FITZHENRY. If this appropriation of $50,000 is made, what effect will it have on the necessity for the Gallinger Hospital?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know that that has anything to do with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOON). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina makes his principal objection that this is a private corporation. I do not see that that enters into it to any great extent, because this private corporation does not do private work alone, but public work, and answers a public necessity. Here is an institution run by these ladies who are doing what it costs the Government perhaps two or three times as much to do. By keeping up the hospital and making this appropriation we are getting the benefit of the services of any number of women interested in charitable work. We are getting the benefit of a magnificent hospital, and they are helping to keep it up. They have shown their good faith in these transactions by raising $100,000 before they built this new hospital. They put every dollar they received from their property into the building, and now they come and ask us to appropriate $50,000 toward finishing and equipping it.

I have always found in my experience that when the Government or a State tries to do a work of charity in this line it costs a great deal of money, but when you can get an institution doing a charitable work in which women and men are interested, themselves raising the money, then the Government gets a substantial benefit.

If we refuse this appropriation, if they do not have the hospital, the Government would have to undertake the work itself, and nobody can argue for a moment that the Government could do this work for as little money as these people are asking for in this appropriation. I say it is a great public necessity. Washington must have an emergency hospital, and it seems to me that we are getting off in the cheapest manner possible.

It is true that they have a magnificent building, but as the gentleman from Alabama stated, it is more economical in the long run to put up a building equaling the necessities for the future than it would be to wait until the future necessities arrive and endeavor to enlarge.

I am strongly in favor of the appropriation, which follows the absolute necessities of an emergency hospital, and this hospital is designed to do this kind of work, look out for emergency cases throughout the District, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I hope this amendment appropriating $50,000 toward the Emergency Hospital building will receive the favorable action of the House. I do not think the objections urged that it is an appropriation for a private institution are tenable in this case. There are precedents for it regarding this very hospital. Congress has appropriated $50,000 toward the new building now nearing completion and has appropriated in former years for the construction of the building which it is now occupying. It is one of the important institutions of the city, in that it is patronized almost exclusively by emergency cases. Its central location and the effective work that it has done in giving attention to emergency cases entitles it to the favorable consideration of the Congress, which is responsible for appropriations for the District.

The building is substantially completed and needs equipment, and $50,000 is absolutely necessary for that purpose. The citizens of the District have been exceedingly liberal in their subscriptions to the extent of $120,000, and to that has been added $50,000 appropriated heretofore by Congress, plus $100,000 which has been borrowed and secured upon the property.

If there should be unusual delay, and there would be unless Congress granted the appropriation, not only would the work of the institution be impaired, but they would be required to pay continuous interest on the loan of $100,000. So in view of the conditions, in view of the very active and zealous labors of the committee of ladies of the District, in view of the importance of the hospital to the District, the merit it has established as the only institution of its kind, I think it is entitled to the favorable consideration of this House, and the appropriation ought to be made, and I hope the membership will give it their favorable support.

Mr. THACHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I will.

Mr. THACHER. Is it not true, as the gentleman from Alabama says, that this is the only hospital equipped for emergency service in the city?

Mr. SMALL. I so understand.

Mr. THACHER. And is it not a fact that a few days ago a man fell on the steps of the Capitol, breaking his leg in two or three places, and was taken down to the hospital?

Mr. SMALL. That is true, and those accidents occur not only every day but, often, many times a day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to visit the hospital a few days ago, and the impression made upon me was decidedly unfavorable. I think they labor under great difficulties in maintaining proper sanitation of the building with the handicap under which they work. Of course, they must vacate the building very soon—whenever the Government shall determine to raze the building and take possession of the property. But, regardless of that, they ought to be permitted to vacate this insufficient and insanitary building at the earliest opportunity, and this appropriation is the one desideratum for that end. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding further I desire to state that I made a miscalculation in respect to the time on this amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time on this amendment be extended for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] expressed so fully and so well the opinions I hold upon this subject that I feel that it is hardly necessary for me to do anything except to show my interest. There is no question about the need for this hospital. It is admitted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] that we need this hospital. There is no other hospital that does this work. The gentleman himself says that if the municipal hospital shall be appropriated for, that does not provide for emergency work. Emergency work is the most pressing and essential of all, and yet this is the only hospital in the city that provides for it. Therefore, obviously there must be such a hospital. And it ought to be situated like this, in the middle of the city, and not like all the other hospitals, in the outskirts. It is very commendable, I think, and speaks in favor of this appropriation that there has already been collected by the citizens of the District of Columbia within the last year $100,000 for this purpose.

Mr. SMALL. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. GILLETT. We must remember that Washington differs very much from other cities. It is not a business city. There are no great factories here, where people get rich and can liberally contribute to such institutions. The great mass of the people in the city of Washington are Government employees with small incomes, and it is only from large incomes that such an institution as this can be erected. We know that the rich people who live in Washington who can contribute generously are people who are here for a short time, who have other homes and other hospitals and interests there, and I think it is distinctly creditable to the people of the city of Washington that they have raised so much money and contemplate raising as much more. They ought to be encouraged. The gentleman says that we are contributing from our funds. We have done that for hospitals in this city year after year. Why should we not do it for this?

The very argument the gentleman makes against it is, to my mind, one of the strongest arguments in its favor. He says the Government has no control. I think that is an argument for this, because I believe the people charitably disposed, the unselfish men and women, who have given their money and are daily giving their time to the support and management of this hospital will manage it in an infinitely better way than any Government control we can have. I thoroughly favor the principle of contributing to private hospitals rather than undertaking to run them. I believe in this particular case it is contributing to an object which is essentially proper, and I hope the appropriation will be given.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If private individuals can operate this hospital better than Government officials can, why not farm it all out to private individuals?

Mr. GILLETT. We have been doing that for a number of years.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Not only in hospital work, but in other things.

Mr. GILLETT. That is what we have been doing for hospitals. The gentleman does not make this distinction that the people of Washington are giving vastly more to this hospital than the Government.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that respect.

Mr. GILLETT. They have given $120,000, and the Government has only given $100,000, and they are going to give $100,000 more, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says, and you ought to remember that this system on which we have been operating hospitals in this District year after year is the one on which we expect to operate for some time to come under the current law. I do not see why this hospital should be discriminated against.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman agreed to yield me a little longer time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. But other gentlemen have consumed the time, and the proponents of this motion have had three-fourths of the time. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. That shows the merits of our contention. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those in this House who have consistently voted economically when it came to appropriating money for the District of Columbia, not because I have not always felt a pride in the city of Washington, such a pride as every American should feel in the Capital City of the Nation, but because I have been more absorbed in the affairs of my own district and have been trying so hard to get appropriations needed for my district and looking after its interest. Of course my position, candidly expressed, is but the position of the great majority of the Members of the House. But this appropriation appeals to me. It appeals to me because I think it is in the interest of humanity. It is right; it is just. I do not take much stock in the contention that this is an appropriation for a private corporation and that for that reason we ought not to make the appropriation. While the Government, as a rule, should not appropriate money gratuitously out of the Treasury nor donate to private institutions, there are, I think, exceptions to the general rule. We have no authority of law for appropriating money out of the Treasury for flood sufferers or fire sufferers or cyclone sufferers, but we do it. We have no authority of law for appropriating money out of the Treasury for private institutions, but we ought to look beyond the technical rule to ascertain for what purposes the appropriations are to be expended. This appropriation is one of the exceptions, in my opinion. While this is a private institution, it is doing a public service. It is taking care of the poor and needy as well as the rich. It is caring for your constituents and mine when visiting in this city and are stricken by disease or accident.

Under the contract that the Government has with the Board of Charities, we appropriate only $17,000 yearly for the service it renders. The contract with this Emergency Hospital only allows $1.20 a person for taking care of these sick and destitude people, and the facts are that it costs the hospital $2.20 a day to take care of them. They are doing a great and deserving service, and this hospital and one other hospital in the District are the only hospitals in the city that maintain a public ambulance service.

Now, as to the Government donating this money to a private corporation, and the probability of losing it in the future, I find that in volume 27, United States Statutes, at page 552, there appears a statute that says that where the Government makes an appropriation for the purchase of real estate or buildings for a charitable institution like this, and in event that institution should go out of business or dissolve, the Government shall maintain a lien upon all of its property and can enforce that lien for the amount that the Government has expended. I read from that statute:

> And all sums of money herein appropriated, or which may hereafter be appropriated and expended in aid of the purchase of real estate for charitable or reformatory institutions in the District of Columbia, or for buildings or for permanent improvements to buildings thereon, shall (subject to any trust deed, mortgage, or other security or incumbrance existing on such property at the time of its purchase, or created at the time of its purchase) be a lien upon such property, and in case of the dissolution of any such corporation owning such property, or in case of the disposal of such property by such corporation, entitle the United States to reimbursement in proportion to any other contributions or funds used for such purposes; and the acceptance by any such corporation of any sum of money appropriated for the foregoing purposes shall be an acceptance of and agreement to this provision.

Therefore I submit that here is an institution that is operated not for private gain. They have never declared a dividend during its existence. It is in the interest of the public. It has performed a great service to strangers and the people of the District of Columbia, and if it should ever be dissolved or go out of existence the Government could, if it should so desire, come in and take the buildings for the money that we here appropriate.

I submit further, Mr. Speaker, in view of the great service it is rendering all classes, in view of the special kind of work it is doing for the people, in view of its necessary and indispensable character, we should not hesitate to make this appropriation. The facts are that for the past 10 years 259,000 emergency patients were taken care of by this Emergency Hospital, and that was at a time when the hospital was not so large or so commodious as it will be when this apropriation is made. Now, these good ladies have raised $120,000 by public subscription. They have arranged to borrow $100,000 more. The Government came in and took the property that it formerly possessed. It was not particularly anxious to give up the hospital site it formerly maintained, but the Government forced them to give it up. A jury tried the question of compensation and awarded $90,000 for their old site and building. Unless we grant this appropriation they can not go on and render the service to the public it is proposed to render, and I submit that what we ought to do is to concur in the Senate amendment, so that this hospital will be assured and can soon begin to render to the needy and sick such service as they might need. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in two minutes I can not enter upon any discussion of the pending motion, but will merely attempt to state my attitude. I am opposed to the Senate amendment. I am surprised at the number of gentlemen who have stood on the floor here to-day and urged Congress to take from the Public Treasury another $50,000 and donate it to this Emergency Hospital enterprise. There is no doubt in my mind that it is a great institution, but there are thousands of great institutions that no gentleman here can justify himself in using public money to promote or to preserve. I believe the time has come, and if the remarks I have heard from the distinguished leader of this House recently are true, I believe the time has come when we ought to cease yielding to every importunity and using public money, drawn from the taxpayers of this land, for private interest, however meritorious that interest may be. Therefore I am opposed to the Senate amendment, and shall vote to strike it from the bill.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time—10 minutes, or whatever it is—to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in stating that this statute created a lien upon the property where the Federal Government contributed to an institution, is not absolutely correct. Where the Government buys the real estate, and where the appropriation on its face states that it is made for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a building, then the lien attaches. This appropriation is for the purpose of furnishing the building and not for the purpose of purchasing land nor for the purpose of constructing a building, and in order that we may retain a lien it must state on the face of the appropriation the purpose for which it is made to be included in this statute.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield just for one moment?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman read the statute or just a part of it to see whether or not his contention is correct?

Mr. SISSON. I have not the time to read the statute——

Mr. HARRISON. It is a very short statute.

Mr. SISSON. It would take a little time; there are 12 or 15 lines in it. But, in brief, the statute is that it must be an appropriation for real estate. That is it, in a word. There is no question about that. Now, it has been stated also by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that there is no hospital to which you can carry a man when injured. There are two—the Providence and the Garfield Hospitals——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I hope the gentleman will not misquote me. I did not say there is no hospital to which a man could be carried, but I said there was no hospital equipped for this emergency work.

Mr. SISSON. These hospitals are equipped with all the necessary instruments and necessary surgeons to take care of emergency cases. Now, there is no question about that, gentlemen, but this Emergency Hospital will be devoted solely to that purpose. However, the Garfield Hospital will take emergency cases, and so will Providence Hospital; and I have heard of no complaint about the treatment which the emergency cases get. But the serious objection to this is when certain people become interested in charitable work in the District of Columbia they realize that when they shall put their hands to the wheel, when they shall undertake a proposition, extensive and costly, that if they shall fall down on the proposition that they may come to Congress. They are constantly here. I am not blaming them for their interest, but I blame men for yielding to these demands, because the people distant from the Treasury can not—and I expect it is extremely fortunate for the Treasury—make these demands upon it; but we have appropriated nearly $2,000,000—one million nine hundred and odd thousand dollars—to the construction of Providence and Garfield Hospitals, the two of them together. Now, we have paid something like $100,000 to private institutions, all told, carried in all these bills, for these private institutions, and I am opposed to that policy. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] absolutely, that the Federal Government should divorce itself from all the sectarian institutions to which they are now appropriating money; that the Government ought to divorce itself from these private institutions; but I do not agree with the doctrine that it is well to appropriate money for private institutions where you can not control the admission of inmates; where you can not control what shall become of the fund after it gets into their hands; where you have no one whom you can hold accountable for it; but, above all things, what we need in the District of Columbia is a hospital under the control of Congress, under the control of men appointed through and by Congress, and under the laws of the Government. There is not a man on your subcommittee, there is not a man, so far as I know, on the Committee on Appropriations, I doubt whether there is one in this House, who would not be more than glad to see proper hospital facilities here. Now, this hospital is to receive $50,000. It was not contemplated at the time this charter was granted, it was not contemplated at the time the building was constructed, but when they asked Congress for the first $50,000, after Congress bought the lot for $80,000, or whatever it did pay for it, it was thought that the $50,000 would be enough, with what they would be able to raise, to build and equip this hospital.

Now, after several years have elapsed they have undertaken a greater proposition than they started out with originally, or it is costing a great deal more. Now they are asking Congress to give them, in addition to what they have already granted them, for the purpose of furnishing this hospital, $50,000. Now, I stated that if this $50,000 is contributed to the furniture under this statute there can be no lien upon the property. If this property was a part of the real estate, and this purchase price was a part of the $50,000, and the amount of this $50,000 went into the real estate or into the building, then you would have a lien on the property to that extent and that alone.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The provision especially states:

Toward the construction of a new building for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, erected on the site purchased and owned by said hospital, $50,000.

It especially states it conforms to the statute.

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, the language which the gentleman reads is the language originally carried in the bill. But the fact is, and the testimony shows, this was for the purpose of equipping the building. The building is about completed already.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As a matter of fact, I think it is necessary to spend a large portion of this money for equipment, but the elevators are not finished and parts of the building are not finished. But that is not the purpose for which I rose. My friend is arguing this question from the standpoint of a lien. If you think this is a good charity and ought to be extended, you do not want any lien in order to get your money back.

Mr. SISSON. In other words, when a government shall put its money into one of these institutions and the private corporation should dissolve, I do not want the assets of the institution divided up among private individuals when the Federal Government has put $100,000 into the building of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This will never dissolve.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether it will or not or do you.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If you gave $50,000 to a good charity, would you want your money back?

Mr. SISSON. The great trouble is that everybody in the District now is expecting the Federal Government to respond in good charities, where there are a hundred magnificent charities the Government could perform to-day in the District of Columbia and millions of them throughout the United States. There are millions of people asking for bread, and there are millions of people without homes; there are millions of people living in tenement houses. Great cities are filled with tenement houses, and these people need homes. In God's name, if you put it on that ground, if the Federal Treasury should respond to all good charities, where would it end?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman——

Mr. SISSON. I can not yield any further.

I do not deny that if you build hospitals, you are doing a great work; but the people who undertake to perform a charity and expect credit for the charity have the duty placed upon them to care for it. Now, they already have a mortgage on this building. And I want to state further in reference to your lien, that the statute also provides that all mortgages that may be on the property at the time shall be a preferred lien on it, and if this mortgage is not paid the Government would lose the $100,000 in the event the corporation is dissolved. As long as the Federal Government contributes and continues to contribute in this business, just so long the District of Columbia will fail to do what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] states. He is a man above reproach, not only in his honesty and integrity, which all men concede, but in his charity, in his broad view of public questions, there is no one better in this or the other end of the Capitol. And the gentleman from Alabama is one of those people who prevent the District of Columbia doing the very thing that the gentleman from North Carolina and myself want to do; that is, to have the Federal Government do the very thing in the District of Columbia that it ought to do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; and when the gentleman had a chance he has always refused to do it.

Mr. SISSON. I have never done anything of the kind. I am here now asking you to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You refuse to do it now, and you refuse to do it when you vote.

Mr. SISSON. I am not doing anything of the kind, and the gentleman knows it. This bill contains an item to build a municipal hospital, and if the gentleman will support that you will get all you want, and then the Government can be relieved of appropriations to sectarian institutions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment No. 105.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 23.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Not on that item. You do not care.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. What are you filibustering on that for?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I am not filibustering. I want a record vote.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and eleven gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 196, nays 107, answered "present" 1, not voting 119, as follows:

Mr. VINSON with Mr. WOODRUFF.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and Senate amendment No. 105 is concurred in. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to all Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Was that request put as to the other Senate amendments than the one voted on?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments except the one just voted on, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House be instructed not to agree to Senate amendment No. 110.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see if we can arrange as to the time to be allowed for the discussion of this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this motion close in 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this motion be confined to 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. How is that time to be used?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, I had calculated that by the number of gentlemen who had indicated that they desired time when I put that motion. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was to have 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has asked for 5 minutes, and I was reserving 10 minutes for those who are opposing this motion.

Mr. MANN. We would like to have 10 or 15 minutes over here.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Would the gentleman indicate on which side of the question?

Mr. MANN. No. It is indicated on this side of the aisle.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. Ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I rise to offer a motion to instruct.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to add to the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. It is a motion to instruct.

The SPEAKER. You can not have two motions to instruct pending at the same time. You can offer it as an amendment, but you can not have two motions to instruct pending at one time, unless one of them is offered as an amendment to the other or as a substitute for the other. Does the gentleman want to offer it as a substitute or as an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, they relate to different subjects.

The SPEAKER. To different parts of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; they would reach different parts of the bill.

The SPEAKER. If it relates to the same subject matter in the bill, it might be in order, but otherwise the Chair does not think it would be pertinent to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not care to interfere with the motion made by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. You can not have two motions to instruct pending at once.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to amend my submission of the unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this motion be concluded in 35 minutes, 15 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the remainder to be controlled by myself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be considered as an amendment to the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky as an amendment to that offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who has the floor now?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has. Nobody else has.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from North Carolina does not claim the floor, I am entitled to it. I have offered a motion. Under the rules of the House he has control of the floor until he yields to somebody.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] has the floor. The gentleman from Kentucky offered an amendment.

Mr. MANN. He can not offer an amendment without getting the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He can not offer it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Nobody was occupying the floor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from North Carolina was on the floor asking for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. What happened was that the gentleman from North Carolina was talking to some one else, and so was the gentleman from New York. I think they were talking with each other.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I was going to say that if the gentleman from North Carolina was in conversation with anyone, it was with the gentleman from New York, but I was——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] was entitled to the floor and took the floor, and then made a request for unanimous consent, which, by the way, has not yet been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that.

Mr. MANN. And somebody else can not rise and offer an amendment pending that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is correct, and that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] technically had the floor. The gentleman made a request for unanimous consent, and therefore the amendment is out of order. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] asks unanimous consent that debate on this proposition be limited to 35 minutes, he to control 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know where I would fall between these two gentlemen? Nobody has suggested that I am to get time from either one of them.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman 5 minutes of the 20 that I have reserved for myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I made the statement to start out with that I wanted 10 minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I amend my request for unanimous consent, that the debate may conclude in 40 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], 10 minutes by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and 15 minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the debate close in 40 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York, 15 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois, and the remainder of the time by the gentleman from North Carolina. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is to be used for or against my motion?

Mr. MANN. Both.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think all the time ought to be on one side.

Mr. MANN. That is what I think. I have taken only one-third of the time for this side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will allow me, I propose to yield five minutes of the time I have reserved to a gentleman favoring his proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, Senate amendment 110 is as follows:

Gallinger Hospital: Toward the construction of the Gallinger Hospital, including grading of the site, $150,000, and the limit of cost of the construction of said hospital and accessory buildings is hereby fixed at $500,000: Provided, That said hospital shall be constructed with a view to making future additions, as the exigencies may demand.

The managers on the part of the House have agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment, and as agreed to by the managers of the two Houses, the provision is:

Gallinger Hospital: Toward the construction and equipment of the Gallinger Hospital, including grading of the site, $150,000, and the limit of cost of the construction of said hospital and accessory buildings and equipment is hereby fixed at $1,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, there are several matters to which I wish to call attention. In the first place, if a hospital or any other institution is to be constructed by the Federal Government, in my opinion it should not be named after any living public man who is active in political life. [Applause.] I believe that to be a fundamental objection of a highly important character. When I make this statement I do not wish to be considered as in any way disparaging or reflecting upon the distinguished public services of the gentleman whom it is proposed to honor in this way.

In the second place, Mr. Speaker, the proposition to authorize the construction of a municipal hospital to cost $1,000,000 can not, in my opinion, be justified at this time in view of the condition of the Public Treasury.

In all probability there will be a substantial deficit in the Treasury of the United States this year, and in the next fiscal year a deficit of a very considerable sum, variously estimated at from forty to eighty or ninety million dollars. Additional tax legislation must soon be enacted. Under the circumstances no public improvement involving an expenditure out of the Public Treasury eventually of $1,000,000 should be authorized at this time by the Congress unless there be such an emergency and compelling necessity as to justify the expenditure.

In the third place, I am opposed to the proposition for what to me is the most important reason of all. The policy so far pursued in the District of Columbia of caring for the indigent sick is a policy that has been followed for many years. There are a large number of private institutions in the District which are well conducted, well managed, and which have received the commendation of all who are familiar with them. Under the present system the indigent sick are cared for largely in those institutions, under contracts made with the Board of Charities. They are cared for under such contracts at less than they can be cared for in Government institutions, and whatever sum is required additional to that provided by the contract with the Government is made up from the private resources of the institutions. This policy in the care of the indigent sick in the District of Columbia has been so pronounced that Congress, not including the $50,000 which the House has just overwhelmingly voted as a contribution to one such private institution, has hitherto appropriated $2,242,637 to the private institutions as aids for their buildings and equipment. If we embark upon the scheme of a great municipal hospital, and there care for all the indigent sick of the District, the policy involves the discontinuance entirely of the policy heretofore existing of having some of the unfortunates cared for under contract in private institutions. The result will be that an expenditure of $2,240,000 heretofore made will, so far as the Government is concerned, be lost and the proper advantage and benefit from such expenditure will not be derived from it.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Senate put in $500,000 for this hospital, and that the amount has been raised in conference to $1,000,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate fixed the limit of cost at $500,000, and the managers on the part of the two Houses agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment fixing the limit of cost at $1,000,000.

Mr. CARTER. Did not the conferees exceed their jurisdiction in doing that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to debate that question. I believe it to be a debatable question, but I have not the time to discuss it now. In some of the contracts made with these institutions the indigent sick are cared for at a trifle over 50 cents a day. In the Government-managed institution in this city the cost is well over $1 a day. At the Washington Asylum the per capita cost is $1.06 a day. The Washington Asylum, however, is such an institution that it is not to be expected that the same conditions and the same comforts and the same surroundings will be provided there as would be provided for the sick under more advantageous circumstances.

To illustrate what it would cost in a Government-controlled institution we have only one basis of comparison, and that is the cost of the tuberculosis patients in the Tuberculosis Hospital. The cost of the tuberculosis patients is less than the cost of taking care of other patients. They do not require the close attention from nurses and attendants that other hospital patients require. The cost of tuberculosis patients in that hospital is $1.36 a day.

The policy proposed here involves the construction of an institution to cost $1,000,000 to take care of, as I am informed, at least 600 patients, at a cost far in excess of what they can be cared for in existing institutions, with the surrendering of the advantages that already accrue to the Government from the investment in those institutions, and the adoption of a policy entirely excluding the charitably disposed and those interested in privately endowed institutions from participation in this work.

I believe that it is a grave mistake to change the present policy, and I hope that this motion or resolution will be agreed to, and that the proposed step will not be taken at this time. If it is to be taken, it should be done at a time when there is an opportunity to discuss such a far-reaching change of policy and ascertain what the cost will be in caring for the patients under such conditions.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, it was the policy of the Government in the past to appropriate directly for hospitals—to so-called privately controlled institutions. A little while ago $50,000 was donated to the Emergency Hospital; so that in all these donations the Government has made in the past it gets at least some moral right in these hospitals.

As has been said by the gentleman from New York a minute ago, under the arrangement which Congress has with the Board of Charities existing in the District of Columbia a certain amount of money is appropriated for the care of indigent persons in these institutions.

I have looked some little into all the hospitals in the city of Washington, and I think, taking them all in all, there is an excellent system existing in this city. The care of patients in the Tuberculosis Hospital, which is a Government institution, owned and managed by the Government, and which has a class of patients which is less expensive than surgical or lying-in patients, costs the Government more money now than it does in any other private institution we have in the city. For instance, in the Columbia Hospital we pay, I think, $1.20 a day. It is well known to anybody who has anything to do with or understands the situation that they are more expensive, or at least the most expensive of any class of patients that goes into a hospital. So if we have a Government institution, we must expect in the future not only to have the expense of building the institution but we must pay more money for the care of the patients than is now paid by the Government.

Of course, we all like to see a large, fine institution. It looks well, and to talk about it sounds well, and I submit that they could get no better care than this class of patients has to-day in the Garfield Hospital, the Homeopathic Hospital, the Sibley Hospital, the Georgetown Hospital, the Emergency Hospital, the Providence Hospital, the Children's Hospital, or any other institution in this city.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to how this proposed institution got its name?

Mr. FOSTER. It was in one of those amendments that comes back from another body in which, I take it, that some one wanted to honor an old member of that body, one who has served many years on the District of Columbia Committee, and who was himself in the early days of his life a physician. I suppose it was to do honor to him that it was given the name it now bears. But when we vote for an institution with the amendments placed upon it by the Senate we must remember that $500,000 will not pay for the building of this institution. You must remember that one, three, or four million dollars will be necessary before you complete this Government institution. I do not believe that we ought to go into this expenditure at this time, when we are able to take care of these patients in institutions now in existence and have them taken care of for less money than we can ever do in this proposed Government institution.

Now, these private hospitals in the city are not money-making institutions. They are not organized for the purpose of making money. Physicians must treat many of their patients in hospitals to get the best results. Surgical operations must be performed in hospitals in order to afford the best treatment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not find anyone on this side who cares for time against the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the gentleman from Illinois is not on the floor.

Mr. GILLETT. He yielded his time to me and asked me to take charge of it. I wish to use a little time myself, but I am on the same side of it that has already been advocated.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There are only 10 minutes reserved against the proposition.

Mr. GILLETT. I will speak now. Mr. Speaker, for several sessions of Congress, some years ago, I was chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which had in charge this District bill. At that time this very proposition which now comes before us came before us session after session, although a larger sum was stated to be necessary. It was urged upon us by the District Commissioners, and at that time the committee, solidly, as I recollect, stood against the proposition. I am sorry to see that there has been a change and that the present committee is in favor of a municipal hospital. The reason we opposed it was on the ground of economy. To appropriate for several private existing hospitals instead of building a municipal hospital is not a new proposition. If it were, it would be very different. If we were beginning new, it might be better to build a municipal hospital. But there have been built up here in Washington, largely, I admit, by Government contributions, a number of excellent private hospitals. They have received about $2,000,000 of public money from the Government, and they are governed by men and women of high purpose. They are, I believe, better and more economically governed than a municipal hospital would be governed. They are already in existence, and that money which we have contributed to them and which they have raised themselves is now available to take care of the needy in the city of Washington.

Why, then, should we enter into competition with them and launch out into a new proposition which starts with a million dollars and certainly will cost very much more than that? Why should we waste these $2,000,000 which we have already contributed? Why should we waste this energy and skill and devotion which the men and women of Washington are ready to contribute to hospital service and educate it afresh for the Government? What the Government does in the District of Columbia is always extravagant, I think, and as long as we can accomplish the same result by private means I am in favor of it.

I will admit there is a question which probably is disagreeable to some of us of making appropriations for sectarian purposes. I will admit that I am against that in principle. I do not think the Government ought to do it. I believe it is a good rule to lay down that the Government should not make appropriations for sectarian purposes, but these sectarian institutions are now in existence. They do not teach sectarianism. They are of different sects. They are doing their work splendidly. We have been appropriating for them year by year, and it seems to me that just because it may embarrass us politically, or because we have fundamental objections to it, that should not prevent our carrying on the policy which we have carried on year after year in the interest of economy and good management. We would be wasting all of that and all of the energy and devotion that these good men and women have given by undertaking a great extravagant Government hospital to accomplish the same thing. Therefore I am in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from New York. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the proposition to which the gentleman referred as having been pending for some time before Congress is not the proposition in this bill at all. The proposition there was to build a three-million-and-a-half-dollar hospital, and plans and specifications were submitted last year in conference, and your subcommittee declined to consider that proposition because the plans and specifications were for a magnificent building, which would really not be suited for the purposes of a hospital. With the Senate conferees agreeing thereto we asked the municipal architect of the District of Columbia, in conjunction with the physicians who had practical experience, to submit to us plans and specifications to make a well-lighted, substantial municipal hospital at the very lowest possible figure that such a building could be erected for. After several days they came back with plans and specifications, the physicians testifying to the amount of space needed in each ward and for each patient, and the supervising architect then made a building in accordance with that, providing all modern appliances for hospital purposes, and said that for between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars the building could be constructed, and that $100,000 would provide all of the modern, up-to-date equipment. This bill provides for such a hospital and appropriates only $150,000. I do not believe a man in this House will charge that I favor appropriations that are to any extent extravagant.

I believe this is the most economical proposition that the Government can adopt, because we have not only in the past appropriated only $2,000,000 to assist in building two hospitals in the District but, in addition to that, we have appropriated from ninety to one hundred thousand dollars each and every year toward the maintenance and support of private institutions. For this reason the District has no hospital. The people who have charge of the distribution of these funds in the District of Columbia tell us in the subcommittee that the amount of money which we are now appropriating to these private institutions will care for all of the District charities. I do not believe that we ought to continue to make these appropriations. I want to get rid of the sectarian influences that operate upon the minds and hearts of Members of this Congress. I want to divorce the Government from all contributions to these institutions under sectarian control. Am I right? The Congress of the United States in 1896 passed a statute which makes it a violation of law, in so far as it can control Congress, which can repeal any law at any time, defining it to be the fixed policy of the Federal Government not to contribute any money to any sectarian institution of any kind. That was a fixed policy.

Mr. GILLETT. These institutions do not teach any sectarian doctrines, do they?

Mr. SISSON. But the statute is not so narrow as that, and says any institution under sectarian control.

Mr. GILLETT. That statute does not bind us.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, and for that reason Congress does as it pleases, but it was then defined to be the fixed policy of the Government, and I think it ought to be the fixed policy now of the Government, and in order that you may separate all of the religious influences from this body it is absolutely essential that we should not make any appropriations of this kind. When you appropriate for an institution under one sectarian control the people of another sectarian control will demand a like amount, and what we ought to do is to remove all religious influences from the legislation both in the States and in the Nation.

Now, this $1,000,000 will build and equip, according to the statement of the Supervising Architect and the physicians, a modern, up-to-date hospital that will take care of all the patients that will come to it within the next 10 years, and it is so designed that you can add to it without losing any of the work which you have already constructed in the event we need more, and, with the money which we are now appropriating for these private institutions, maintain and support the hospital. You will only have one management instead of, in the case of these others, several managements. You will concentrate your management in the hands of one board. You will have only one lot of employees to look after the institution, and the overhead charge will be just as much less as one bears to all the institutions here, which have to pay so many overhead charges. We are now paying for two institutions, $19,000 each, and in many instances we are called upon not to pay deficiencies to both of those institutions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The $19,000 for Providence Hospital takes care of patients at 52 cents a day. That is about one-third the cost of taking care of them in a Government institution.

Mr. SISSON. The Government institutions up to date have been quite small, and the overhead charges will be the same irrespective of the size of the hospital, and the more patients the less the average cost will be. But, irrespective of costs, I would take the churches out of politics.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether the House fully realizes what they are asked to do by amendment 110, on page 72. The Senate put on an amendment providing for a $500,000 Gallinger Hospital. The conferees agreed to raise it $500,000, making it a million-dollar Gallinger Hospital. I would like to ask the membership of this House if this is an appropriate time to spend $1,000,000 for a Gallinger Hospital or any other kind of a hospital? I can not fathom the logic of my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], and I am shocked and upset that my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], who always pulls back on the lines, in this instance has evidently abandoned all his former views on curtailment of appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Let me proceed; I only have two minutes.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman has charged me with abandoning my former views, and I think he ought to yield to let me tell him the facts——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma declines to yield.

Mr. FERRIS. I will leave it to the House. I want to ask the membership on this side of the aisle, when the Treasury is at a vanishing point and it looks like a special session sure, I would like to ask, What has become of the reason and the common sense on this side of the House that they should first agree to a Senate amendment for $500,000 and then the conferees should agree to $500,000 more? The provision offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], instructing these conferees to disagree to this whole thing, ought to be carried. There is, of course, nothing personal in this. They may call it the "Gallinger Hospital" if they want to, or they may call it the "Congressman Mann Hospital" if they want to, or they may call it the "Speaker Clark Hospital" if they want to, but this is no time and no place to do anything of this sort. We have not the money to spare to build a million-dollar hospital in this city or any other city. I yield back any time I may have left.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very important proposition. I believe it is one that is not thoroughly understood by the membership of the House. We ought to know just what we are doing before we appropriate a million dollars of the people's money at this time, when we are levying taxes on our people to build a hospital in the city of Washington to take care of indigent sick who become charges on the city. There is not a city in all of this country that takes better care of her poor when they are well or sick than does the city of Washington. We are caring for them to-day in the best hospitals to be found any place. These hospitals are taking care of them at a very low charge. They have ample facilities, ample room, in all these hospitals to take care of the poor of the city who are sick and ought to go to the hospitals. Now, what is the proposition? At this time, when the Treasury is empty and the people are being taxed, you propose on that side of the House to tax the people a million dollars more to build a Government hospital in the city of Washington; and I want to say to you that, notwithstanding the fact that these poor people are well taken care of now, when you have a Government hospital, instead of taking care of them at 60 cents per day or thereabouts, the policy will be not how well we can care for them, but how much we can expend on all the fads and fancies of theorists and exploiters. The cost will come out of the people of the United States. They are to be taxed, and when you vote against the amendment of the gentleman from New York, remember you are voting to place a tax on the people of the United States to the extent of a million dollars for that purpose. That is what is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains on this side?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the proposition here is not to appropriate $1,000,000, not to appropriate $500,000, but to appropriate $150,000, of which in any event one-half would be paid by the District of Columbia. The Senate amendment proposes to limit the cost to $500,000 for certain buildings, with the authority to increase that hereafter by further appropriations. Well, the House conferees' report is not now before us, but as the report was presented it proposed to limit the cost for all buildings and equipment to $1,000,000. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] says that we ought not to appropriate this $75,000 of the people's money and $75,000 of the District's money for a hospital, but I notice he was very strongly in favor of the proposition to appropriate a very large sum of money for a hospital for the Indians, and even the gentleman from New York in the sundry civil bill carried an appropriation of $70,000 for taking care of the insane in Alaska, which has not much more than one-fifth or one-tenth of the population of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is, to be taken care of in a private institution under contract, the same as the District sick are at present.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. It is just as much money, whether it is one case or the other. Now, it seems to me that a Congress that can appropriate two or three hundred million dollars for defense against war, appropriate or authorize new construction in the Navy to the extent of $75,000,000, might properly appropriate a small sum of money toward the construction of a municipal hospital to be governed by Congress or by the authorities which Congress designates for the District of Columbia. Who would abolish the insane hospital in the District of Columbia and turn all the patients over to private institutions? In every great city of the country we provide now for Government-controlled hospitals, and the enlightened sentiment of the day demands that this shall be done. I have no animosity toward those hospitals that now receive help from the Government. I think it is perfectly proper that they should receive it, but it seems to me that even now, with the present state of the Treasury, we can better afford to expend $150,000, one-half to be paid by the District, for starting a municipal hospital in this District which will meet all demands than to expend $70,000 in Alaska, and I do not know how many thousands of dollars for hospitals for the Indians. They are proper, doubtless, but they are not needed as much as a hospital right here, controlled by the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yields three minutes, making eight minutes in all for the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has properly stated the proposition as to the appropriation of this money and as to the wording of this amendment. The amendment inserted in the Senate is:

> Toward the construction of the Gallinger Hospital, including grading of the site, $150,000, and the limit of cost of the construction of said hospital and auxiliary buildings is hereby fixed at $500,000: Provided, That said hospital shall be constructed with a view to making future additions as the exigencies may demand.

There was no limit of cost fixed in the Senate amendment, and in conference the House conferees insisted upon fixing a definite limit of cost, and we fixed the $1,000,000, but not as a guess. We acted upon definite information that we had obtained from the best sources possible as to the amount of room that would be necessary in this hospital to care for the indigent sick of the District of Columbia.

Now, gentlemen speak of the proper care at the present time of the indigent sick in the District of Columbia. I say that those gentlemen either do not know what they are talking about or they are misrepresenting the facts. The indigent sick are not properly cared for at the present time and never will be, in my judgment, until there is a municipally owned and operated hospital for their care.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman mean that the indigent sick in the private institutions under contract are not cared for?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, no; I did not mean that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman means that the indigent sick cared for in the strictly governmental institutions are not properly cared for?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I do not mean that. I mean that the hospital that is now known as the Municipal Hospital, and has room for no more than 175 indigent sick people, has 250 people, crowded 6 in a ward, and that is the condition that confronts this Congress and this city and your conferees. It is not a matter of guesswork, but a matter of information. And under the present arrangement, equipment, and authority for caring for the indigent sick in the District of Columbia, I ask the question as to why 250 of these indigent sick are crowded in an institution, composed of ramshackle wooden buildings, not suited for the purpose of proper hospital care, when its capacity is only 175, if these private institutions will take care of them.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. For a short question.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman does not mean to give the impression there is no room in the other hospitals, such as Providence and Garfield Hospitals, if the board having charge desires to make arrangements for their care?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They can not make arrangements beyond the sum allowed by Congress for their care. But, aside from this, in this amendment and in the motion pending, by the gentleman from New York, there is not the mere matter of whether we shall make appropriations at this time for the construction of a municipal hospital, but a question of whether the municipality, the District of Columbia, is going to care for its indigent sick in a hospital it controls or whether we are going to continue in the future, as in the past, to make appropriations for the care of a part of them in private institutions, not the whole of them.

Gentlemen speak of the additional cost if it is under governmental control. I say no one here has sufficient information to know what would be the cost in a properly constructed and equipped Government hospital. They are basing their figures upon an institution whose capacity is 175 patients. The overhead charges are practically as great as they would be in this institution, which would provide for all the indigent sick in this District, amounting now to 500, and provision being made in this amendment to take care of 600, which would allow for the growth in future years.

This is no matter of personal interest to me any more than it is to any other gentleman here, but it is a matter involved as to the policy which we pursue, and it is up to the Congress. It is a matter of perfect indifference to me personally whether or not the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is voted up or voted down. But I think it is a matter of vast importance to the proper care of the indigent sick in this city and in this District whether his amendment is voted up or voted down. I believe that we should in this enlightened age go forward and not backward. He speaks of the investment of $2,000,000 that we have in private hospitals in this city. True, we have, but we have no control, absolutely none, of these hospitals. And it is questionable as to whether or not we have a vested right, although we have been accorded it. I am glad this motion which is pending has produced one result on the floor of this House. It has brought the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] to the point of being in favor of economy. Who ever heard of his voting for anything that was in the interest of economy prior to this motion that is pending here to-day? [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I can not yield at present.

Mr. FERRIS. Just for a moment.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman says he has brought me to economize. Let me remind the gentleman that only a moment ago the House turned a double somersault on the gentleman, and I voted with him then.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. And in that instance the House was voting against economy. I say that usually when I stand up on this floor in the interest of real economy this House has done me a double somersault. I would not be surprised if it should do that at this time; but because it does, that does not make it right. I am for a principle that I believe is preeminently right.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FESS. What effect will this have on the hospitals that are already in operation?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It will have no effect on them. It will merely affect the private institutions in this city to the extent that under the present arrangement sick are committed to these private institutions, and if this municipal hospital were built and equipped they would be assigned to this hospital, and not to the private institutions. It is for the assignment of the indigent sick to the municipal hospital, and not to the private institutions; that is really the principle involved.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Will this amount of $1,000,000 pay for the equipment of the building?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Absolutely it will. It will construct the building and equip it for the care of 600 indigent sick. That is based upon information that I have obtained from the municipal architect and from the Board of Charities and from physicians who are in charge of this hospital.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 57.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of instruction on Senate No. 110 will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 202, nays 86, answered "present" 1, not voting 134 as follows:

[Roll No. 90.]

So the motion of Mr. FITZGERALD was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. ASWELL with Mr. MANAHAN.

Mr. BROWN of West Virginia with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. MOORE.

Mr. FAISON with Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. WOODS.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin with Mr. VOLSTEAD.

Mr. HAYDEN with Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I believe my request that the House disagree to the other amendments was granted, and also my request for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House be instructed not to agree to Senate amendment No. 1.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. DAVIS.

CHANGE OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS], who was appointed a conferee on the bill (H. R. 17869) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of Georgia, declines to serve, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] in his place.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the cases of—

Michael Flaherty (H. R. 3865, Sixty-third Congress, first session);

Mathilde K. Schiffman (H. R. 3286, Sixty-third Congress, first session);

Leslie R. Loveland (H. R. 19198, Sixty-third Congress, second session); and FEDERAL BUILDING, HONOLULU, HAWAII.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on S. 5295.

The SPEAKER. Has it been printed?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let us have the title of the bill reported first, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 5295) to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to read the statement in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1430).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5295) entitled "An act to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "sell and convey by usual quitclaim deed said site to the highest bidder at public or private sale, after giving notice by advertisement for 30 days in at least two newspapers published in said city of Honolulu at a minimum price of not less than $165,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to arrange for the reimbursement of the contributors to the opening and dedication of Bishop Street adjoining said site through any responsible fiscal agent in Honolulu whom he may designate: Provided, That the agent serves without compensation; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to deposit with such agent $35,000 of the amount realized from the sale of the present site and take a bond from the agent for the full deposit; and the agent shall ascertain the names of the contributors, and the amounts contributed, and shall reimburse them, taking receipt in each case, the reimbursement to be the amount contributed without interest; and the receipt obtained by the fiscal agent shall be considered as evidence of the reimbursement, and the person so reimbursed shall have no further claim. The appointment of the fiscal agent and the conditions under which the reimbursement is to be arranged shall be advertised in at least two local newspapers of wide circulation a stated number of times, and no one of the original contributors shall be entitled to reimbursement unless the claim is filed with the agent within one year after the last time the matter referred to is advertised. The difference between the amount obtained for the sale of the site and $35,000 shall be deposited in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and any balance of the $35,000 which the designated fiscal agent is unable to return to the original contributors shall also be turned into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted insert "$275,000"; and the House agree to the same.

FRANK CLARK,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
R. W. AUSTIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
JAMES E. MARTINE,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5295) entitled "An act to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the amendments of the House, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Strikes out the language leaving the question of sale of present site in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 2: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate relative to reconveyance of the present site to the person or persons from whom the United States acquired title, and so forth, and provides for the sale of said site, as proposed by the House, and for the reimbursement of the contributors to the opening and dedication of Bishop Street, adjoining said site, through a responsible fiscal agent, to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and to serve without compensation, under such proper arrangements, bond, and so forth, as may meet with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; said sale of site to be negotiated at a minimum price of not less than $105,000, which would return to the Government its payment of $104,000, with interest and provide a balance of $35,000, as specified in the amendment, with which to reimburse the street contributors.

On amendment No. 3: Strikes out the language leaving the purchase and acquisition of a new site in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 4: Authorizes a limit of cost of $275,000 instead of $250,000, as proposed by the House, thereby giving the Secretary of the Treasury more latitude in acquiring site.

On amendment No. 5: Strikes out authority to enlarge present site, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 6: Strikes out language referring to cost of an enlargement of site, in conformity with language striken out in amendment No. 5, as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 7: Strikes out authority to use proceeds of sale of present site toward the acquisition of a new site, as proposed by the House, such proceeds, less $35,000, to be deposited in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, as provided in amendment No. 2.

On amendment No. 8: Strikes out language about enlargement of present site, as proposed by the House, in conformity with amendments Nos. 5 and 6.

On amendments Nos. 9 and 10: These amendments strike out, as proposed by the House, language used by the Senate in contemplation of the possible enlargement and use of the present site, and make the final clause of the bill conform to the new proposition to give up and sell the present site and acquire an entirely new one.

FRANK CLARK,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
R. W. AUSTIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

JOSEPH ELIOT AUSTIN.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and accompanying statement of the managers on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 2642) to restore to the Navy Joseph Eliot Austin, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report, notwithstanding the rule which requires conference reports to be printed in the RECORD and go over for one day.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the effect of the conference report; what does it do with the Senate amendment?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. It was a compromise, and I will state the effect of it. Under the House bill as we passed it, this young man would have been put 10 numbers below the place he would have occupied if he had not been removed. Under the amendment agreed on by the conferees he will be placed 15 numbers lower than the place he would have occupied if he had not been removed.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2642) authorizing the President to reinstate Joseph Eliot Austin as an ensign in the United States Navy, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the new matter inserted in the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "to appoint Joseph Eliot Austin an ensign in the United States Navy and after one year's service as ensign he shall be promoted to the grade of lieutenant, junior grade, as an additional number in that grade and in any grade to which he may thereafter be promoted, to take rank with and next after the officer at the foot of the list of lieutenants, junior grade, at the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That the said Joseph Eliot Austin, after one year's service as ensign, shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, by examination pursuant to law, his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy"; and the Senate agree to the same.

S. A. WITHERSPOON,
S. J. TRIBBLE,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 2642) authorizing the President to reinstate Joseph Eliot Austin as an ensign in the United States Navy, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report on the amendment of the Senate, namely:

The Senate amendment authorizes the President to appoint Joseph Eliot Austin an ensign in the United States Navy, to take rank at the foot of the list of ensigns, and the House recedes with an amendment whereby Joseph Eliot Austin is appointed an ensign in the Navy, and after one year's service as such is eligible to be promoted to the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) as an additional number in that grade or any grade to which he may thereafter be promoted, to take rank with and next after the officer at the foot of the list of lieutenants (junior grade) at the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That he shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, by the usual examination, his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy.

S. A. WITHERSPOON,
S. J. TRIBBLE,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 19906, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to say to the gentleman that there are two Senate amendments, Nos. 4 and 12, one relating to assistant postmasters and the other relating to demoted letter carriers, upon which some of us do not want an agreement in conference without an opportunity to vote upon it in the House.

Mr. MOON. In the event that I should be one of the conferees, I would not agree to it at all unless it was a full agreement of the Senate conferees. If the matter should reach a point where the House ought to give instructions, we would be glad to come back for instructions on those matters.

Mr. MANN. We can ask for a separate vote on the amendments now, but that might not be necessary. I think we will have to do that unless we have an understanding that these two amendments shall not be disposed of in conference in the first instance.

Mr. MOON. I think we ought to have a full and complete conference on everything; but there will be no disposition to take advantage of that, and if there is anybody in the House who wants to vote on any matter I do not object.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee and I do not quite understand each other, or I do not quite understand the gentleman from Tennessee. Of course we can ask for a separate vote now upon all amendments.

Mr. MOON. I take it that the bill would go to the committee now if there was objection to this request.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman willing to assure us that these amendments will not be disposed of in conference without an opportunity for the House to vote upon them?

Mr. MOON. Do I understand the gentleman to mean that if the Senate conferees should be willing to accept the House proposition, still he wants a separate vote upon them?

Mr. MANN. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MOON. I do not know that I have any objection to it, but it seems to me a little odd that gentlemen want to vote on a proposition where the Senate accepts the House proposition.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but we have a right to a separate vote on any Senate amendment, and I do not think it would be well to have the Senate recede from the amendments without a vote in the House. If the gentleman brings it back, he can move to further disagree or concur.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman wants a vote on these two amendments?

Mr. MANN. Yes; Nos. 4 and 12.

Mr. MOON. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the following conferees:

The conferees named were Mr. MOON, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Among the conferees who have been named on the Post Office appropriation bill is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], representing the minority. The gentleman from Illinois is not the ranking member on the Post Office Committee, but the ranking member is Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, of Michigan. The next in order is the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], and then comes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. My inquiry is whether, under the usual practice of the House in the naming of conferees, the ranking member of the minority on the committee is not designated as the representative of the minority on the conference?

The SPEAKER. Usually he is.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that for three sessions the ranking member on the Democratic side on the committee was not appointed on the conference committee for reasons that best suited the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have never known the time. Perhaps the gentleman is right in his recollection, but——

Mr. MOON. I will state to the gentleman when it was. It was when the gentleman from California, Mr. Loud, was chairman of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, that is going back into ancient history, but in the last 12 years on the Post Office appropriation bill and on every other appropriation bill the ranking member of the minority has been recognized and appointed as one of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. That is the usual practice. There is no question about that, but the Chair as a matter of routine usually appoints the conferees that the chairman of a particular committee asks to have appointed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I put this further question to the Speaker. Whether the minority is not entitled to have as a representative on the conference a person who is opposed to the position of the majority on the amendments in disagreement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the representative of the minority should be a person who takes the opposite position to the position of the majority, when the amendments are in disagreement and the two sides of the Chamber are in opposition, and that is the very purpose of having a minority representative on the committee of conference. It is to have a member who represents the minority in disagreement to the position of the majority.

The SPEAKER. If that rule were carried out, then about one-half of the time, considering the political minority, we would have the men who represented the views of those opposed to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would be only in case a question is raised, as the question is raised now. There are certain amendments proposed here in this bill, and some of the minority are opposed to those amendments.

The SPEAKER. The rule gives the Speaker absolute authority about it; but, as the Chair has stated, the Chair would have to dig down into the lists of the committees every time, and unless there is some exceedingly good reason he is guided by the desire of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it to be the understanding that as a precedent to be established now the chairman of the committee has the right to select the minority members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never said anything of the sort.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what is being done at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair said that the appointment of the conferees was vested absolutely in the Speaker; and, in the second place, as a matter of practice the Chair generally appoints those asked for by the chairmen of the various committees. There is no precedent about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the House must represent the attitude of the House upon these questions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to add that. It has always seemed to the Speaker that in a controverted question the conferees from the House ought to represent the sentiment of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then in that case, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has just suggested to me, why have a representative of the minority upon the conference committee if you are not going to have a representative to carry out the expressed wishes of the minority?

The SPEAKER. But there are two minorities in this House, one of them political and the other legislative. It might turn out at any time that all of the Republicans were in favor of a proposition, with enough Democrats to carry it. It does not make any difference how one arrives at it, that is the sentiment of the House if the proposition is carried.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then we are to understand, Mr. Speaker, that the selection of the conferees is in the control of the chairman of the committee?

The SPEAKER. No. The Chair has never said anything of the sort.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the case in this instance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has said that the Chair usually follows the suggestion of the chairman of the committee. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, asked the Chair to appoint these particular men, and the Chair appointed them, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] in justification of that fact that this House upon this bill is going to be in a death struggle with the Senate upon matters that involve to this Government more than $10,000,000 per annum, and so far as the House is concerned it has passed the bill demanding that economy, and as a conferee I want some one to assist me who is going to stand by the House, and not either one of the gentlemen preceding in rank upon the committee the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], because they are both against the will of the majority of this House.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman who has been designated——

Mr. MOON. We are representing the sentiment of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman who has been appointed voted with the majority and not with the minority.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], about half past 11, to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21546, the deficiency bill, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21546, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to use some time.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss the bill itself at the present time. Whatever I care to say about that, I can do so under the five-minute rule, but I wish to occupy a few minutes in some desultory remarks. The older Members of the House will remember that for many years I was chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a reform with which I always was in sympathy, and that position gave me especial interest in it, and during the last year at different times I made some comment on the attitude of this administration toward the merit system. When this administration came into power I expected that the merit system, as it is called, would be strictly enforced and supported. My confidence depended not upon the character or the platform pledges of the Democratic Party, but it was based entirely upon the character and previous pledges of the President of the United States. At the time he was nominated he was the vice president of the National Civil Service League, and in resigning, as he very properly and modestly did on being nominated for President, he stated that it did not indicate any lack of interest in the cause. Consequently, as I say, I expected from him a full performance of what his previous life and professions had promised; but, as some remarks I made last year indicated, I have been disappointed.

Having had no time during this winter to watch what was being done to the civil service until yesterday, when our last appropriation bill was finished, I then dropped into the rooms of the Civil Service Commission to see what Executive orders had been issued, and to see whether the principles—for I believe they were the genuine principles of the President—had been exemplified in his conduct. You all know, of course, that the civil-service law gives to the President power at any moment to waive its provisions and appoint a man to any position whatever under the civil service without any competitive examination. I believe that was a wise provision. It was put in, of course, because now and then there will come up an instance where the civil-service law is an inconvenience and where the best interests of the Government require that it should be temporarily waived. It gives a little elasticity to the law, and in all administrations there have been occasional waivers by the President. So I stepped in yesterday to see what waivers had been made this year. I looked through the list and I found in the two years since President Wilson was inaugurated 137 persons had been appointed by Executive order and excepted from the ordinary civil-service rules and from competitive examination. Under President Roosevelt a practice was inaugurated that when he desired to except a person from examination he would, before issuing an order, submit the case to the Civil Service Commission and request their opinion upon it, and then he could act in the light of an impartial and unbiased opinion. That has been followed ever since, and has become the ordinary course of Presidents. President Wilson has in the main followed this practice—and, by the way, I want to say right here that, while I criticized as an act of partisanship the appointment of the present commission, the appointment of two Democrats and one Progressive, instead of two Democrats and one Republican, as held all through the administration of Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, yet this commission, although appointed in this partisan manner, has not, in my opinion, acted in a partisan way itself.

On the contrary, as far as it has come to my knowledge, this present commission has acted impartially and fairly and as the judicial body which it ought to be. Its opinions have my respect, and I believe it has aimed to carry out the spirit of the law. Now, President Wilson I find submitted to the Civil Service Commission for their judgment all but 18 of these 137 cases. Eighteen cases he did not submit at all to the commission. I suppose the reason has been both with him and with Republican Presidents, that there were cases where they had made up their mind they were going to waive the civil-service rules anyway, and they preferred to waive them without first submitting them to the commission and having the commission disapprove them, and then being obliged to waive them in the face of a disapproval by the commission. Now, President Wilson waived the examination in 18 cases which he did not submit to the commission at all, and, as I say, I suppose in that, as in other cases, those were ones in which he was quite confident the commission would not agree with him and would advise that the order ought not to issue. In 41 cases the Civil Service Commission indorsed the suggestion and approved the waiver of the examination, and in those 41 cases I have no criticism to make upon the Executive. Where the Civil Service Commission, sitting, as I believe they have, as a judicial body, have impartially ruled that for the good of the service the exception ought to be made, I acquiesce and accept that as conclusive. But in 78 cases which the President submitted to the Civil Service Commission for their judgment they reported that the exception ought not to be made, and yet in those 78 cases he made the exception against the advice of the Civil Service Commission. In that I believe he has disregarded the spirit of the civil-service law.

Now, I wondered whether these cases were unusually numerous with President Wilson or whether this was a fair specimen of the conduct of our Presidents, and therefore I asked my clerk last night to look up the records of the first two years of President Roosevelt's term and the first two years of President Taft's term, and compare them with these first two years of President Wilson's term. In President Roosevelt's term he could not give me the figures, because it was not specified in the reports what action the Civil Service Commission took. But he found them under President Taft, and I find that President Taft in the first two years of office excepted 77 men from taking the examination—77 by President Taft against 137 by President Wilson, just about half as many. I find that President Taft waived the examination in the cases of 11 without submitting them at all to the Civil Service Commission. And I assume there, as I did in the case of President Wilson, that he feared an adverse report from the Civil Service Commission, and therefore preferred to make the appointments without being obliged to do so over their heads, and such appointments I criticize and condemn. So that President Taft appointed 11 without referring them to the commission, while President Wilson appointed 18.

I find that in 65 cases which were referred to the commission by President Taft the commission approved the order, and therefore, I say, the spirit of the civil-service law was carried out. And it is worth noticing that of those 65 persons 29 were included in one Executive order, in which, so far as I could see, the circumstances made it perfectly clear there was no partisanship, but that it was done for the good of the service. And there was just one case which the Civil Service Commission disapproved and where President Taft made the appointment despite the disapproval. So the figures stand like this: There were 137 exceptions by President Wilson, 77 by President Taft. President Wilson appointed 18 without referring them to the commission at all; President Taft appointed 11, all to be criticized. President Wilson's recommendations were approved in 41 cases by the Civil Service Commission; President Taft's were approved in 65. President Wilson appointed 78 men against the judgment of the Civil Service Commission and President Taft appointed 1—78 to 1.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. Was that during the whole four years?

Mr. GILLETT. The first two years. I did not look at the last two years. I made the comparison equal. The first two years of President Wilson and the first two years of President Taft.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. In how many cases did the President acquiesce in the objections of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. GILLETT. Of that there is no record. Where the President sends the suggestion to the commission and they disapprove, and he does not act, there is no record, at least none was shown me, and so I have no means of knowing. And I should like to add there that I requested at the offices of the Civil Service Commission to be shown the correspondence between the President and the commission. I should like to have seen the letters which the commission wrote to the President and to see against what advice he still followed his own wishes. But the commission informed me—and I am not criticizing them for that, for I presume it is proper—that that correspondence was confidential and that I could not see it.

So, those are the figures. Now, it seems to me that does not conform, as we had a right to expect the conduct of the President would conform, to his previous statements and position on this question.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. How far should that confidential relationship between the President and the department exist, in that Congressmen could not see the correspondence?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not wish to pass upon that. I do not wish to criticize the commission, because when they said that to me I said to myself I presume I should say the same thing if I were in their place. I have not studied the question, and I do not know whether that is confidential or whether it is not; but it seems to me at first blush that they were right.

Mr. SLOAN. Is the gentleman able to find any case where the President abided by the objections made by the Civil Service Commissioners?

Mr. GILLETT. I presume there were such cases, but I have no knowledge on that point at all, because those cases did not appear on the record.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 15 minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to ask if the gentleman does not think that this correspondence, being under the law, as I understand it, was a part of the official acts of the commission?

Mr. GILLETT. No; this is not under the law. The President is not required to submit it to the Civil Service Commission for their judgment. It was a system inaugurated by President Roosevelt on his own initiative, and is not a part of the law, so that I presume it is confidential.

Now, I make no criticism of that. The criticism I make is that after the position of the President before election and the declaration of the Democratic Party—although I do not think any of us on this side attached much value to that—this long list of orders against the advice of the commission is depressing. I confess it is with genuine disappointment that I find that the law is not being observed in spirit as it had been before.

There were a couple of cases that attracted my attention for the reason that they were both worded in exactly the same language, in accordance apparently with a formula. They were cases that came from the office of the Attorney General. They waived examinations for two high-priced positions in the office of the Attorney General, and made the waiver on the ground given by the Attorney General that the positions were highly confidential and required a peculiar order of talent and that the men were known to the Attorney General personally. Those cases were, neither of them, even referred to the commission, but the appointments were made without reference.

Now, I find that one of those cases was that of Charles E. Stewart, of Alabama, August 22, and the other was that of Calvin Satterfield, of Pennsylvania, December 30. I have had very little time to investigate, but I find those cases were not to fill vacancies. Vacancies were made for the appointment of those two men by requesting the men who held the positions before to resign. Both of them who held the positions before were men who had risen up from the ranks in the service to these higher positions. The chief clerk, as I ascertained, was appointed by Attorney General Knox. He had served with satisfaction apparently through the terms of Attorney General Knox, Attorney General Moody, Attorney General Bonaparte, Attorney General Wickersham, and Attorney General McReynolds, and it was not until last fall that it was discovered that the position of chief clerk was so extremely confidential that a proper man could not be found in the civil service, and that the position must be given to Mr. Charles E. Stewart, of Alabama.

I inquired this afternoon who he was. By the way, I was perfectly certain before I made the inquiry that these two men were both Democrats. I was perfectly confident myself that it was done on the principle enunciated by the premier of this administration—"to find places for deserving Democrats." [Laughter on the Republican side.] I find that Mr. Stewart was a newspaper man stationed in Washington who was very active in the recent campaign for Mr. UNDERWOOD. In that way, I presume, he showed his peculiar fitness for this position. The other gentleman, Mr. Calvin Satterfield, of Pennsylvania, I know nothing about; but I see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who, I think, is the most influential in patronage in that State. I should like to ask Mr. PALMER if he knows who he is?

Mr. PALMER. I never heard of him before. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. I confess I am surprised. I venture to say some Democrat from Pennsylvania has heard of him.

Mr. PALMER. I suppose somebody threw something over on me. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. I do not suppose the gentleman owns the whole State. I know nothing about him, but I venture to say that he is a Democrat. It strikes me as significant that in those two cases the same formula was used, and that whereas through all these previous administrations the man who rose up through the civil-service ranks became chief clerk and Chief of Accounts Division and was satisfactory to all those Attorneys General, yet now with this new officer the examination is waived and these two high-priced offices are filled.

Why, gentlemen, the idea of a chief clerk in the Attorney General's office being a peculiarly confidential position!

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman state what the position is that is occupied by the second gentleman to whom he referred?

Mr. GILLETT. It is the position of Chief of the Division of Accounts in the Attorney General's office.

Mr. MONDELL. Is that supposed to be a highly confidential position?

Mr. GILLETT. I should say it is just about as highly confidential as the other. It had been occupied in the same way through all these Republican administrations by this gentleman who had worked up from the ranks, but it has suddenly become highly confidential and extremely personal.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Is it a Pennsylvanian who occupies the position of Chief of the Division of Accounts?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Does the gentleman know where he is from?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not. All it said in the presidential order was—

Charles Calvin Satterfield, of Pennsylvania.

I have not been able to learn anything more about him. I am sorry that the gentleman from Penusylvania can not enlighten me. I venture to say that there is some Democrat from Pennsylvania who could enlighten him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have taken more time than I meant to take. There is just one other word that I wish to say before taking my seat, a word of quite a different and more pleasing character. I have found much to criticize in this administration. With its domestic policies I am entirely at variance. But after it actually commenced war with Mexico I stated that, although I thought its Mexican policy was mistaken and shortsighted, yet inasmuch as the die was cast and actual war was waging, I should try in every way I could to assist and uphold our foreign policy, and I uttered no further criticism until our soldiers came back from Vera Cruz.

It seems to me events have justified my original position, and that by taking sides instead of preserving a strict neutrality we have made ourselves in some measure responsible for the anarchy now devastating Mexico, and if European nations were not too busy at home they would now demand of us that we protect the lives and property of their citizens there, or would themselves proceed to protect them regardless of the Monroe doctrine.

But I am glad to avow that the attitude of the administration during this European war has my full and unqualified approval. I think it has been wise, impartial, dignified, temperate, asserting our rights as neutrals firmly and considerately, acknowledging our duties as neutrals frankly and voluntarily, and displaying always a friendly and sympathetic spirit which ought to qualify us for any possible rôle of peacemaker. I trust this pacific and unexceptionable disposition will continue. I trust we shall not allow any sudden episode to stir hot blood and provoke retaliation. We must remember that the nations there are struggling desperately for their lives, are accustomed to the daily tortures and deaths of thousands, and in their intense absorption are liable to ignore or to forget that there are also nations in the world who are still at peace and who are still engaged in the pursuits of commerce and who have rights. While we must not waive or yield those rights, yet I think we must allow for the abnormal conditions and must not allow any sudden injury to draw us into that vortex of fiery passions and hates. We can afford to keep calm and cool. I thoroughly approve and indorse the temperate and pacific and genuinely neutral policy of the administration. I hope it will continue, and I shall be glad to continue my support. [Applause.]

Now I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman want to use that time now?

Mr. GILLETT. I supposed you would like to have me use the time. You have the right to go on if you please.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am perfectly willing to accede to the gentleman, whatever his wishes may be. We have agreed to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS].

Mr. GILLETT. Will that end the debate this evening?

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman from Michigan wish to go on?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I think perhaps after the other gentleman talks we may as well adjourn.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman from Michigan wishes to use any time, I am perfectly willing to yield it to him.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I do not want to inconvenience the other gentlemen.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not in the least.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, when the President speaks on political subjects his words convey the purposes and policies of the Chief Magistrate of the greatest Nation on earth.

Through the President the executive power of the United States speaks, not only to the people of the United States, but to the people of other nations.

The words of the President then should carry with them the dignity of his great office, and the greatness of the office should inspire the man who holds it to strive to express in his life, character, and public utterances the ideals of the Nation.

More than any other public utterance of the President during this administration his Indianapolis speech will serve to give historians and the people generally a mental photograph of the man.

In making that speech he spoke from the complex and contradictory standpoints of a militant partisan, the captain of a political team, an alleged independent, a historian, and the President of all the people.

Appreciation of executive responsibility and the responsibility of a political party intrusted with representative power have seldom been more nobly expressed than in the President's inaugural address.

The coarser phases of mere political swaggering were never more startlingly obtruded than in his Indianapolis speech.

When this administration shall have passed into the wake of time and the historian shall seek among the published utterances of the President material from which to estimate his character, he will find beneath the gloss of rhetoric a compound of idealism, brain power, will power, arrogance, self-confidence, and a somewhat conscious geniality not far removed from the frost line; idealism, mixed with shrewd ability to use patronage and preferment to bend his party followers to his purposes, notwithstanding a thinly veiled disdain for them; self-confidence, apparently troubled with no introspective doubts about his own infallibility, which sought to impose his own ideas by presidential thought suggestion, in direct conflict with the visible, every-day facts of human experience; and from time to time there will be found to have broken out a sort of swashbuckler arrogance like that exhibited at Indianapolis, curiously at variance with a self-centered and studious temperament.

THE INALIENABLE RIGHT TO SPILL BLOOD.

The verbal picture of himself by himself of "Woodrow sitting back in his chair and chuckling" is one which the American people, regardless of party, would be glad to have stricken from the permanent record.

Even to quote the statement seems like derogation from the dignity of the presidential office.

No citizen of the United States will have a higher opinion of the presidential office after reading it.

And why did "Woodrow chuckle"? Because he says he knew that when the great newspapers of the country "thundered with rising scorn" at his "watchful-waiting" policy public opinion would sustain him, because he claims to have a "reckless enthusiasm about human liberty" in Mexico.

And yet I doubt if public opinion will approve of his conception of his duty and the duty of the Nation toward the kind of "human liberty" that rides in predatory bands in Mexico.

"Have not the European nations," he asks, "taken as long as they wanted and spilt as much blood as they pleased in settling their affairs, and shall we deny that to Mexico because she is weak?"

And, having "a reckless enthusiasm about human liberty," he says, "so far as my influence goes, while I am President nobody shall interfere with them."

In view of our obligations under the Monroe doctrine, the President must have realized that his declaration was somewhat safer than it would have been before the European war.

Having a great enthusiasm for human liberty, does the President consider the sordid and ignoble strife among ruffian aspirants for power in Mexico as a fight for liberty?

Having a great enthusiasm for human liberty, does the President believe, and "chuckle" because he believes, that the people of the United States look upon the business of killing, torturing, ravishing, and destruction in Mexico as an inalienable right of a weak people which a strong people are not only under no obligations to restrain, but are under obligations to guard from interference for such time as the business may require?

I doubt if this picture of "Woodrow chuckling" while the United States, under his personal management and direction, forms a ring and orders other nations to stand back while torture, bloodshed, and destruction of property proceed in Mexico, will appeal to the people of the United States; and I doubt if the President, as a historian, will approve of what he said as a rhetorician speaking under the enthusiasm of the occasion.

TWO POLICIES.

The policy of nonintervention may be best, but let us not convert our attitude of nonintervention into one of approving protection of extermination.

We had a choice between two policies in Mexico, one the policy of pacification without war by the use of all the resources of international law—the policy of self-respecting protection of the lives and property of our own citizens, and mindful of our responsibilities under the Monroe doctrine, the policy of protection of the lives and property of the citizens and subjects of other nations.

The other policy was that of armed intervention with sufficient force to restore order and establish government.

Most Americans are devoutly glad that we are not at war with Mexico and that no more American lives have been sacrificed.

We are willing to say little about a policy which declared our unwillingness to be "partisans of either party" and yet was partisan.

We are willing to say little of a policy that declared against intervention and kept on intervening.

We are willing to say little about the controversy as to whether 7 or 21 guns constituted a sufficient apology.

But we who went to war with Spain because of her treatment of Cuba; we who have established a stable government in the Philippine Islands are scarcely willing to let the full definition of our relation to Mexico stand as a double "watchful waiting" policy which not only watches, waits, and approves while the months of bloodshed and destruction lengthen into years, but watches and waits to keep off interference.

EMOTIONS AND IDEAS.

Himself having "reckless enthusiasm," the President says what he misses in Republicans is that "they do not seem to have any great emotions," and have not had a new idea for 30 years.

Let us examine this. Under our system of government, Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and the governed consent by majorities.

The Republican Party came into being in the white heat of a national crisis over the issue of slavery, and with the exception of the bankrupt years from 1893 to 1897 and the lean years beginning with this administration, it has represented the purposes and ideals of a majority of the people of the United States so far as their purposes and ideals could be expressed in a political way.

During all that time this Government has "never repudiated an obligation to its creditors, or to humanity"; it has never struck a blow except for humanity, and it has never struck its colors.

To say that a majority of the people of the United States have had no great emotions and no new ideas for 30 years is to say that we have been a stagnant people in the time of our most rapid progress.

Much as we might like to preserve the President's reputation for accuracy as a historian, he can be easily refuted with his own History of the American People as evidence.

This administration has talked a good deal about new things—new ideas; the new freedom; the new spirit; the new era; the new America—but little has been said about new taxes and the new deficit.

Ideas count if they take on the shape of things accomplished, but the fact that an idea is new is no evidence of its value.

In politics and philosophy some ideas become principles, and a party that has a new set of principles every campaign is not a reliable party; and a party that repudiates its platform principles is not a reliable party; and a President who leads his party in repudiating its platform principles and then talks about teamwork is at least inconsistent.

Let us compare ideas for a moment. In 1896 the Democratic Party declared for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1, and proposed that 40-cent silver dollars so coined should be legal tender for the payment of debts, public and private, contracted at 100 cents on the dollar.

There was nothing new about that. It was old as dishonesty.

We said that a free, open mint is a place run by the Government where bullion goes in bullion and comes out coin; that the touch of the Government stamp does not create value; and that for sovereign power to make 40-cent silver dollars legal tender in payment of debts contracted at 100 cents on the dollar was dishonest.

There was nothing new about that. It was as old as honesty.

In 1900 the Democratic Party declared that the Constitution automatically extended itself into and over the Philippine Islands and that the Philippine Islands thereby became an integral part of the Union, but at the same time they proposed to withdraw the Constitution from the Philippine Islands and dispose of them.

There was nothing new about that. The claim that the Constitution extended itself was a part of the Calhoun doctrine that the Constitution extended itself and thereby slavery over free soil; and the proposition to withdraw the Constitution and dispose of the islands was a part of the logic of disunion.

By resolution of April 20, 1898, we demanded that Spain should relinquish her authority over Cuba, and gave the President power to use the land and naval forces of the United States to enforce the resolution.

At the same time we declared our purpose not to exercise sovereignty over Cuba except for pacification, but to give the Government of Cuba to her own people and unfurl for her her own flag among the nations of the earth.

That was a new idea in the history of the world, and we kept our word.

Early in the morning of May 1, 1898, Admiral Dewey steamed into the harbor of Manila and quietly gave an order which has become historic, "When you are ready, you may fire, Gridley."

We entered into possession of the Philippine Islands, not for exploitation, but to give them law, order, schools, courts, government, and security of life, property, and civil rights.

That was a new idea which makes every American prouder of his flag.

We annexed the Hawaiian Islands, posted them like sentinels to guard our western coast, and organized them into a Territory.

We reorganized Porto Rico and gave her $5,000,000 to repair the devastation of a hurricane.

We defined Alaskan boundaries by peaceful arbitration.

We joined in the relief of the legations beleaguered in Pekin.

We turned back to China the unexpended indemnity balance and with it China has been sending students to American colleges.

We recognized the Republic of Panama and dug the Panama Canal largely out of current revenues.

Meanwhile we were paying the running expenses of the greatest nation on earth and no man who wanted to work was out of a job.

In 1887 we passed "An act to regulate commerce," amended it from time to time, and overhauled it completely in 1906.

In 1890 we passed the "act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

In 1903 we created a Department of Commerce and Labor with a Bureau of Corporations to compel publicity, and we passed a physical valuation of railroads law.

Not only did we frame laws to protect consumers, independent producers, and shippers from the combined power of cooperating monopoly, but we passed the pure-food law to prevent diligent scoundrels from adulterating, vitiating, and falsely labeling foods and drugs.

Not only that, but we passed the safety-appliance law, the employers' liability law, the law limiting the working hours of railroad men, the boiler-inspection law, and the railroad accidents law.

Not only that, but we passed the parcels-post and the postal-savings laws.

Not only that, but we established a Childrens' Bureau and we passed a child-labor law for the District of Columbia.

Not only that, but we passed an eight-hour day law for Government employees and a law for their compensation for injuries.

Not only that, but we created a Bureau of Mines; and we framed laws to irrigate deserts off the face of the map.

The President was mistaken. He was not speaking as a historian. He was speaking as a biased partizan, who for the time being had taken down the partition between facts and imagination.

A STATE OF MIND.

The President says there is nothing the matter with American business except "a state of mind."

Well, what is the cause of the state of mind? "As a man thinketh, so is he."

What causes men to think there is something wrong with business?

In one of Cesare's powerful cartoons in the New York Sun, three threadbare figures, a man and a woman with a child clinging to her skirts, pinched with cold, are standing in the slush of a city pavement in the bitter winds of winter, and the man and the woman are reading a notice in a window that the Belgian relief fund has reached a million and a half dollars. The cartoon is called "Some American Neutrals."

This little shivering group illustrates the condition of thousands of men and women in America.

And the President, with uplifted eyes at Indianapolis, says:

It goes very much to my heart to see how many men are at a disadvantage and are without guides and helpers.

Disadvantage! They are starving. Guides and helpers! They want work.

And then he asks:

Don't you think it would be a pretty good idea for the Democratic Party to undertake a systematic method of helping the working men of America?

We do! And if the starving, shivering, homeless men and women out of work in America could answer the President's question, they would answer it in tones that would disturb the tranquil self-sufficiency of the White House that one "systematic method" would be to repeal the Underwood blight and pass a law to protect American labor and American industry.

For a President to talk about depressed business and starved labor as a "state of mind" in the presence of bread lines, bankruptcy, and closed factories is fatuous pretense.

When they needed men in the western harvest fields last summer, he says he had notices put up in the post offices to get men and the job together.

That was a brilliant idea, worthy of a theorist. Everybody knows when grain grows ripe for the harvest and for years men who had the money to pay for transportation have flocked to the harvest fields for work.

But that is a job that grows out of the ground, which this administration so far has not been able to destroy, notwithstanding the removal of duty on farm products.

That is a job created by the sun, the rain, the dew, and the soil, which tariff-tinkering theorists have not been able to destroy; and next summer's crop will grow large, stimulated by a demand created by bloodshed in Europe, not by reason of any help from this administration.

It is a different kind of a job and furnishes a different kind of work from the 18,280 commercial failures compiled by Bradstreet's for last year.

These failures furnished jobs for courts, lawyers, receivers, auctioneers, and all the parasites of disaster.

They were the direct product of this administration. They brought the men and jobs together, fat jobs—the mortuary rites of business.

Our people are willing and anxious to avail themselves of facilities now gathering rust and cobwebs, but business threatened with bankruptcy, pestered by political nagging, and men out of work, forced to starve or be fed by charity, are compelled to wait for the passing of this Democratic visitation.

WHAT HE DID NOT SAY.

The President went out to Indiana to justify his administration and to invite the independent voter to merge his independence in the Democratic Party, but he said nothing about high prices.

He forgot to tell his audience that he and his party had gone into power on a platform declaring that protection was the unconstitutional cause of high prices, which they promised to reduce by "legislation that would not injure or destroy any legitimate industry," but that they had injured and destroyed legitimate industries and had not lowered prices.

He did not remind the farmers in his audience that he and his party had reduced and removed the duties on farm products to make things cheaper for the people who live in cities.

He did not refer to the working of his plan to "sharpen the wits" of business men by requiring them to figure on how to pay an income tax out of the profits of business that paid no profits and to "sharpen the wits" of laboring men by compelling them to figure on how to pay for food and clothes and rent while looking for work when there was no work.

This administration went into power with a full treasury and abundant revenues, but the President did not tell his audience anything about the approaching deficit.

He did not tell them that our Treasury balance has declined from $161,612,615 on the 30th day of June last to $42,387,119 this morning, and that by July 1 next this administration is likely to have to sell bonds to raise money to run the Government.

On the same day on which the President talked at Indianapolis the Democratic chairman of the Appropriations Committee stated in the House that he had "given considerable study to the public finances and to the probable situation of the Treasury during the next fiscal year" and that he could "not escape the conclusion that there will be a deficit in the Treasury in the next fiscal year which will be unquestionably $30,000,000 and may reach the sum of $80,000,000 or $100,000,000."

He stated that he did "not state these figures as mere idle guesses," but as his opinion "after a very thorough and exhaustive examination of our probable receipts and expenditures."

The President did not tell his audience that we are running behind at the rate of fourteen and a half million dollars a month and that by the end of the fiscal year we shall be running in debt at every tick of the clock, notwithstanding the income tax, the corporation tax, and the so-called emergency revenue tax.

He did not tell his audience that our revenues have steadily declined from $30,138,049 in October, 1913, to $14,890,982 in December, 1914.

He did not tell his audience that three years ago we were buying and selling among ourselves to the amount of $35,000,000,000; that that money was paid by Americans to Americans for the wages of American labor and the products of American farms and factories and that since that time we have been levying contributions on the necessities of our people and are soon to have to mortgage their resources by selling bonds.

He did not tell them that one of the reasons why our revenues, derived from importations, plus internal revenue, plus the income tax, plus the corporation tax, plus the emergency tax, and plus miscellaneous receipts, is not sufficient to pay the running expenses of this administration is because the appropriations of this Congress have been greater than the appropriations of any Congress since the foundation of our Government, notwithstanding the Democratic platform pledge of economy.

He did not tell them that these appropriations were made notwithstanding the repeated protests of the Democratic chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who on April 10 last reminded Democrats of their platform pledges of "economy and the abolishment of useless offices" and told them they had "unnecessarily piled up the public expenditures until the Democratic Party had become the laughingstock of the country."

He did not say anything about the encroachment of the executive branch of the Government upon the legislative branch, contrary to the principles of the Constitution.

He did not mention the use of executive influence to control legislative action.

He did not mention any of these things to his audience, but he talked to them about ideas and emotions and liberty and the New Freedom and teamwork.

He did not discuss whether representatives should represent the people or obey the command of the Executive, but he told his audience he had implicit confidence in the people.

However, as Col. Harvey, of the North American Review, casually remarks:

That is not the question. Quite the contrary, we should say.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. METZ].

Mr. METZ. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on the necessity of doing something on the shipping question. I am sorry I did not have the information when I addressed the House before. I want to point out to the Members the necessity of doing something now.

I have in my hand several letters which I have received from exporters, and among them is one from a large shipper heretofore of machinery and tools. I ask to have this letter printed as a part of my remarks, because it shows completely the trouble shippers are having in shipping to neutral countries. It points out that the Swedish Government was compelled by Great Britain to give a guaranty that the tools and machinery shipped to Sweden were intended for Swedish consumption. In spite of this guaranty and the declaration of the shippers here, the Swedish Steamship Line refuses to accept machinery for Sweden, because their ships are held up in England and searched and detained. Therefore they will not carry the goods.

The same situation arises in regard to rubber. The embargo on rubber has been raised under certain conditions. One condition is that the American manufacturer must sign an agreement which covers not only the rubber obtained through Great Britain but all rubber he receives or had on hand, no matter where or when he got it. In the case of export to any neutral country on earth of any article made from or containing rubber, the goods must be shipped to Liverpool and there reshipped by the British Government. This makes Liverpool the clearing house for the whole world for such products and puts the British Government in absolute control. This is not only so in regard to rubber goods, but includes even carpet sweepers and wash wringers, in the construction of which a very small amount of rubber is used—in the case of the carpet sweepers as a band on the wheels and in the case of the wash wringer on the squeeze rollers. Hundreds of other instances could be mentioned of products that are thus barred from international commerce because rubber forms an infinitesimal part of their construction. The steamship companies are afraid to carry these goods because of the liability of being held up, and the agreement which Great Britain insists upon receiving from those who obtain rubber compels them to submit to the British consul in New York a record of all goods that may be exported in which rubber is used. We are therefore practically closed out from all the markets reached by neutral vessels, such as Italian, Norwegian, Swedish, Danish, and Spanish.

If an American buyer should own a quantity of rubber in neutral countries that produce it, such as Brazil, he is at the mercy of British ships to bring it to the United States. The British ships refuse to carry any rubber not controlled by the British Government; so the tie-up is absolute. If ever there was an agreement in restraint of trade, certainly the conditions imposed by the British Government upon those who use rubber in any form in their business constitute a model for the absolute accomplishment of the purpose for which it was intended.

A letter from a firm, which I had the other day, complains that a cargo of apples sent to Sweden for consumption in Sweden, accompanied by the required Swedish certificate, had been held up for two or three weeks in England until the apples had rotted, and then it was released and sent on to Sweden. That concern will put in a claim through this Government for the damage sustained.

Such are the conditions under which our export trade is suffering. The restriction on copper exports has resulted in the loss of sales of copper to Germany and Austria, and steamers of neutral countries are also afraid to carry this product to neutral countries. But beyond this, the fact that copper is being replaced largely in the industries by other metals will cause us damage of a more serious and permanent nature. I have a letter from one of the largest concerns in Germany, which compares with the General Electric Co. in this country, giving details as to the extent copper is being replaced by iron or galvanized iron or iron covered with bronze.

In the first place, so far as copper for war purposes is concerned, they state that Germany has sufficient copper to last all through the present war, no matter how long it may last, and as many more wars as might follow. It is for the industries, and for industrial purposes entirely, that its use will be curtailed, not only during this war, but for the future. Iron wire is being used for electric light and power transmission, and an alloy of iron and aluminum for cables. In machinery, where brass and bronze were used because of somewhat easier manipulation, they are being replaced by iron. In shipbuilding, where the use of copper, brass, or bronze has been largely one of habit, either hollow bronze or iron covered with bronze is replacing the heavier parts for which copper was used.

It stands to reason that if the industries of Germany adapt themselves to these conditions it will not be long before other countries take up and employ the same substitutes. Ways of manipulation will be found to make them commercially advantageous, and the only country to suffer will be the United States with its great copper output. All these things indicate the necessity of some way of getting our goods abroad without being dependent upon the whims or arbitrary rulings of the British Government and the influence it has upon the foreign shipping controlled by neutral nations. The neutral ships do not dare take any freight that may at all be questioned. The charterers can not take the chance of being held up indefinitely at the English ports.

In addition to the hampered shipping, the insurance question also plays a very important part in our export trade. The Government's War Risk Bureau has done incalculable good so far as shipments in American ships are concerned by forcing private companies to write insurance and controlling rates; it ought to be extended to American cargoes in other neutral vessels. It is simply impossible to reinsure cargoes to which Great Britain objects for any other countries except Great Britain, France, and Russia. The English companies refuse absolutely to write such insurance, while the means of communicating by cable with companies of other countries, including neutrals, that might take the risk depend upon the British censors allowing the messages to go through, which makes the chance of getting insurance a slim one indeed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. METZ. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman add also to the list that he has given the case where England, in her imperious way, holds shipments up?

Mr. METZ. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Numerous instances have been called to my attention by manufacturers of leather in Milwaukee where shipments have been held up and neutral ships have declined to receive those goods because they know that their vessels will be held up on the high seas.

Mr. METZ. Yes; and that holds good, too, if the article be not wholly composed of leather, but contains only a piece of leather, as, for instance, in the case of the carpet sweeper. A shipment of carpet sweepers would be held up because the little wheels that run on the carpet are bound with strips of rubber. This same is true with regard to leather. If there is a piece of leather on an article in the shipment it will be held up, as, for instance, furniture that is leather covered.

These are the facts that I wanted to bring to the attention of the committee and thus show in what a precarious condition our exporters of any goods, except munitions or war and other products to the allies, find themselves because of our lack of American ships.

The letter to which I referred follows:

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation of to-day, we hereby beg to state that shipping of goods in our line, consisting principally of machine tools and small tools and grinding wheels for use in machine shops, has become practically impossible owing to the interference of the British Government. While we do not feel disposed to complain very strongly at the endeavor of the British Government to prevent the shipping of our goods to Germany and Austria, we certainly consider it a most wanton act of the British Government to disturb and practically wipe out our business in American goods with the neutral nations of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. Up to a short time ago we have been able to forward machinery, etc., on orders received from our Stockholm and Copenhagen houses to ports such as Gothenburg and Copenhagen. The steamship companies, forced by British inspectors, demanded from us that we produce certificates from the Swedish Government through the Swedish legation in Washington guaranteeing that the goods shipped by us are bona fide, intended for Swedish consumption, and that they will not be reshipped to Germany or Austria. We always procured these certificates in the required form, and would have been glad to submit this proof for all our future shipments.

In spite of this guaranty from the Swedish Government, as well as our own declaration under oath that our goods will not be reshipped to Germany or Austria, it seems that the British Government caused the steamship companies having machines as part of their cargo so much trouble and delay that they have been forced to refuse any further cargoes consisting of machinery or tools.

Up to a few days ago we had space engaged on Danish steamers sailing between now and March 1, but have now received notification from the steamship agents that they will not accept any more freight from us, regardless of whether these shipments are intended for Sweden, Denmark, or any other country. This, you will understand, is quite an arbitrary ruling, and as far as our Stockholm and Copenhagen houses are concerned it would mean practically ruin of their business on account of not being able to get goods from us owing to the mere suspicion of the British Government that these machines shipped to Sweden or Denmark might eventually be forwarded from there to Germany. Incidentally American manufacturers of machines and tools are losing their regular export trade with Scandinavian countries.

The manner in which the British Government inspects steamship cargoes for Sweden and Denmark on the docks in New York may also be of great interest to you. The British Government has two British inspectors on the steamship dock, and they open every single case by removing a board or two to see whether the statements on the manifests are true. In other words, statements of American citizens are not accepted by the British Government as fact, and we are left entirely at the mercy of the inspector of these ships, regardless of their knowledge of the material shipped.

You will see from the above that not only shipping to Germany is impossible, but according to the latest developments whereby neutral steamship lines refuse machinery freight, also shipments of our goods to Sweden, Norway, and Denmark are at a deadlock. The steamship lines, of course, are not to be blamed, and it is quite natural that they will refuse any freight objectionable to the British inspectors, as they do not wish to run the risk of having their steamers detained for a month or so in British ports, which causes them a tremendous loss.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter or statement from Mr. George C. Potter, of Johnstown, N. Y., on the question of the tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

LOW TARIFF AND FAILURES—SIGNIFICANT FACTS DISCLOSED BY MERCANTILE AGENCY REPORTS.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s report of failures for 21 years shows clearly the disastrous effect of low tariff on the business life of the country.

Figures given are from Dun's Review, January 9, 1915. We have indicated the high and low tariff years:

Years.	Number of failures.	Number of business concerns.	Per cent of failures.	Remarks.
1914	18,280	1,655,496	1.10	Low tariff: Wilson-Underwood bill.
1913	16,037	1,616,517	.99	Protective tariff: Payne-Aldrich and Dingley bills.
1912	15,452	1,564,279	.98
1911	13,441	1,525,024	.81
1910	12,652	1,515,143	.80
1909	12,924	1,486,389	.80
1908	15,690	1,447,554	1.08
1907	11,725	1,418,075	.82
1906	10,682	1,392,949	.77
1905	11,520	1,357,455	.85
1904	12,199	1,320,172	.92
1903	12,069	1,281,481	.94
1902	11,615	1,253,172	.93
1901	11,002	1,219,242	.90
1900	10,774	1,174,300	.92
1899	9,337	1,147,595	.81
1898	12,186	1,105,830	1.10	Low tariff: Cleveland administration.
1897	13,351	1,058,521	1.26
1896	15,088	1,151,579	1.31
1895	13,197	1,209,282	1.09
1894	13,885	1,114,174	1.25

Of the 21 years given it will be noted that 6 years were under low or free-trade tariff while 15 years were under protective tariff.

	Per cent.
Average percentage of failures for the 6 years of low tariff	1.18
Average percentage of failures for the 15 consecutive years of protective tariff	.89
Excess of failures in low-tariff years	32.6

These are mercantile agency figures, not political "bunk."

Low tariff has not reduced the cost of living, but it has in every year of its existence destroyed the opportunities of earning a livelihood by putting American factories out of business and American workmen out of employment. The only "expansion" which can be found in any low-tariff year is one of record-breaking business mortality and business depression.

With reference to the increase of failures during 1914, R. G. Dun & Co. say:

"This in a measure was traceable to the effects of the European war, which accentuated the depression in trade and exerted a particularly unfavorable influence on conditions in the South."

This refers, of course, to the cotton States and the collapse of cotton prices; but upon analyzing the figures, it appears that the increase of failures in all these States combined—North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas—is only 536, while in the three Middle Atlantic States—New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania—the increase was 690.

Of the Southern States, Florida shows the largest increase—404 failures in 1914 against 165 in 1913—but Florida can hardly be classed as a cotton State; and if the balance of the country was prosperous, the luxuries grown in Florida, such as fruits and early vegetables, would find ready sale at good prices. Oranges and grapefruit have not been bringing enough on the New York market to pay for the boxes and transportation, and this, no doubt, accounts for much of Florida's business mortality.

The real cause of the present widespread depression is clearly shown in the figures of the United States customhouse. These prove conclusively that closed factories and factories working on greatly reduced time all over the country are not the result of the war—on the contrary, this has been the means of temporarily opening many of them—but are the direct result of our present free-trade tariff, under which a credit balance in our favor during 1913 of over $691,000,000 has been changed in five months—April, May, June, July, and August—of 1914 to a debit balance of over $39,000,000, or at the rate of about $100,000,000 per year against us.

That is to say, the volume of imports has been so great under the Wilson-Underwood-Simmons tariff that instead of receiving from the rest of the world nearly $700,000,000 net per year for goods which we sell them, we are paying them under the present tariff about $100,000,000 net for goods which they sell us, a change against us of nearly $800,000,000, or about $66,000,000 a month.

If American factories and American workmen were permitted to produce a part of these goods, valued at $66,000,000 per month, instead of our friends across the water, everyone who wanted to work could be employed at good wages—double or two and a half times the wages paid abroad for the same work in any line. There is no way that this standard of wages can be maintained without a sufficient tariff to fully cover the difference in cost of production here and abroad.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an article from the Cosmopolitan Magazine for the month of October, 1914, on the Senator from Michigan [Mr. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[The article referred to appears elsewhere in to-day's RECORD.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 21161. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15557. An act for the relief of Anna Miller; and

H. R. 18745. An act in relation to the location of a navigable channel of the Calumet River in Illinois.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 26, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Attorney General of the United States submitting estimates of $50,000 for protecting interests of the United States in matters and suits affecting withdrawn oil lands, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1617), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. KEY of Ohio, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 7509) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1447), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 6981) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1448), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7212) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1449), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7507) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1450), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SHERWOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 7566) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1451), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7598) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1452), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARLIN (by request): A bill (H. R. 21557) for the purpose of preserving life at sea, etc.; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 26, 1915.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 19, 1915.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MOTHER'S DAY ASSOCIATION.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to present some reports from a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. From the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16298) to incorporate the Mother's Day Association, and I submit a report (No. 1040) thereon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. There can be no objection to its passage, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a unanimous report?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. SWANSON. I shall not object, unless it leads to debate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If there is any debate, I will withdraw it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the bill read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to the end of the first section.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, that is as far as I care to have the bill read. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if this is a corporation that can not be organized under the general law applicable to corporations in the District of Columbia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not, I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the bill read through.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well.

The Secretary resumed, and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] that the bill may go over I withdraw my request for unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

DAUGHTERS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. From the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 2504) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution," and I submit a report (No. 1042) thereon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. I will state just in a word, with the permission of the Senate, that the Daughters of the American Revolution are already incorporated. The amount of property in the act of incorporation which they are permitted to hold is limited to $500,000 in value. They have already acquired property exceeding that amount. They have erected a splendid building here. The bill proposes an amendment of the original act of incorporation to this extent only, that it increases the amount of property they can hold not to exceed $1,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am directed by the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 6111) to incorporate the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 1041) thereon.

Mr. WHITE. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that the bill may go over the same as the preceding bill went over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

WAGES ON FOREIGN AND AMERICAN SHIPS.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to call up the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me to make a request?

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield temporarily to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a statement concerning the wages on foreign and American ships.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COST OF OPERATING FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS TRANSFERRED TO AMERICAN FLAG.

30 CHURCH STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y., February 2½, 1915.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant, addressed to Mr. J. A. Farrell, president United States Steel Corporation, has been referred to us for attention, as this company is the subsidiary of the corporation which owns the foreign-built steamers recently transferred to the American flag. The present and former scale of wages on our steamers and the percentage of increase is shown in the following statement:

Wages of captains under American scale vary according to seniority.

Wages of other officers and the engineers are fixed, being same on all steamers.

Crew.	British.				American.
	First year.	Second year.	Third year.	Average.	Average.[1]	Increase.
	£ s.	£ s.	£	£ s. d.		P. ct.
Captain	25 0	.....	.....	25 0 0=$121.66	(1)	35.6
Chief officer	14 0	15 0	16	15 0 0= 73.00	$90	23.3
Second officer	10 10	11 0	12	11 3 4= 54.34	70	28.8
Third officer	9 0	.....	.....	9 0 0= 43.80	60	37.0
Chief engineer	20 0	21 0	22	21 0 0= 102.20	150	46.8
First assistant engineer	14 0	15 0	16	15 0 0= 73.00	100	37.0
Second assistant engineer	10 10	11 0	12	11 3 4= 54.34	90	65.6
Third assistant engineer	8 0	8 10	9	8 10 0= 41.36	80	93.4

[1] $150–$180, average $165.

Safe-navigation money to captains, $300 per year, payable annually January 1, on showing a clean record for the previous 12 months.

The wages of the following members of the crew vary on the different steamers, depending upon the supply available and the port at which signed on. The steamship San Francisco is quoted as an example:

Crew.	British.	American.	Increase.
	£ s.		Per cent.
Chief steward	8 0=$38.93	$55	41.2
Second steward	4 0= 19.47	25	28.4
Messroom steward	3 0= 14.60	22	50.7
Chief cook	7 0= 34.07	40	17.4
Second cook	5 0= 24.33	25	2.8
Carpenter	7 0= 34.07	40	17.4
Boatswain	6 10= 31.63	35	10.7
Sailors	5 10= 36.76	28	4.6
Firemen	5 10= 26.76	32	19.6
Others	6 0= 29.20	35	19.9
Donkeyman	6 10= 31.63	35	10.7

Owing to the unsettled conditions which have prevailed throughout the world since the outbreak of the present war in Europe, the increased cost of operation in the other departments can not be fairly stated, as we have no basis upon which to make a definite comparison.

Yours, very truly,

UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS CO.,
JOHN HUGHES, General Agent.

DISPOSAL OF UNIFORMS, ETC.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7051) to authorize the disposal of clothing or uniforms which have become unserviceable or unsuitable. It relates to the giving away of uniforms which have been ruined to such an extent that they are not fit for apparel.

Mr. SWANSON. I can not yield for anything except reports of committees.

Mr. POMERENE. If this bill leads to any discussion, I shall not press it.

Mr. SWANSON. So many Senators have asked me to yield to allow them to move the consideration of bills on the calendar, and I have refused to do so, that I would not like to make an exception. Although I am very fond of the Senator from Ohio, while I have concluded to yield for reports, I can not yield to call up any bills from the calendar.

HOURS OF LABOR.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me to submit a report on a bill from the Interstate Commerce Committee and to ask for its immediate consideration?

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield for the presentation of the report; and if there is no objection to the consideration of the bill and no debate upon it, I will yield to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce I report back the bill H. R. 17893, to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a brief statement. This bill simply amends the hours-of-service act by fixing a minimum penalty. It has been repeatedly recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and is found necessary in the proper administration of the hours-of-service law. Under the law as it now exists the maximum penalty of not exceeding $500 may be fixed, but there is no minimum penalty; and the fact that there is no minimum penalty has encouraged violations of the law.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I would ask the Senator from Arkansas what is the minimum penalty fixed by the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. The minimum penalty fixed in the bill is $100. The maximum penalty under the present law is $500.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the bill had better go over for a day. After I examine it I do not believe I will object to its being called up.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I just make one statement to the Senator from Pennsylvania? The difficulty arises out of the congested condition in the Senate and the procedure here. We are frequently able to get the consideration of bills as they are reported, but are not able to get consideration of bills after they have gone on the calendar. If the Senator desires to object, for the present I shall ask leave to withdraw the report and to present it later.

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator will kindly withdraw the report and let me have an opportunity to look over the bill, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission is granted to withdraw the report.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN GEORGIA.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Texas to present a conference report.

Mr. CULBERSON. I present a conference report, and ask for its adoption.

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield for its consideration if it does not precipitate any debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17869) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of Georgia having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

On the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

C. A. CULBERSON,
HOKE SMITH,
C. D. CLARK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. C. FLOYD,
JOSEPH TAGGART,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, does that mean the final disposition of the question?

Mr. CULBERSON. No; it does not. I shall ask for a further conference.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, what is the character of the report which has been agreed upon?

Mr. CULBERSON. There were three Senate amendments in disagreement. The Senate receded on one, the House on another, and the third amendment, numbered 1, is still in disagreement, it being the amendment relating to the publication of indorsements for the district judge who may be appointed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that there were three amendments made by the Senate striking out three sections of the House bill. The first section of the House bill provided for making public the indorsements of the judge. The second section provided for the distribution of duties between the judges.

Mr. CULBERSON. It provided for a temporary appointment, if the Senator will allow me to make that suggestion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, the temporary appointment was the second amendment; that when the senior judge should pass from the bench there should be no appointment to fill the vacancy. That was the second amendment. The third amendment was as to the question of apportioning the work. The House bill provided that the senior circuit judge should apportion the work between the two judges. The Senate struck that out because of the general provision applicable to that matter. The conference committee disagreed, and intend to ask a further conference on the question of publicity. On the question of the appointment to fill the vacancy, the House agreed to the Senate amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What was the Senate amendment on that? I have forgotten. Was it No. 2 of which the Senator spoke?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senate receded from its amendment No. 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why not let the Secretary read the clause? It is very brief.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Very well.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia senior in commission such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What was the disposition of that item?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senate amendment struck out the section. The Senate recedes from that amendment and allows the section to remain in the bill. The appointment of an additional judge is temporary only; that is to say, after the vacancy caused by the death or resignation of the senior judge, it will not be filled by another appointment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought not to recede from that amendment. I will say that I served as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary on this bill, and that subcommittee was unanimous in reporting in favor of striking this provision out of the bill. The reason I objected to it was that I thought such a provision constituted a reflection upon the sitting judge, and I did not want to see anything in the bill which could be so construed. I am willing to provide for an additional judge in Georgia, but I hope nothing will be put into the bill which can be construed as a reflection upon the judge who now occupies the bench in that district.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] will remember that this is not a novel feature in a bill of this sort. We have provided for additional judges and also provided that the place should not be filled when the senior judge passes into retirement. It is not a new provision, but is the same provision that has been placed in bills of this character heretofore.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it be in order now to move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The first question is on agreeing to the part of the report upon which the conferees have agreed.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to doing that; but, as I understand the motion as it is made, it would carry with it a disagreement as to amendment numbered 1. I wish to make a motion at the proper time——

Mr. CULBERSON. I intend to move, after the report is accepted, that the Senate further insist upon its amendment numbered 1; that it ask for a further conference with the House; and that the Chair appoint the conferees, following the usual course. The Senator's motion could then come up on that; that is, the question which he suggests would then arise.

Mr. NORRIS. With that understanding, I have no objection to the first motion.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, having charge of the bill which is the unfinished business, I could not consent to yield if the Senator from Nebraska is going to make a motion to recede, which I know will precipitate a debate. If the Senator insists on making that motion to recede, I must decline to yield further.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say to the Senator that, while it might bring on a debate, I have no disposition to debate it. Every Senator understands the situation. I have previously debated the matter in the Senate; but I want to get a roll call on the motion. I will not discuss it, except to briefly explain the proposition.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will yield for a motion to be made to agree to the report, and then let the further disposition of the matter go over.

Mr. NORRIS. Let it lie on the table, then.

Mr. SWANSON. It will lie on the table. As I understand, a motion will be made by the Senator from Texas to agree to the report of the conference committee. If that is agreed to, then the Senator from Nebraska can make his motion.

Mr. CULBERSON. The motion to agree to the conference report is the pending question, as I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is agreed to, without objection. Nobody has objected to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Now, I enter a motion that the Senate further insist upon its amendment numbered 1, ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on that amendment, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer a motion which I think takes precedence over that, and that is, that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 1.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think that motion takes precedence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, it does; there is no doubt about that. It brings the two Houses together.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not yield further for the consideration of the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 105 to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and agrees to the same; insists upon its disagreement to all other amendments to the bill, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas, and Mr. DAVIS managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19906) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOON, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. MADDEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5295) to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 16305. An act to reimburse Henry Weaver, postmaster at Delmar, Ala., for money and stamps stolen from said post office at Delmar and repaid by him to the Post Office Department;

H. R. 17424. An act for the relief of Hunton Allen; and

H. R. 17842. An act for the relief of George Richardson.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Petaluma, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LANE. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon relating to postal savings deposits, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 7 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon on the 18th day of February, 1915, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State,
By S. A. KOZER, Deputy.

Senate joint memorial No. 7.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is a limit on the amount of money that may be deposited by any person in the postal savings banks of the United States; and

Whereas the rate of interest paid by the Federal Government upon such deposits is 2 per cent per annum; and

Whereas the postal savings are loaned to private banks at the rate of 2½ per cent: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That our Representatives and Senators in Congress be, and are hereby, memorialized and requested to use their best endeavors to secure the passage of a law providing that all limitations upon the amount that may be deposited in postal savings banks be removed, and that the rate of interest paid by the Federal Government upon such deposits be increased to 3 per cent per annum; and further

Resolved, That the money that may hereafter be deposited in postal savings banks shall be used as a basis for the formation of a rural-credit system in this country.

Adopted by the house February 16, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 9, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) Senate joint memorial No. 7, by Senator Dimick. J. W. Cochran, chief clerk. Filed February 18, 1915, at 10.50 o'clock a. m. Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, by S. A. Kozer, deputy.

Mr. LANE. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, relating to salmon and other food fishes in the Columbia River, Oreg., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Fisheries and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate concurrent resolution No. 5 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon on the 20th day of February, 1915, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State,
By S. A. KOZER, Deputy.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 5.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Legislatures of the States of Oregon and Washington did appoint committees from their respective bodies to confer each with the other and to recommend legislation necessary to be provided for the regulation, preservation, and protection of salmon and other food fishes in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Washington and Oregon have concurrent jurisdiction, and over waters within the boundaries of said States which might be of concurrent interest; and

Whereas said committees did meet in Portland, Oreg., on the 6th day of February, 1915, and did agree on the necessary measures and legislation to be enacted by the Legislatures of the States of Washington and Oregon, and in their reports to their respective bodies did recommend, "We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification by joint agreement by said States"; and

Whereas said report was adopted by both the house of representatives and the senate by the passage of senate concurrent resolution No. 4; and

Whereas the legislature did fulfill the recommendations by enactment of senate bill No. 265, which, in section 20, reads as follows:

"Section 20. Should Congress, by virtue of the authority invested in it under section 10, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, providing for compacts and agreements between States, ratifying the recommendations of the conference committees of the States of Oregon and Washington appointed to agree on the legislation necessary for the regulation, preservation, and protection of fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which said States have concurrent jurisdiction, and other waters within either State which would be affected by said concurrent interest, recommendation being as follows:

"'We further recommend that a resolution be passed by the Legislatures of Washington and Oregon whereby the ratification by Congress of the laws of the States of Oregon and Washington shall act as a treaty between said States, subject to modification only by joint agreement by said States'; and said recommendation having been approved by resolution adopted by adopting the report of the conference committee, then, and in that event, there shall exist between the States of Oregon and Washington a definite compact and agreement, the purport of which shall be substantially as follows:

"All laws and regulations now existing or which may be necessary for regulating, protecting, or preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, over which the States of Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction, or any other waters within either of said States which would affect said concurrent jurisdiction, shall be made, changed, altered, and amended, in whole or in part, only with the mutual consent and approbation of both States": Therefore be it

Resolved (the house concurring), That we urge upon Congress of the United States of America to enact appropriate legislation ratifying and confirming the compact and giving its consent to the compact and agreement between the States of Washington and Oregon as is required by section 10 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America.

Concurred in by the house February 19, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 16, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—HARVEY J. ARTERBURN.

On motion of Mr BRISTOW, it was Ordered That the papers filed with Senate bill 6253, granting a pension to Harvey J. Arterburn, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse action having been taken thereon.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19906) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PENROSE conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 105 to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, insisting upon its disagreement to all other amendments to the bill and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. GALLINGER conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present the conference report on the Army bill and ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 21, 28, 29, 30, 38, 50, 60, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 102, 103, and 105.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 15, 16, 25, 27, 31, 33, 34, 37, 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 51, 54, 56, 59, 62, 64, 69, 89, 90, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 104, 106, 108, 109, and 111, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$18,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,050,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "Three clerks, at $2,000 each per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$312,690"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That hereafter the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Army any officer under 50 years of age and with rank not above that of captain who may have been transferred heretofore or who may be transferred hereafter for physical disability from the active to the retired list of the Army by the action of any retiring board: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, and shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted: Provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical and professional examination for promotion as now provided for by law: Provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, within two years of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Army any officer who may have been transferred heretofore for physical disability from the active to the retired list of the Army by the action of any retiring board: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, and shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted: Provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical and professional examination for promotion as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That any officer who may have already been transferred from the retired list to the active list shall receive the benefits of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$640,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 15, line 25, of the bill strike out the comma after the amount "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,943,384.64"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,661,360"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,872,163"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,067,558"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,626,518"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,656,254"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$165,000" and strike out the rest of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That on and after October 1, 1915, no officer or enlisted man of the Army shall, except upon his own request, be required to serve in a single tour of duty for more than two years in the Philippine Islands, nor more than three years in the Panama Canal Zone, except in case of insurrection or of actual or threatened hostilities: Provided further, That the foregoing provision shall not apply to the organization known as the Philippine Scouts"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,693,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$45,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter when one bureau of the War or Navy Departments procures by purchase or manufacture stores or material of any kind or performs any service for another bureau of such departments the funds of the bureau or department for which the stores or material are to be procured or the service performed may be placed subject to the requisition of the bureau or department making the procurement or performing the service for direct expenditure by it: Provided, That when the stores being procured are for current issue during the year stores of equal value may be issued from stock on hand in place of any of those aforesaid"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 19, 58, 70, 107, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
HENRY A. DU PONT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator what are the amendments upon which the conferees have not been able to agree?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They are about four or five in number.

Mr. SMOOT. What subjects do they deal with?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We disagree on the $26,000 appropriation for the State of Montana, for the purchase of ground for a military reservation out there. We disagree as to the item of $200,000 for the purchase of grounds, and $200,000 further for the construction of buildings on the aviation grounds in California. We differ on the so-called Taylor system, the amendment of the House which was stricken out in the Senate; and we differ on the Articles of War. The Articles of War embrace 4, 5, 6, or 7 of the last items mentioned in the disagreement.

I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement, ask a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. DU PONT conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to amend the committee amendment on page 30. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Mr. Lodge moves to amend the amendment of the committee, which was offered as a substitute, by striking out the following:

> Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. GALLINGER. That, Mr. President, as I understand, is a part of the text of the House bill as it came to the Senate. I desire to be heard for a few moments on the motion.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds I should like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, page 4625 of the RECORD shows that the Chair announced:

> The ayes seem to have it.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] then said:

> I ask for the yeas and nays.

Immediately the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] asked for a division a division was granted; and after the Senate divided the Chair announced:

> The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is carried.

My parliamentary inquiry is, Has not the Senate already agreed to the LODGE amendment, and can a Senator wait until after the question is tested on a division and an adverse decision has been rendered, and then ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. When that matter came up upon the viva voce vote I asked for the yeas and nays. Pending that the Senator from Virginia asked for a division, and the Chair put the question on the division. As soon as that was through with, I demanded the yeas and nays, and the Chair announced a sufficient number of hands up.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it does not make any difference how many seconded the demand or who asked for the yeas and nays, the question is whether the yeas and nays were ordered before the question was determined. They were not so ordered.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will submit this suggestion to the Chair: The inquiry of the Senator from Florida, which amounts to a point of order, comes entirely too late. The Senate has ordered the yeas and nays. At that time, or before the yeas and nays had been ordered on the demand for them, the Senator might have made the point of order, but the point of order must be made before action is taken; and the Senate has ordered the yeas and nays.

I will say, in addition, that the RECORD will show that the Senator from Minnesota demanded the yeas and nays on the viva voce vote. Of course, it ought to have taken precedence of the demand for a division, if it had been seconded, but there was some confusion, and I am satisfied the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who was presiding at the time, believed that the Senator from Minnesota was in ample time to have the yeas and nays ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is this on page 4625 of the RECORD?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the second column?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There does not seem to have been any decision of the Chair that it was carried.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes; there was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where is it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, supposing the Chair said the amendment was carried on a division, and then a demand was made for the yeas and nays, the demand, of course, ought to have been entertained.

Mr. BRYAN. About midway on the page the Presiding Officer says:

> Those who are opposed will rise. [A pause.] The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is carried.

Now, Mr. President, everybody here knows why a division was asked instead of a demand for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It appears, however, that subsequently the Senator from Minnesota called for the yeas and nays, that the yeas and nays were ordered, and that no protest was made at the time.

Mr. BRYAN. There was some confusion. The point is, Mr. President, that after the question has been determined the only way to reopen it is by a motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the yeas and nays appear from the RECORD to have been ordered, and there was no objection taken at the time. So the Chair thinks the roll must be called.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on that point I will express surprise that the Senator from Florida should claim, even though it had been announced when the Senate divided that the ayes had it, that a demand for the yeas and nays could not then be entertained. It is so plain a matter that I am surprised that so experienced a legislator as the Senator from Florida should raise that question.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me a further suggestion?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. The question was put to the Senate, and the vote was taken viva voce. The Chair said, "The ayes seem to have it." If the Senator from Minnesota then had any doubt that was the proper time for him to ask for the yeas and nays, so as to get a record vote. That was not done, but the Senate contented itself by determining the question upon a division, and after the question was so determined and the result announced by the Chair, I do say it was too late to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I thought there was a constitutional right to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had supposed so, too.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, I will proceed.

It is a matter of regret to me that I was unavoidably detained from the Senate last evening, for the reason that I have very pronounced opinions on the question that is now before the Senate, which I would have been glad to have presented when the matter was under debate last evening and which I will now briefly submit. I have run over the RECORD of this morning as hurriedly as what little leisure I have had would permit me to do, and have thus acquainted myself to some extent with what occurred last night. I regret that the speech of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is not in the RECORD, because that might have enlightened me to a considerable extent as to the position that some Members of this body take on this important question.

Mr. President, I have long been of the opinion that the plucking board is an institution that ought to be abolished. I look upon it as an un-American, un-Democratic, un-Republican institution. It is an institution that enables a few men, however well meaning they may be and however honest they may be, to work their prejudices and their prepossessions to the disadvantage of individual officers of the Navy; and I want to suggest that a board that can force out of the service men like Veeder and Gibbons and Hill and Rust, when they are in the full possession of their physical and mental faculties, for the purpose of making way for the promotion of men who have recently graduated from the Naval Academy, is something that ought not to be tolerated.

I do not say that there ought not to be some other method, and I think very likely some other method can be worked out if this board shall be abolished; but I do say that putting in the hands of a few officers the power arbitrarily and ruthlessly to drive from the service officers as experienced and as able as those I have named is something that the American people ought to get rid of.

Why, Mr. President, I know personally of one man who suffered almost the tortures of the Inquisition when he sat on that board. He knew what was going to happen. He knew that a certain officer had been marked for slaughter, and he could not sleep while the process was being gone through with. He knew that the action that was to be taken was a wrong action; that a man was going to be driven out who ought to have been retained in the service.

Mr. President, this is something that we ought to look at very seriously. These men are driven from the service under conditions that are not tolerated in reference to the messengers in our departments. We can not discharge a messenger, or a charwoman for that matter, under our civil-service laws or regulations, without giving them an opportunity to be heard; but we can take a man who for 20 or 25 years has been in the service of the United States Government, who has navigated a ship, who has performed admirable service during all that long period of time, and we can practically expel him from the service, and he has not a word to say about it save to accept the sentence and the punishment. I do not believe in it. I never have believed in it; and I hope Senators will look at this matter with unprejudiced and unbiased minds, uninfluenced by the pressure that is upon every one of us to-day in relation to this matter, because I have felt it, and I apprehend other Senators have felt it.

I notice that the old matter of a "hump" in the service was brought into the discussion last evening. If there is a "hump" in the service I submit that that "hump" ought not to be removed by taking out of the service men like Veeder and Gibbons and Rust and Hill. When we got rid of that "hump," then each Member of both Houses of Congress was permitted to nominate two midshipmen instead of one, as formerly, for the purpose of increasing the officers of the Navy. There seems to be a great desire to make rapid promotions of these young men and to get rid of the older and experienced officers of this important arm of the military service of the Government. I think it is a mistake that we ought to remedy at the present time, and we can remedy it only by agreeing to the provision of the House bill which gets rid of this so-called plucking board, and which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] moves to strike out. If we abolish this plucking board, and it is desirable to do so, we can then adopt a more reasonable, rational, and better method for meeting any emergency that may exist in the naval service. That better system, whatever it may be, never will be accomplished so long as this board exists; but it will be accomplished, in my judgment, if we act wisely and abolish this board, thus giving us an opportunity to devise some means that is better calculated to do justice to these men who have earned honorable promotion in the naval service of the country.

Mr. President, it is an extraordinary thing that we should put in the hands of a few men an opportunity to drive men from the service on technicalities, on prejudices, on prepossessions, whose acquirements as officers of the Navy are established and acknowledged. I know one man who was retired from the service by this board, and the only explanation given was that he was somewhat petulant; that he had not always been courteous to his subordinates. He was marked for slaughter, and he was slaughtered, and yet that man has a record that any citizen of this Republic might well wish to have attached to his name as a public servant. I know that all the record of that man was not placed before the board. It has been admitted at a hearing that his entire record was not placed before the board, and yet I observe that on last evening honorable Senators declared that there never had been an instance where any injustice had been done one of these men by withholding any portion of his record.

Mr. President, all I want, all I have ever contended for in matters of this kind, is that we should deal justly and fairly and honorably when we come to dispose of important questions such as are now before the Senate. I apprehend that we could organize a board here to-day to pass upon the qualifications and the conduct of Members of this body, and if we did that the men who would be slaughtered would be the men against whom prejudices or personal animosities exist in the Senate. It is giving too much power to a few men. It enables them to do rank injustice to their associates in the service. The fact that the men I have named and others have been driven from the service in this way when they were at the zenith of their physical and mental powers, and were able to continue to do valiant and honorable service for their country, renders unnecessary any extended argument on my part to show that it is a power that ought to be curtailed, or, better still, entirely taken away from a board of this kind, and that they should not be permitted to go on doing injustice to honorable and upright men.

Mr. President, as I suggested a moment ago, the influence that is being exerted is perhaps irresistible. Perhaps it can not be stemmed, and this injustice will be continued; but it will not be continued without a protest on my part, which I desire to make in the most emphatic manner, declaring it as my opinion that so long as this board lasts injustice will be done, harm will come to the service, and no good can possibly result.

The House of Representatives took up this matter with great care. They had hearings on the subject, and by an overwhelming vote they came to the conclusion that it was desirable that this legislation should be enacted, and if Senators will give careful consideration to the subject I feel sure that the action of the House will be concurred in.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I will ask the Senator what objection he has to the proposition of the Senate committee, which, it seems to me, would substitute something less rigorous than the present rule, and would repeal the present rule?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not examined that carefully. The Senate committee reported favorably on the action that the House had taken; and I have been somewhat surprised that after that report, coming from that great committee, there should be such determined opposition to it in the Senate. The provision of the House comes to us in the report that the Senate committee made, and I suppose the Senate committee gave consideration to it before reporting the bill. I do not believe any modification can be made of this matter so long as this arbitrary board continues in existence that will meet the requirements of the case. Abolish the board, do what the House has done in the matter, and then will be the time to consider whether we can legislate into existence a more reasonable, fair, and satisfactory method of dealing with the troubles in the Navy, if any exist, in this direction.

For my part, I do not believe there is any need of driving these men from the service. They will be forced by law to retire at an age much below that at which I think the retirement age ought to be placed. But when men of the age of 45 or 50 or 55, who are in the full possession of their intellectual and physical capacities, are arbitrarily retired from the service and put on the pay roll as long as they live, apparently for the simple purpose of giving younger men an opportunity to rise more rapidly in their profession, I believe it is a system that, as I said a moment ago, is unrepublican, undemocratic, un-American, and ought not to be continued.

Mr. President, I think if Senators would carefully look at the pay roll of the retired officers' list at the present time they would be startled into the conviction that we ought not to increase that pay roll by mustering out of the service men who are able to perform satisfactorily their duties as officers of the Navy. Let the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be defeated.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, like the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I regret very much that the remarks of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] do not appear in the RECORD this morning. Again, it is a matter of regret, though the necessities of the case bring it about, that Senators can not remain in the Chamber during the discussion of an important proposition like this, and therefore we act upon it without full information.

The speech of the junior Senator from Massachusetts last night demonstrated that this question is of enough importance to require the careful consideration of Congress before section 9 of the personnel act is repealed. That is one objection to having this important general legislation acted upon when we are in a rush and considering an appropriation bill.

The Senator from New Hampshire has expressed his surprise that any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs should rise here to oppose the action recommended by that committee. I think I can explain to him how that might easily come about. I was in favor and a number of other members of the committee were in favor of striking out the provision repealing section 9; but as between a repeal with nothing to take its place and a repeal coupled with some other provision of like character to that its place, of course I preferred that some other board or some other method should be established in order that these men might be retired from the service.

The Senator from New Hampshire says that section 9 is undemocratic and unrepublican; that the action taken is arbitrary; that there is a spirit of revenge in it; otherwise, I suppose there is no objection to it. Let us see, Mr. President. What is the provision of section 9? That this board, popularly called the plucking board, shall consist of five rear admirals; that—

Each member of said board shall swear or affirm that he will, without prejudice or partiality, and having in view solely the special fitness of officers and the efficiency of the naval service, perform the duties imposed upon him by this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand this matter, and I do not claim to be very well versed in naval matters, 15 officers have to be arbitrarily retired. Is not that true?

Mr. BRYAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well that is the understanding?

Mr. BRYAN. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have to bring up the number to 40 each year.

Mr. BRYAN. That is right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to read a few lines when the cases of Capts. Gibbons, Hill, and Leonard were being considered by another body? A letter addressed to Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT, of the House of Representatives, who is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reads as follows:

ANNAPOLIS, MD., July 21, 1914.

The Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Capt. F. K. Hill, who has recently been retired by the plucking board, served under me as chief of staff during my command of the Atlantic Fleet. He performed his duties most efficiently in every particular.

From my intimate acquaintance and official association with Capt. Hill during the past 20 years, I am convinced that he has no superior professionally among officers of command rank, and I believe this to be the judgment of a large majority of the officers of the Navy. From his early years in the Navy he has displayed marked aptitude and efficiency. He has been a close and intelligent student of naval progress and development, and is a thoroughly equipped, all-round officer.

His retirement is a distinct loss to the service. I would, therefore, invite your careful attention to his record and career in the Navy, feeling sure that it will convince you that a great injustice has been done to this efficient and capable officer. It can not be in the best interest of the service to retire two officers of the capacity and efficiency of Capts. Hill and Gibbons.

Very respectfully,

H. OSTERHAUS,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy.

Now, Mr. President, I think I was justified in saying that this plucking board, which is compelled to retire a certain number of officers every year, does do great injustice in many cases to highly capable and efficient officers of the Navy apparently for the single purpose of permitting younger and less capable and less efficient officers to be more rapidly promoted than they otherwise would be.

Mr. DU PONT. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to ask whether the finding of the plucking board is simply the finding of a majority of that board?

Mr. BRYAN. I will come to that in just a few minutes, if the Senator will allow me. Here are five men, selected because of their official fitness, selected because of their acquaintance with the officers who come up for promotion. I do not know who constituted the plucking board last June, but I have here a list of the officers who constituted the plucking board in 1913. It was stated before the Committee on Naval Affairs that they were selected from widely separated localities:

The board was appointed as follows: Rear Admiral Ward, from New York; Rear Admiral Southerland, recently from the Pacific Fleet; Rear Admiral Knight, commander in chief of the Atlantic Reserve Fleet at Philadelphia; Rear Admiral Winslow, commanding second division Atlantic Fleet; Rear Admiral Fletcher, commanding third division Atlantic Fleet. Commander Pollock, who had recently come from sea to duty at the Naval Observatory, was made recorder.

Those five men, under oath that they would consider only the efficiency of the Navy, that they would not allow any personal feeling to enter into their deliberations, retired each year a certain number of officers under the law—not that those officers would be incapable of performing the duties of the grades, but that the retirement may be made in order that the upper grades may be in command of men at a time of life when they can render efficient service, and in order that the grade of rear admiral may not be filled up with men who will stay there until they reach the retiring age.

No great hardship is done to a man retired by the plucking board. He gets three-fourths of his pay.

Now, there is another provision which I believe Senators have overlooked. I will read the language of the law:

Its finding—

That is, the findings of the plucking board—

which shall be in writing, signed by all the members—not less than four governing—shall be transmitted to the President, who shall thereupon by order make the transfers of such officers to the retired list as are selected by the board.

Mr. President, suppose one or two of those officers have a personal feeling against men coming up for consideration or for promotion, this law is so drawn that four out of the five men must concur before any recommendation is made for the detachment from the service.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRYAN. I will yield in just a moment.

It is not a mere majority of the board that acts, but four must concur in the judgment reached by the board before the retirement takes effect. When they get through, that is not all. If you say that four out of the five of the commanders of the three fleets of the Navy would be so small, so unfair as to select out for retirement a man whom they ought not to select, that they would do that thing under oath, then you have to go a step further; you have to say that the President of the United States, who reviews their action, would not be governed by the interests of the service.

Mr. President, every navy in the world has some method of retiring officers in order that the service may be kept efficient. As I said last night, this act was passed just after the Spanish-American War, and grew out of the experiences in that way; because I have heard it stated, and I have no doubt it is true, that men who ordinarily and in the natural order of things would command battleships themselves were not willing to assume charge of a battleship, and they stood aside for younger officers, for men who had been at sea. The men in these higher grades had not had the sea service that would commend itself to the Navy Department. They did not have the sea service that would make them feel themselves that they were competent to command a ship at sea in war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Whose fault was it that they did not have adequate sea service?

Mr. BRYAN. It was because we did not have any method of retiring incapable officers. That was the opinion of Congress when it passed the act.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says they did not have a sufficient amount of sea service. Whose fault was it?

Mr. BRYAN. Unless you have some method of retirement they will go on in the natural order of promotion; and if you repeal this section and do not substitute anything in its place, you will have this situation, that men now in the grade of rear admirals will stay there; nobody can come to that grade. The officers in the lower grades will remain. As one is retired by the age limit the captain will take his place and be retired almost immediately. So you would not have men with the experience they ought to have and that this act was designed to compel them to have. That is the reason.

I have never said, and I heard nobody say here last night, that mistakes were never made by the plucking board. I suppose they have been made, and I suppose they will continue to be made if the board is allowed to remain in existence; but that they are actuated by revenge, that they are actuated by anything except the best interests of the service, I do not believe. I can not see how men of the character and standing of the men who constitute the plucking board could stoop to commit any of the offenses charged against them. If they do that thing, they themselves ought to be retired; they ought to be court-martialed and put out of the service. It is a serious charge to make against the flag officers who go upon this board. The Navy Department stated that they took the officers who constituted this board from as widely separated a field as possible, so that they will not have the personal animosity that might be suspected from close contact and association.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? I suppose the Senator knows Admiral Osterhaus.

Mr. BRYAN. I know Admiral Osterhaus.

Mr. GALLINGER. Admiral Osterhaus seems to think they did act very badly in retiring the officers whose names I have read.

Mr. BRYAN. How long has Admiral Osterhaus been retired?

Mr. GALLINGER. That I can not state.

Mr. BRYAN. A good many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know.

Mr. BRYAN. Admiral Osterhaus has seemed to have the same sympathy for a man who feels he has been aggrieved that anybody else would have. Admiral Osterhaus came before the Committee on Naval Affairs and said it was wrong; that we ought to place a man in the grade of rear admiral who in the grade of captain had had but nine and a half months of sea duty. It was his friendship for the man, and Admiral Osterhaus was not on oath acting on a plucking board to select out a certain number of men from men all of whom it may be assumed are efficient. Somebody had to go.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator another question. I may not be well informed on the matter. If it is necessary to force these men out of the service arbitrarily to make room for younger men, why is it not done in the Army?

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator has been here a great deal longer than I have. I do not know why he has not had it done. I understand that in the Army the promotion is left to the President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. I am sorry the Senator did not hear the speech of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] last night, in which he spoke of the necessity for a feeling of good-fellowship to exist among men of the Navy, and that this was the least objectionable form that had been devised; that there is great complaint in the Army when a lieutenant is promoted to brigadier general.

Mr. GALLINGER. A lieutenant is never promoted to a brigadier general.

Mr. BRYAN. That was an illustration the junior Senator from Massachusetts used.

Mr. STONE. Gen. Wood was promoted over a great many officers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. STONE. And he has, in my opinion, made a most excellent officer.

Mr. GALLINGER. So, if we imitated that custom in the Army, we would leave it to the President to promote these younger naval officers, if he saw proper.

Mr. BRYAN. Some method must be provided for promotions. I do not suppose even the Senator from New Hampshire would want to leave it to a popular election to say who would be promoted and who would not be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. BRYAN. I can not conceive how it can be supposed that Congress can better determine as between the individual merits of the men in the naval service than officers associated with them, than the Navy Department, whose business it is to know what it is doing when it detaches a man from the service.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida a few moments ago suggested in substance that if there were one or two members of this plucking board who did have a personal feeling against an officer whose case was being considered by the board, it was only necessary to have a report signed by four of the members of the board in order to place the officer on the retired list.

Mr. BRYAN. No; I did not say exactly that. In order that the report may be made operative the evidence must be submitted to the President, and the President must approve before any man can be detached from the service.

Mr. POMERENE. That is practically the same thing. If any man can sit on this board who has a personal feeling against any officer whose case is being considered by that board, then the rules which control the action of that board ought to be changed, and if any member who sits upon this board has a personal feeling against any man whose case is being considered by the board, he ought not to sit for one minute.

Mr. BRYAN. I agree with the Senator. I do not know that that condition has ever existed. It ought not to exist.

Mr. POMERENE. It does seem to me that this board has had a rather poor conception of its duty. I want to say a word on this subject with reference to one case to which I have given some little attention, and that is the case of Capt. Hill. I hold in my hand a report from the House committee written apparently by Representative BRITTEN, of the Committee on Naval Affairs. He says, with reference to Capt. Hill, that the committee "came to the unanimous conclusion that Capt. Hill's retirement was unjustified; that his retirement detracted considerably from the present efficiency of the Navy; that his retirement was caused by his energetic criticism of his superiors in demanding constructive reforms in the Navy from time to time, all of which with one exception have been carried into effect."

That is, he was a man who knew something, who had some initiative, and discovered that certain improvements were necessary. He called the attention of the department to them, criticized to some extent his superior officers, and because of that criticism it is apparent that there was some feeling against him. That he was right appears from the fact that the improvements he suggested were later adopted.

Now, let us see what Rear Admiral Knight says with respect to these removals:

> There was no officer who was eliminated from the captains' list this year whose elimination was deserved because of anything he had done, and hardly one whose elimination contributed anything to the absolute efficiency of the service, * * * that the board was obliged to select five captains for elimination, and if there is no officer on whose record there is the slightest blemish five must still be taken.

So we have five captains removed by this board, the removal of whom added nothing to the efficiency of the Navy.

It seems, further, from the investigation which was made by this subcommittee in the House that there was one charge against the captain which related to the ship Marietta, and I want to read just a paragraph from this report as indicating something of the reasons which actuated the plucking board in placing Capt. Hill upon the retired list. I submit that while it may appeal to certain men in the Navy Department, it does not appeal to anyone who has any sense of judicial fairness. I read:

> Your committee was informed by Admiral Knight that the sole reason for the retirement of Capt. Hill was the report of the board of inspection and survey on the U. S. S. Marietta, the ship which Capt. Hill commanded as commander, but neither the admiral nor any member of the retiring board had seen the Marietta when under Commander Hill's command, and therefore should have been guided entirely by what appears in his official record, kept for that purpose.
> It developed, however, that when the Marietta incident was under consideration by the Navy Department it was a matter of very general conversation and discussion throughout the Navy, and few naval officers failed to hear a great deal about it because of the personal prominence of Commander Hill, and Admiral Knight admitted that the sentiment and general information conveyed on this matter by the newspapers might have been incorrect and to have done an injustice to Capt. Hill. He said that the retiring board was not guided entirely by the record, but rather by the general impression that prevailed at the time concerning the condition of the Marietta.

So we have a great plucking board dealing with the records and reputations of the officers of the Navy, guided in part by general impressions which are obtained from newspaper reading. If that is the conception which this board has of its sense of official duty, it is quite time that we displaced it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment. I do not deny that there ought to be some tribunal which would hear questions of this character and determine them. It may be, and I will assume for the sake of the argument, that a plucking board is a proper tribunal. I am convinced from the report in this case that the personnel of this plucking board is not what it ought to be, and, for one, I am not willing that a board should be continued which treats officers of the character of Capt. Hill and others who have been plucked in this way. Bills for their reinstatement are now pending on the calendar. It does seem to me that an injustice has been done by this board, and that we ought to do something toward rectifying the wrong which has been committed against these men.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. From what State is Capt. Hill?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know; but I understand he has some friends in Cincinnati, who first called my attention to this matter.

Mr. BRYAN. I will say, for the Senator's information, that Capt. Hill was appointed from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be so; but whether he was from Ohio or Florida, I do not care. It does seem to me that with the record that this man has, at this particular time when we need men of ability and experience in the Navy, we ought to do something toward reinstating him.

We will be in session again in a few months. If it be found necessary to provide another tribunal to perform the duties which now devolve upon the plucking board, we can then pass the necessary legislation and prescribe the rules for its conduct so as to prevent the repetition of the injustices wrought by the present board. Certainly a new board can not be less satisfactory.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the fact that, strictly speaking, this is not a tribunal; and that is the vice of this whole situation. According to Admiral Knight's testimony, not a spot or blemish existed on the reputation of these officers; the Navy received no benefit; and yet, notwithstanding that condition, this board had to retire five men. That is not a fair position in which to put any body of men. The vice is inherent in the system itself, because though there may not be a single man against whose record there is one single scratch, yet, notwithstanding that perfection of record, we impose upon a body of men the selection of five victims—for that is what it amounts to.

I am in hearty accord with the spirit of the Senator from Ohio that this board should be abolished. I do not think we ought to condemn the board so much as some are disposed to condemn it. They had to pick out five men without any blemish or objection against one of them. You can not put a body of men in that position and leave them free from criticism. The vice is in the system, and the system ought to go.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, Mr. President; and what encouragement is it to an officer to do his duty when, no matter how efficient he may be, no matter how brilliant his services may be either in the past or what may be his promise in the future, he does not know how soon the hour is to come when he is to be decapitated by a board, every member of which may be his inferior in ability, in accomplishment, or in efficiency?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Chair please state the amendment, so that it may be understood?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The committee's first proposition was to strike out and insert certain words; the second proposition is to strike out and insert certain other words; and in that amendment occurs this paragraph which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] now moves to strike out:

> Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am going to vote for that amendment with the understanding that we can perfect it; that we can adopt additional legislation, so as to keep what I think is generally admitted as a necessity, namely, a board in the control of promotions and at the same time lay down a rule which will prevent some of the injustices which have been mentioned by Senators.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. On the roll call to vote "yea," as I understand, is to sustain the report of the committee?

Mr. LODGE. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A vote of "yea" is to strike out the part of the committee report.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then, if we desire to support the committee, we vote "nay"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to understand this matter. As I understand to vote "nay" means that we would sustain the committee in striking out what is called the plucking board?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. As the Chair understands, this section refers to what is commonly known as the plucking board. The committee has reported to repeal that section, and the pending question is on striking out that portion of it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as I understand, if the Chair will permit me, a vote "nay" means to keep in the Senate committee amendment which abolishes the plucking board.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. SWANSON. A vote "nay" would keep in the Senate amendment, which abolishes the plucking board, and a vote "yea" indicates a desire to continue the plucking board.

Mr. LODGE. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that to vote "nay" means to abolish the plucking board but to substitute another method?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; there is no substitute about it.

Mr. SWANSON. That comes up later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will come up later. To vote "yea" is to vote for the so-called plucking board and to vote "nay" is to vote against it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KERN (when the name of Mr. LEA of Tennessee was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] on account of illness in his family. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. KERN (when Mr. SHIVELY's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. THORNTON's name was called). I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON], on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. KERN (when the name of Mr. WILLIAMS was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on account of illness. He is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the negative). Through inadvertence I voted. I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness.

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the affirmative). I saw the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], with whom I have a general pair, in the Chamber this morning, and therefore voted when my name was called. As that Senator has not voted, I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SHERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi, and on that account withdraw my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the affirmative). In the absence of my pair and not being able to secure a transfer, I shall have to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. CLAPP. I shall feel constrained, then, to withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 41, as follows:

So Mr. LODGE's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 955).

Mr. SWANSON obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator having charge of the naval bill to allow it to be laid aside temporarily, in order that I may have action on the conference report on the legislative bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the report may be laid before the Senate.

The Secretary read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 32, 33, 34, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 50, 59, 60, 61, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 82, 91, 92, 94, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 104, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 131, 136, 138, 140, and 141.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 37, 39, 45, 46, 51, 52, 54, 55, 57, 58, 62, 66, 74, 81, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 93, 95, 96, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 132, 133, 134, 135, 137, 139, and 142, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$141,130"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendemnt as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of sum proposed insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Division of Efficiency: For establishment and maintenance of system of efficiency ratings, pursuant to section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, for investigation of the needs of the several executive departments and independent establishments with respect to personnel, and for investigation of duplication of statistical and other work and method of business in the various branches of the Government service; including not more than $2,500 for equipment, supplies, stationery, books, and printing; and not more than $50 for street car fare; $30,000; the Chief of the Division of Efficiency herein provided for shall be appointed by the President and shall report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, through the President, the nature and progress of work undertaken by the division, together with a detailed statement of expenditures showing the persons employed, their duties, and the compensation paid to each: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation in excess of $4,000 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "23," and on page 33 of the bill, in line 23, strike out "$8,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$7,280"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$321,020"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$156,780"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$166,758"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: And at end of matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"A detailed statement of traveling expenses incurred hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$158,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$359,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 16, 18, 20, 21, 35, 41, 63, 64, and 65.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the conference report will not be agreed to. I should not feel warranted in resisting the motion of the Senator from Virginia on account of the item to which I shall call attention, if it were not for the fact that the bill must go back to conference in any event. Several of the items, as shown by the conference report, have not yet been agreed to, so that no time will be lost by sending back the entire conference report.

The item to which I desire to invite the attention of the Senate is that contained on page 69 of this print and involves Senate amendments 69, 70, 71, and 72. The bill as it came from the House provided, with reference to the assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah, an assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, chief clerk, and cashier, $1,800; for wages of workmen and other employees, $1,500; for incidental and contingent expenses, $500. It will be observed that the House bill provided for but a single official in that assay office—the assayer in charge, who was to perform all the duties of the office.

There is no other assay office in the country where any such provision is made. For example, in Boise City, Idaho, the provision is for any assayer in charge, $1,800; an assistant assayer, $1,200; and a chief clerk, $1,200; in all, $4,200. The provision for the assay office at Salt Lake City is for a single employee at $1,800, while in Boise City, Idaho, there are three employees drawing aggregate salaries of $4,200.

In Deadwood, S. Dak., the provision is for an assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; clerk, $1,000; assistant assayer, $1,200; in all, $4,000.

In the assay office at Helena, Mont., there is an assayer in charge at $1,800; a chief clerk at $1,400; an assistant assayer at $1,200; in all, $4,400.

At Carson City, Nev., where the office is a mint instead of an assay office, but where the duties are practically the same, the assayer in charge receives $1,800, the assistant assayer $1,200, and the chief clerk $1,200, aggregating $4,200.

So it will be seen that out of the five western assay offices the amount appropriated is for three employees in every instance, and the aggregate salaries are from $4,000 to $4,200, while it is attempted in the House provision to cut down the office at Salt Lake City to a single officer, who is to perform all of these duties, with a salary of $1,800.

Mr. President, it is impossible for that one official to do all of that work. In addition to that he is charged with responsible duties. He is required under the House bill to do all of the assaying, to do all of the bookkeeping, to do all of the other things that are requisite to be done in an assay office of that character. He gives a bond, it is true; but if there were no other reason for it, it is necessary that there should be at least two regular employees in the office in order that they may constitute a check upon one another. It is not a wise thing that, in an office of that character, handling hundreds of thousands of dollars in gold every year, there should be but a single employee, who discharges all of the duties with reference to those deposits. It is an absurdity to continue an office of this character with a single employee; and I am at a loss to understand upon what theory the House conferees could have insisted that there should have been but this single official.

The Director of the Mint, in his report, has called attention to the differences that have existed between the House and the Senate over these western assay offices for a long time. He says:

> The assay offices should be either abolished or given adequate appropriations. The responsibilities that attach to the officers and employees of these institutions are very considerable. They receive important amounts of gold bullion, determine its value, and draw drafts on the Treasury for the payments. These functions should be intrusted only to capable and experienced men of technical education, and the Government should expect to pay them fair compensation. Considerable amounts of bullion are on hand at times, and a proper watch force should be employed. If these precautions are too costly, the offices should be abolished and the public informed that it must do business with the mints direct.

It is a thoroughly unwise policy, if these offices are to be continued—and it seems to be the policy of Congress that they should be continued for the present—that they should not be furnished with adequate working forces. It has been said that these assay offices do not pay. That is true; and it is equally true that two-thirds of the post offices in the United States do not pay. The income which makes up the aggregate of the post-office receipts comes in the main from probably one-third of the post offices in the United States; yet nobody thinks of abolishing a post office simply because the receipts of the office are not as much as the expenses.

The assay office at Seattle, for example, which has an income of $3,800 a year, costs $38,000 to maintain, ten times as much as its income; but it receives millions of dollars of gold every year, a large proportion of which would be diverted into Canada if it were not for the existence of the various assay offices. I am not going into the argument in favor of the maintenance of the offices. That has been gone over time and again in the Senate. It is the policy to maintain them; and if they are to be maintained we ought to provide for adequate clerical and other assistance in order to maintain them properly.

I therefore hope that the conference report will not be agreed to, but that the bill will be sent back to conference, and that in the conference the Senate conferees will insist upon these items, to the end that this office may not be strangled out of existence.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The proposition of the Senator from Utah is that this appropriation bill, carrying $36,000,000, shall at this critical stage of the session be sent back to conference because he is disappointed in getting a $1,200 clerkship for the assay office in his State.

Mr. President, we can not legislate without the concurrence of the other House. The Senate has no right to plant itself arbitrarily on any proposition. All the Senate can do, and all its conferees can do, is to present a matter like this fairly and frankly and earnestly to the House; and when that is done the time comes when one or the other must yield.

In this particular matter the Senate did put on this clerk at the assay office at Salt Lake City, in the Senator's State, and the matter was carefully and thoroughly discussed with the House conferees. The Senate conferees urged it in every possible way. We urged it not only on its merits as well as we could—it is very difficult to sustain the proposition strictly on its merits, as I will show in a few moments—but we appealed to them to save time and begged them not to delay this bill by a little item of $1,200. We appealed to them from every point of view that could possibly be presented, and we found them absolutely determined. They stated that it was useless to discuss it further; that they did not intend to and never would agree to this item.

It does seem to me that when the Senate conferees have made all the efforts they could reasonably make it is a rather extreme position for the Senator from Utah to take to ask that the entire report be rejected in order that we may again undertake the impossible task of convincing the House conferees.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This report must go back to conference in any event, must it not?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has to go back on other items; yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How much are the Senator and his colleagues upon the conference committee going to be embarrassed by having this little item included with the others?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I want the Senate to settle this matter and to tell us to defeat this bill unless this item is put in, if that is their purpose, for we have done everything else that we could do except defeat the bill. We have been told by the House conferees that they would see it defeated before they would put it in. If the Senate wants to make a deadlock on that $1,200 item in a $36,000,000 bill, I want them to instruct me to that effect. I do not want to go back to the House conferees and attempt the impossible. I have exhausted this subject. I have made every argument and every appeal I am capable of making, and the other Senate conferees have done the same, and we have been told that the House never would agree to this item.

I shall detain the Senate a few moments longer to show the situation that the House conferees present to us, and it is a very difficult situation. This assay office for the last year received only $540.51. The total income, the total receipts, the total earnings at this office, were $541. The bill as it came from the conference appropriates $3,800 to earn $541. That is the amount the bill, as agreed to in conference, appropriates—$3,800—with which to earn $541.

I realize that every agency of the Government may not be self-supporting. I realize that the Government sometimes has to furnish, and ought to furnish, facilities even at a loss; but we found it impossible to convince the House conferees that this was such a case as that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Senator from Virginia another question at this point?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The assay office at Seattle, which is the largest assay office in the country, had an income of $3,836.53, and the expenses of maintaining the office were $38,257.95, so the expense was ten times the income. If the Senator objects to the maintenance of the office at Salt Lake City because the income is so much less than the expenses, why does he maintain the office at Seattle, where exactly the same relative condition exists? Let me say, further, that the office at Helena, Mont., had an income of $1,943.32 and an expense item of $8,876.20, seven or eight times as much; and that is true of every assay office in the West.

If the Senator's argument against the maintenance of the office in Salt Lake City is a good one, then it is a good one in favor of abolishing every assay office in the country. These offices are not run to make money. They are run for the accommodation of the prospectors and miners in that section. That is the theory upon which they have been maintained for years.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the weakness of the Senator's argument is that he says that I am asking that this office in his State be discontinued. I have done nothing of the sort. On the contrary, I have used every effort in my power to maintain what he is asking. I am simply telling him the difficulties we encountered with the House conferees.

I am not going to take the time to go through all the assay offices. I will say very frankly that it is very hard to justify the maintenance of many of them. They probably ought to be closed up. If I am not mistaken, they were discounted at one time, and I, answering the appeals and the arguments of the western Senators, made a fight to reinstate them in the appropriation bill, and they were reinstated. I have not fought the assay offices in the West. I have made the best efforts I could make to maintain this little $1,200 clerkship for which the Senator wants a $136,000,000 bill to be held up.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Virginia is not quite fair. I said in the beginning that if this involved sending back to conference a bill that otherwise would not go to conference I would not feel justified in taking the position I did; but in view of the fact that the bill must go back to conference in any event I am at a loss to understand why the Senator from Virginia should so strenuously object to this item going back.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can tell the Senator the reason. If we disagree to this report, it opens up every item in the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, no.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is useless for the Senator from Utah to say "No, no." Everybody on the floor of the Senate knows that it will be opened if this report is rejected; that the House then can come and contend over every item on which we have come to an agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think the junior Senator from Utah intends to send back the report with all of the other items disagreed to. He simply wants this one item to go back with the three items that are already in disagreement.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Utah knows that can not be done. This report must be either adopted or rejected as a whole, and if it is rejected it opens up every item in the bill. We can not adopt it partly and reject it partly.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that, of course, I do not think there will be any question between the conferees on any item upon which they have already agreed. I do not think that would take any time at all, because I do not think either one of the Houses desires to open up questions that have already been settled.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the House conferees yielded on certain Senate amendments with great reluctance and after much difficulty, and I have no doubt it would open up others; but, in the next place, it is entirely useless. There is no use in going back to men who are determined upon their course. There must be an end of discussion and of controversy, and we have exhausted this subject. We have made every argument and every appeal, and we have been told by the House conferees that they never did intend to agree to this item.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not understand why the House conferees have singled out one assay office in the United States and reduced the help there to one employee based upon the fact that the receipts are not sufficient to pay expenses, when at Seattle there is an assay office that costs the Government of the United States over $30,000, whereas the difference in receipts and the cost of operating the Salt Lake office is less than $3,000.

I want to state also to the Senator the fact that during the last year the receipts at the Salt Lake office have been much less than usual, because there has been so little mining going on. That has been the case particularly in States where gold and silver are mined. There have not been one-half the employees in mines working in the State of Utah during the past year. It seems to me a very small thing for the conferees of the House to say that a bill carrying $136,000,000 shall not pass unless this one clerk at $1,200 is excluded from the provisions of the bill. It may be that they have taken that position, Mr. President, but I think it is rather a weak position for them to take.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They think that it is a rather small position for us to take to insist upon this large sum being appropriated to earn $541, and they were very positive about it.

I say very frankly unless the Senate wants me to defeat this bill I hope it will not send the report back to conference, because you can do nothing except to defeat the bill. I have exhausted the subject so far as I can in reasonable discussion. I have exhausted the subject on the part of the Senate, and if it will instruct me to defeat this bill on account of giving up an item for a $1,200 clerk I will do that, but unless the Senate is to so instruct me I hope it will not send the report back.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator what reason did the House conferees give for agreeing to the Seattle items, the amount of the expense being $30,000 more than the income?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They did not discuss it at all.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the trouble.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did ask a question about Seattle. They do a great deal of business from Alaska there, while in Utah they do very little, comparatively.

Mr. SMOOT. The Utah office does more business compared to the amount of expenditure by the Government than Seattle does. I am not saying a word against Seattle. I know that the assay office ought to be maintained at Seattle, and I know that assay offices should be maintained at Boise, Idaho, and in Montana and wherever they are at present located. No one has contended that the assay offices are self-supporting. They never have been and they never will be; but they bring untold advantage to the Government of the United States. They are there for the purpose of assisting the miner and prospector in ascertaining whether the rock he discovers is of value sufficient to justify development of the property. If it were not for the prospector, if it were not for the man who goes out upon the hills and seeks for the precious metals, instead of having hundreds of millions of dollars each year produced in gold and silver there would be scarcely any, and the precious metals are the blood of commerce and are what has made business in this country grow so rapidly in the past.

Therefore, Mr. President, as to the conferees on the part of the House saying unless the small sum of $1,200 for one clerk is excluded they are going to fail to pass an appropriation bill carrying $136,000,000, I can not conceive of such a position.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. These other assay offices were not before the conference. They were put in by the House, and there was no amendment of the Senate. The one we had to deal with was where there was a Senate amendment, which Senate amendment the House conferees refused to accept.

Mr. President, I will not waste any more time on it. There are a great many of these offices. I will say to the Senator that they do not all do business at a loss, that some of them pay a very large profit, and it is a growing question whether these little offices in the West that are a charge on the Government every year should not be abolished. There is a strong feeling that they should be abolished, and it is very difficult to prevent them from being abolished. The conferees on the part of the House raised that question. They want to abolish all those offices that bring the Government in debt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to suggest to him at this point that if it were not for these assay offices, particularly those in the States bordering upon Canada, millions of dollars of gold that now come to the United States, and finds its way into the Treasury of the United States finally, would be diverted to Canada, because Canada maintains assay offices along the American border, and because we have those western assay offices gold from Montana, gold from Idaho, gold from Alaska comes to the American assay offices instead of going to the Canadian offices.

The maintenance of these assay offices even at a loss has served a very useful purpose. The Senator must understand that these assay offices handle many millions of dollars of gold every year and that they make only a nominal charge for an assay. The amount of gold handled last year in Utah was very much smaller than it ever had been, for certain of our mines closed down during the last year; but the information which I receive from the office now is that the amount is increasing and it will run three or four times this year what it did last year.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I shall not prolong this debate. All I can say is that I hope the Senate will adopt the conference report. If it sends it back it can do nothing except defeat this bill. I have exhausted the subject and I do not wish to undertake any more work in that connection, because I can do no more than I have done. I hope the report of the conference committee will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement and ask for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GALLINGER conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30 it is proposed to strike out lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and to insert:

Hereafter no officer of the line, Medical or Pay Corps shall be promoted who has not had active sea service covering half or more of the time during which he has been in the service; and any officer who has failed to have such an amount of sea service to his credit shall be placed on the retired list: Provided, That this shall not apply to the grades of commander and captain until three years from the date of the approval of this act or to the grade of ensign: Provided further, That this provision shall not apply to those Engineer officers transferred to the line under section 5 of the act of March 3, 1899: Provided further, That shore duty beyond the seas shall be considered as active sea service for the purposes of this act.

Hereafter whenever an officer of the Navy has been assigned to shore duty retired officers of suitable rank may be assigned to such duty in all posts where the appointment of an officer of the active list is not required by law: Provided, That when retired officers are thus assigned to active duty they shall receive the pay and allowances of the grade from which they were retired.

Section 9 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next committee amendment passed over is on page 32, at the bottom of the page, where the committee proposes to insert, after line 22, the following words:

The President is hereby authorized to transfer to the active list of the Navy any officer retired on July 1, 1914, under the personnel act of 1899 as modified by the act approved August 22, 1912, who is now performing active duty: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the number on the active list he would have held if not retired on said date, and shall be an extra number on the said active list.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to substitute "1913" for "1914," on page 33, line 1.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me suggest to the Senator to insert "1913, or July 1" before "1914."

Mr. SWANSON. I will accept that modification.

Mr. BRYAN. What particular officer is this intended to take care of?

Mr. SWANSON. I understand there are only two officers to be affected by it. They retired voluntarily, and they are now going back on the active list.

Mr. LODGE. They are on the active list doing active duty?

Mr. SWANSON. Commander Pollock and Commander Cook.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After "July 1," line 24, page 32, insert "1913, or July 1," so as to read:

The President is hereby authorized to transfer to the active list of the Navy any officer retired on July 1, 1913, or July 1, 1914.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee passed over is on page 63, several amendments relative to submarines.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to act on the committee amendments and then to offer an amendment as a substitute or to offer the substitute now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute first.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I offer the following substitute for line 17 down to line 24, inclusive, page 63.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, in lieu of lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, insert:

Fifty submarines, to be of seagoing type, to have a surface speed of 25 knots, or more if possible, but not less than 20 knots; to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $1,500,000 each; and 25 submarines, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $550,000 each; and the sum of $30,000,000 is hereby appropriated for said purposes, to be available until expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has notified me that he intends to offer a further amendment to the substitute providing for the sale of Panama bonds to pay for the submarines as constructed. In passing, I will say that I have no objection to that amendment, and I will support it. What I hope to secure is the immediate construction, or, at least, the beginning of the construction and the completion as quickly as possible, of the 50 submarines to be of a seagoing type and to have a surface speed of 25 knots, or more if possible, but not less than 20 knots, as well as 25 coast-defense submarines.

Mr. President, I realize that in the past there has been a difference of opinion as to the relative value of the different types of defense vessels, but during the progress of the present European war I think it has been demonstrated beyond a question that the submarine has been the most effective vessel of national defense. The submarine is complete in itself. It does not require auxiliary vessels to accompany it when in operation. The crew of the submarine is small in number. Its operation is inexpensive. It is quickly constructed and most deadly in its attack.

I realize our Nation's unpreparedness to-day in case of war, and particularly our lack of war vessels in the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has said that submarines can be constructed without the lapse of very much time. How quickly in case of an emergency could one of these seagoing submarines be constructed?

Mr. SMOOT. The seagoing type is the costly type, and they can be constructed in between five and six months. Another advantage, I will say to the Senator, is that they can be constructed in almost any yard in the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking the question with a view of asking another one. If these submarines can be constructed so easily, would it not be better policy for our Government to pursue not to construct so many at one time, and thus get the advantage which may accrue in the way improvements? The Senator has provided for quite a large number. Even in case of a war after hostilities had commenced we could construct submarines with little delay. It seems to me it would be unwise to construct too many now when they can be constructed so easily and so rapidly.

Mr. SMOOT. The position of the Senator would be absolutely correct if the war situation of the world was not as it is.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not expect war in the next five or six months or in a year, does he?

Mr. SMOOT. I pray daily that we will not be in a war, Mr. President, but no man living can say we will not be in a war in three months from to-day. No man can say that the conditions in Europe to-day will not involve us in difficulties at almost any time. I think the building of these submarines will be the greatest insurance against war that we can possibly have.

Mr. NORRIS. May it not happen that the building of these submarines will only stimulate other Governments to build a whole lot more submarines.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Senator if it is not also true that the building of these submarines will act as a stimulant to other Governments to build them? If we build 50, will it not stimulate other Governments to build 75 apiece?

Mr. SMOOT. That is another reason why I am in favor of the building of submarines, for they are used not for offense but for defense in case of war. The seagoing type of submarine can make a voyage of 8 or 10 days before returning to basis of operation.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the war illustrate the fact that submarines are now being used in an offensive way to a much greater extent than in a defensive way?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true in Europe, where the countries are near neighbors, but it would not be true as far as our country is concerned, unless we were involved, perhaps, in war with South American countries, and I hardly think that will ever happen.

Mr. NORRIS. We are closer to Europe than we are to South America.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that in the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy he outlines a building program for the Navy for the coming year.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator enters upon that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMMONS in the chair). Will the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I simply want to inquire about the place where this amendment would be inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator it is a substitute for the item found on page 63, beginning with line 17, down to and including line 24.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his report dated December 1, 1914, makes this statement:

The building program recommended this year differs little from the recommendations in last year's annual report. It is a "well-balanced program." The construction of the following is included in the estimates:

Two dreadnaughts; 6 destroyers; 8 submarines or more, 1 to be of seagoing and 7 or more of coast-defense type; 1 gunboat; 1 oiler.

Further in his report the Secretary says:

However, in view of the demonstrated power of the submarine, I would impress upon Congress the importance of making a larger increase in the submarine craft, appropriating generously therefor without reducing the appropriations for other craft. The estimates for these were reduced to the minimum.

Mr. President, the estimate that was made by the Secretary of the Navy was made after every head of the department was instructed to cut the estimates to the very lowest point. If I had my way, I would very much prefer to strike from this bill the appropriation for the building of the two battleships and use every dollar of that appropriation in the construction of submarines.

I do not believe the American people will ever sanction an offensive war or any war with any power unless we are drawn into it and it becomes absolutely necessary to defend the honor of the Nation. What we want is a war craft for defending our coasts. I know of hundreds of places along the Pacific Ocean where an army could be landed very easily, miles and miles from any fortification. If we had the submarines provided for in this amendment, they would be sufficient to guard and protect every mile of our coast, both on the Pacific and on the Atlantic. A submarine is the best possible defense. It is most deadly in its attack. A foreign country would hesitate a long time if we had these submarines for defense to undertake to land an army upon our soil.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMOOT. I gladly yield.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. It appears, from the amount appropriated on page 63, that the seagoing submarine is very much more expensive to build—three times as expensive to build——

Mr. SMOOT. Nearly so.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. As compared with the smaller type. As the Senator is restricting his argument to the coast-defense proposition, is it not fair to ask why he would not restrict his amendment to a type of submarine that would seem apparently sufficient for that purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the seagoing submarine can be used for nearly all purposes that the coast-defense submarine can and go to sea as well. It can travel many more miles than the small type. It can also travel faster than a smaller submarine; and not only that, if it becomes necessary it could be defensive and offensive, and the smaller coast submarine could not be used for the latter purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the seagoing submarine can not go in shallow water like we have on the coast. A seagoing submarine to be submerged is bound to be in deep water. Its construction is for distinctive uses, and it would not be available for coast defense to go to the bottom of the sea. The seagoing submarines are intended to accompany the fleet.

Mr. SMOOT. There is hardly a mile of the coast line on the Pacific or the Atlantic where a seagoing submarine would not be perfectly safe, and yet hardly be out of sight of the land. The water is abundantly deep. It is true that a seagoing submarine requires a little deeper water in which to operate, but I believe in case of war we ought to attack any vessel that comes to our shores before it ever gets into shallow water. Our conditions are entirely different from those in Europe.

Some of our States are larger in area than the whole of Germany, and you hardly have to take more than a hop, skip, and a jump in one country until you are in another. Our long shore line is such that the submarine is the war craft that is better fitted to defend our country against a foe of any kind, than even the battleship itself.

Mr. President, the report from the Secretary of the Navy shows the relative tonnage of the principal naval powers of the world. I find of submarines, Great Britain has built 75. She is now building 22 more. Germany has 27, and she is now building 18 more. The United States has 30, and we are now building 19 more. France has 64, and she is now building 22 more. Japan has 13, and she is now building, I believe, 2 more. If we are to take newspaper reports—and I have no doubt they are true—Germany has been building submarines since the beginning of this war as fast and as numerously as it has been possible for her establishments to construct them.

Mr. President, if Germany had sufficient submarines to-day she could destroy the English commerce. Germany's submarines to-day are her only defense that has prevented the destruction of her battleships; Germany's submarines have prevented the English Navy from going into the harbors of Germany and sending her battleships to the bottom of the ocean.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that mines are much more effective than submarines.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, mines are not so effective. When we were at war with Spain mines did not keep us out of the Bay of Manila, and mines have not kept the German submarines and battleships from the English coast. Mines can be destroyed by mine sweepers, but the submarines can not; they are always alert and can move wherever the vessel of the enemy is found.

Mr. President, if the European war should last two years longer the United States will control the greater part of the finances and trade of the world. When we attain that position we shall find ourselves without power to protect our interests, while, on the other hand, Europe will have the power to protect her interests, but will be suffering from loss of wealth and trade. Her credit will be strained and her trade nearly destroyed.

I have been one who has hoped in the past that the Christian nations of the world would never again go to war. I admit my hope has always been clouded with a doubt. My hopes have been shattered, for the greatest of wars in all the history of the world is now raging, and all of the countries involved are Christian countries. After the war in Europe is over every effort will be made by the powers of Europe to control the trade of the world; and if a war such as is now in progress to-day could be brought about by the casting aside "of a mere scrap of paper," is it far-fetched for us to believe or to think that another war could be brought about in order that the trade of the world might be controlled? If that shall happen, Mr. President, I want our Government to be in a position where we at least can protect ourselves against any foe on earth.

Mr. President, I think that there have been two points demonstrated beyond question in the present European war, and I think that our Government ought now to learn and profit by the experiences of other countries rather than to wait and learn by experience in a war in which we are ourselves involved. One is that the submarine has played the most important part in the present war as a means of defense and offense; the other is that the principal use of the aeroplane is for locating the enemy.

I will admit, Mr. President, that in the past I have been a great believer in a strong Navy. I have said time and again that if I were going to be extravagant in the expenditure of public money it would be to build a strong Navy. I still believe that to be the best policy for my country; I still believe that is the only way to insure the people of this country all their rights as American citizens, to maintain the honor of our Nation, and to preserve the existence of our country. It is for these purposes that I have offered this amendment. Instead of constructing great battleships, when one of which is lost nearly 1,000 souls go to the bottom of the sea with it, we should construct submarines, which are just as deadly in their attack, if not more so, and which can be operated with a few men, and the expenditure for which, compared with that of the battleship, is a mere bagatelle.

Mr. President, therefore I sincerely trust that the Senate will at this time vote for the amendment offered by me, for I believe it provides for just what our Navy needs. I have heard some few Senators say that they are satisfied that it provides for the kind of war craft that should be constructed; but they have complained of the amount that is proposed to be appropriated to provide for the number proposed in the amendment.

As I said before, I shall be very glad to support the amendment which the Senator from Oklahoma intends to propose, providing that the construction of these submarines shall be paid for by the sale of Panama bonds. We have $240,000,000 of those bonds unsold. Authorization for their issue has been made. Every dollar of those bonds could have been expended upon the construction of the Panama Canal, but instead of issuing them the cost of building the canal was paid in part from the regular receipts of the Government. The construction of 75 submarines would be the greatest defense for the Panama Canal that could possibly be made.

Mr. President, I shall conclude what I have to say by expressing the hope that the amendment may be supported by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the amendment under discussion, if adopted, will enable our Navy Department to equip itself with an efficient method of defense by sea, which recent developments across the ocean have demonstrated to be most formidable and effective. I am therefore heartily in favor of it, because I believe that we shall not only, through the building of a fleet of submarines, furnish our coast with the best possible modern system of protection against all invasion, but it will also demonstrate the futility and uselessness of our constantly increasing expenditures in the construction of modern battleships.

Mr. President, the historic encounter between the Monitor and the Merrimac at Hampton Roads in 1862 marked a tremendous epoch in maritime warfare and maritime equipment. It wrote the doom of every wooden war vessel in the world and sent it to the junk heap. From that time no nation has constructed any wooden men-of-war. To have done otherwise would have been folly and extravagance, because that great historic encounter demonstrated that upon the sea armored vessels equipped with turrets and guns were superior to any other craft which, up to that time, had been devised by the wit of man.

The nation first to perceive the importance of that battle was Great Britain, and she immediately began to reconstruct her navy. Within the period of a very few years every wooden vessel of war which she had was discarded or put to subordinate uses. Other nations followed suit, since each was obliged to adopt for offensive and defensive warfare the best existing types.

Mr. President, armed preparation upon the sea has gone through a process of constant evolution ever since that time. The monitor and ram were succeeded by the cruiser and the battleship, and the cruisers of 20 and 30 years ago gave way to those better equipped as to armor, power, and speed, and finally what was called the dreadnaught made its appearance a few years ago, which made obsolete every battleship then afloat. Since that time the great powers of the world have been competing in the matter of battleship construction, and changes of type and of power have been so swift that before vessels in process of construction could be completed they in turn became obsolete; and that fact furnishes the groundwork, Mr. President, of the complaint now so vociferously urged all over the United States that our Navy is insufficient and totally inadequate for any purpose of offense or defense upon a large scale, a complaint which has behind it the greed and the organization of the war-implement manufacturer.

During the last 10 years we have expended over a thousand million dollars in naval construction; and next to Great Britain and Germany we are apparently the strongest of all sea powers, and yet it is contended, with some show of plausibility, that our past preparation has practically gone for nothing, and that the work of naval equipment to a degree of satisfactory efficiency is a work of the future; and not only a work of the future, Mr. President, but one which we must at once undertake, regardless of expenses, and carry to completion as rapidly as possible.

Mr. President, we have now in process of construction a number of first-class battleships. We have a number of others in commission, and it is stated by very high authority that a large percentage of them are lacking in gun power and in speed as compared with the first-class types of other nations, all of which means, if true, that expenditure in and for the construction of battleships is useless and prodigal, and that the nations, in their rivalry to secure the best, are leaving each other and themselves behind.

If it be true that the dreadnaught of seven or eight years ago can not contend against the dreadnaught of 1914 it is equally true that the dreadnaughts of 1914 will be outclassed in 1920; indeed, in my judgment, Mr. President, there can be no question about it. It is as certain as any future thing can be. Hence, irrespective of the developments of the European war, to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has directed attention, I believe that moneys expended in the construction of battleships and in the increase of our Navy with that type of vessel is inexpedient, unwise, and unjustified by experience.

But, Mr. President, let us assume that such are not the real conditions, and then regard the problem from the standpoint of the experiences of the past few months and of those which are now in process. These demonstrate to my mind that the battleship of 1914 is as obsolete as the wooden man-of-war of 1862; that it has outlived its day, and can only survive as a type illustrative of extravagant expenditures in the effort to serve the real purposes of their construction.

I was struck, Mr. President, about three months before the outbreak of the European war with an interview given by Sir Percy Scott, of the British Navy, to a press correspondent. Sir Percy Scott is recognized as one of the great British naval experts. He expressed the opinion that the submarine was the vessel of the future, and ended his interview with the remarkable statement that "The construction of battleships hereafter will constitute a sheer waste of money." I give his language as it was reported. I was struck with it because it harmonized very largely with the views that I had entertained, based upon a somewhat general observation and understanding of the progress that was being made and expense incurred in the matter of superior battleship construction.

About the time of the outbreak of the European war Collier's Weekly published, from the pen of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, an imaginary account of a war previously waged between Great Britain and some inferior power. The account was intensely interesting, because it outlined the manner in which the greatest naval nation in the world was reduced to subjection and helplessness by its weaker rival through the agency and effective use of the submarine. It was announced that this article was published as a warning, to the end that the British Admiralty might perceive the seriousness of the situation in the event of hostilities with a foreign power and the danger to which it would be subjected by the use of this weapon of warfare unless it took every precaution against its possibilities.

Mr. President, that imaginary condition is being to some extent duplicated by the events that are now transpiring across the seas. We know nothing, except as we may conjecture, of the outcome of this war; but I think we feel and are impressed with the conviction that if Germany shall triumph it will be due to her effective use of this modern marine monster and its effect not only against British commerce but against the British Navy. The effective use which Germany is making of the submarine is well illustrated by a statement which appeared in the Washington Times of last night, giving the results following the going into effect of the German so-called war-zone decree up to and including February 24:

February 19: Norwegian steamer Belridge, torpedoed in channel.
February 19: French steamer Dinorah, torpedoed in channel.
February 20: British steamer Cambank, torpedoed in Irish Sea.
February 20: British steamer Downshire, sunk by bomb placed by German submarine in Irish Sea.
February 23: Norwegian steamer Regin, torpedoed in channel.
February 23: British collier Branksome Chine, torpedoed in channel.
February 23: British steamer Oakby, torpedoed in channel.
February 24: British steamer Harpalion, torpedoed in channel.
February 24: British steamer Rio Parana, torpedoed in channel.
February 24: British steamer Deptford, torpedoed or mined in North Sea.
February 24: British steamer Western Coast, torpedoed or mined in channel.

In addition to vessels torpedoed or sunk by mines in British waters, the American steamers Carib and Evelyn have been sunk by mines in the North Sea. Loss of at least three other steamers has been unofficially reported. Unofficial reports declare that at least three German submarines have been sunk.

Here are 14 vessels, Mr. President, destroyed as the result of six days' operation of the German submarines in the war zone around the British Islands, and it may be noticed that there is a progressive increase in the casualties, beginning with two on February 19 and showing four on February 24. If this continues, even though the rate of progression diminishes, it is bound in the near future to seriously threaten the food supply of the islands of Great Britain and Ireland, and if it continues its moral effect will be quite as deterrent as its destructive consequences.

On the other hand, Mr. President, the British Navy, the greatest in the world, now lying for the most part between England and Germany, can merely exercise the duties of a sentinel, constantly alert, always apprehensive, but unable to determine when and where its unseen foe will strike. It is true that the German Navy is by the immense British naval force practically bottled up in German waters, and in that regard Britain's great fleet is unquestionably of inestimable service to her; but because of the German submarine, used offensively for defensive purposes, coupled with the German sea mine, the accomplishments of the British Navy up to date have been almost exclusively negative. Her fleet of submarines are practically useless because of the absence of German bottoms within the zones of investment, and I think it is safe to say, Mr. President, that however long this war may continue the British Navy, in so far as the German coast is concerned, will be able to inflict little, if any, damage because of the interference and effective use of this formidable weapon of modern naval warfare, coupled with the mines sown so thickly along her coast lines. The allied fleet is doing good service at the Dardanelles and in the gulf, but it is because of the absence there of the submarine, in so far as we are able to judge from this distance, and I venture the prediction that if it shall appear in those waters it will have a similar paralyzing effect upon the activities of the British and French squadrons in the Mediterranean.

In the face of these conditions, and with this lesson before us, shall we make effective use of this experience by adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, or shall we continue to squander millions upon millions in the construction of battleships, the only benefit whereof will be to increase the dividends of the Armor Plate and Naval Equipment Trusts, all of which are interested in great navies because of the enormous profits which go to them in consequence of this construction?

Mr. President, the casualties of the British Navy have been quite as remarkable and perhaps fully as extensive as to vessels, and far more extensive as to mortality, than the loss inflicted upon its merchant marine. Three of its great cruisers were sunk simultaneously by one submarine, entailing a loss, as I now remember, of more than 1,500 sailors and marines. The Audacious, struck either by a mine or by a submarine, disappeared beneath the waters, its crew being fortunately saved; and the Bulwark, without any warning, exploded, either because of some infernal machine inside of it or because of a mine or submarine outside of it, and its crew was blown to atoms.

In these days the word "dreadnaught" is a misnomer. These vessels dread everything, and properly so. They are subject to attack from the air, from defects of internal construction, from the mine, and from the submarine; and the effect of this continued, nameless, and unavoidable danger upon the morale of the crews can be well imagined. Indee, I may say that with the possible exception of the Russo-Japanese War the casualties of battleships have been far more formidable as to their own than to the crews of enemy vessels. Such is the experience of our Navy, of the French Navy, and of the British Navy, and such they will continue to be as the result of this new danger.

Mr. President, the submarine has nothing new about it, so far as the idea and its development is concerned. Its novelty consists in the recent successful overcoming of those difficulties of detail which have made it heretofore inoperative. Mr. Hendricks tells us in the McClure Magazine for February that during the Napoleonic wars Robert Fulton, subsequently the discoverer of the steamboat, declared to Napoleon that he had an effective method of removing the British fleet, and thus making the French invasion of Great Britain readily feasible. He built a submarine, but its first experiment proving ineffective Napoleon dismissed him in disgrace. The English, with greater prevision, invited Mr. Fulton to England, and there offered to purchase, that they might suppress, his invention—a proposition which Mr. Fulton did not see fit to accept. At that time he gave expression to a prophecy which is being verified—a remarkable prophecy. He declared that the torpedo and the submarine would eventually assure the freedom of the seas to all the nations; and we of this generation see that prophecy verified, for the device which was then designed, and which was not effective, has been developed by others from time to time. As a result, the modern submarine is here; and the use which Germany is making of it and the helplessness of the greatest navy in the world before it demonstrate that with it and through its aid the freedom of the seas will soon be absolute.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is it not practically conceded by the British Admiralty that all that is needed to meet the submarine successfully is a sufficient number of destroyers, light and swift small craft, that can find the submarines and destroy them? Is it not admitted that they are very easy to sink when once attacked by an armed vessel?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, such is the conclusion, I understand, of the British Admiralty; but long ago it was declared that the best way to catch a bird is to put salt on its tail. It is easy to destroy the submarine if it can be located. Thus far but one method of location seems to have been devised, and that is the airship, for it is a singular fact that from the sky the outlines of the submarine may be seen beneath the surface of the sea, and the Germans are meeting that difficulty by painting their submarines the color of the sea.

Of course, a torpedo-boat destroyer can easily get rid of one of these monsters—because that is what they are—provided it can be located and struck before it sinks so far beneath the surface as to make it impossible for a shot or a torpedo to reach it; but the remarkable thing about the submarine is that it is not vulnerable to the attack of another submarine, and that is the reason why the submarine fleet of the British Navy is helpless. One of its submarines might collide with a German submarine beneath the waters and it might also collide with an English submarine. There is no method of discovering and detecting them or of identifying their nationality when submerged, and they are not apt to come toward the surface, except in so far as is necessary for the periscope to obtrude itself above it. If there is any hostile or other craft near by, it will wait for a more propitious time to come to the surface. The best of these submarines have a radius of 1,200 miles, a distance almost halfway across the Atlantic, and enabled, therefore, to screen themselves so that identification and location become practically impossible. They are demonstrating everything that has been predicted of them.

Mr. President, our Navy is primarily for defensive warfare. The battleship will not be used very much longer for offensive warfare, because of the submarine and the mine. Those who have nightmares of coming invasions of this country by the great powers need not fear. Apart from the enormous difficulty consequent upon them—no such invasion having been attempted since the days of the Armada—can find absolute security in a sufficient equipment of submarines and vessels for sowing mines. How can the city of New York, whether it is defended by coast fortifications or not, be reached by the invading force of an enemy if we have a fleet of submarines within and without the harbor, with mines sown as they would be under such conditions, the whereabouts of which are known only to the defenders? And how could a landing be made in Boston or any other seaport similarly defended? And what other line of defense can be as effective?

Mr. President, with a line of swift modern scout cruisers and a sufficient equipment of torpedo boats and torpedo-boat destroyers, the submarines to be provided for by the amendment of the Senator from Utah would make this country, until something more formidable is devised, as absolutely secure from invasion by sea as though we were an inland republic.

Those who wish to learn something about the formidable character of this method of sea attack and defense will find in the March number of the Century a most illuminating article, entitled "The art of submarine defense and offense as applied to international peace," by Simon Lake, who is the inventor of a type of submarine. It is not very long, and I shall ask to have it printed, of course excluding the illustrations, as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE ART OF SUBMARINE DEFENSE AND OFFENSE AS APPLIED TO INTERNATIONAL PEACE.

[By Simon Lake.]

In 1893, when the United States Government advertised for inventors to submit plans for a submarine, no successful boat of the kind had yet been built. Over a hundred attempts had been made, but all had been found lacking in the essentials necessary to produce a weapon of value either for defensive or offensive warfare. At this time the favorite method of control was by the use of vertical and horizontal rudders placed at the stern of cigar-shaped craft. Water was then admitted into various tanks until the vessel would have a buoyancy of only a few pounds. By the use of the horizontal rudder the vessel's bow was depressed, and she was made to dive until the desired depth was reached. Then the rudder was changed to allow the bow of the vessel to assume such an angle that the downward inclined thrust of the propellers was just sufficient to overcome the buoyancy of the vessel. Theoretically, the vessel would then make progress in a straight line.

The largest and most important of the vessels built to operate on this principle were the Plongeur, 1864; the Gymnote, built in France in 1888; the Nordenfelt boats, built for Russia and Turkey in 1887 and 1888; the Peral, built by a Spanish naval officer for Spain in 1888; and the boats built by the Confederates and by Mr. John P. Holland in this country.

At first glance this seems an ideal method of control, but it has been the cause of the loss of many vessels and lives. The method fails because the submarine is not a body with a fixed center of gravity. The submarine is compelled to carry water ballast, fuel, crew, and stores, the combined weight of which is both variable and movable. The amount of water ballast must vary according to this weight. It must also vary according to the density of the water in which the vessel is operating, which varies at times as much as 3 per cent.

It is very difficult to secure a fixed center of gravity in a long, shallow vessel that must depart from a level keel to dive under water. The early builders of this type of vessel did not understand the importance of this fact, with the result that when the bow of the vessel was depressed by the horizontal rudder the water ballast shifted to the forward end of the partly filled tanks and further depressed the bow. The angle then became so excessive that the crew was thrown forward, still further depressing the bow, and the vessel dived to the bottom.

I am informed that this is what occurred in two instances in the Hunley, a Confederate submarine. Twice she was found with her bow sticking in the bottom of the river, with the bodies of her crew of nine men in the bow, where they had died from suffocation. The Lutin and Farfadet of the French Navy, and several vessels of this type built for the British Navy, were lost through this diving tendency.

By means of numerous small ballast and fuel tanks, so that the water or fuel can not shift forward or aft, and large horizontal rudders under power control, much of the early difficulty has been overcome, and the type still survives in both the American and English Navy. Mr. John P. Holland spent a large part of his life in trying to overcome the inherent tendency of the diving boat to make uncontrollable dives. That this type still exists is due principally to the refinements of ballasting and control mechanism introduced into the art of submarine navigation by him and his associates.

The writer was one of the three inventors who submitted designs to the Navy Department in 1893, under its well-advertised call throughout the world for plans for a submarine torpedo boat. The fact that there were submitted only three propositions proved how little the subject was understood.

My plans contained several features entirely new to the art of submarine navigation at that time. The most important of these was that the vessel was designed to be submerged on a level keel, water ballast being admitted, as in all types of submarine. The vessel was also fitted with horizontal rudders aft and forward, but these were designed to keep the vessel always on a level keel, instead of causing her to depart from it, as in the diving type.

My boat was intended to prevent the dangerous shifting of water ballast or fuel that had proved disastrous in the earlier boats. Submergence was effected by four hydroplanes placed forward and aft, at an equal distance from the center of gravity and buoyancy of the vessel, so that when they were inclined either up or down they raised or submerged the vessel and did not alter the trim.

The feature which attracted the attention of scientific journals of the period was that the vessel was not only designed to travel on the surface and at any desired depth below the surface, but that it could also be navigated on wheels over the water bed itself. An air lock and diving compartment were provided. From the compartment a door could be opened, and the crew, by donning diving suits, could walk out on the bottom of the ocean and work on wrecks, cut cables, and plant mines.

The matter of awarding a contract was held in abeyance for over a year. Finally the award was made to the Holland company for the construction of the Plunger on certain guaranties of performance, which were destined never to be fulfilled. This boat was to have done many things that even to this day have never been accomplished by any submarine boat. Her construction extended over a period of several years, and she was finally abandoned in 1900, after the Holland company had brought out a much simpler vessel in the Holland, the first United States submarine torpedo boat to go into commission.

In 1894 I built a small coffin-shaped vessel of wood, 14 feet long, and provided it with wheels and a diving compartment. This vessel was built simply to demonstrate the practicability of my method of navigating on the water bed and opening a door under water. It was propelled by revolving the wheels by hand.

The complete success of these experiments enabled me to secure sufficient capital to build the Argonaut, which was launched at the Columbian Iron Works in August, 1897. She was the first submarine to be fitted with an internal-combustion engine.

I carried on extensive experiments with her in the Chesapeake Bay and on the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean off Cape Henry. Many of these experiments were made during the Spanish-American War, when the entrance to Hampton Roads was mined. I remember lying all one night at the edge of the mine field, with only my sightinghood above water. This was before the invention of the periscope. At this time there was much excitement in the country for fear that Admiral Cevera's fleet, which was known to be on the Atlantic, would attempt to enter the capes and make an attack on the vessels at Hampton Roads, or even attempt an attack on Baltimore. The searchlights from the fort were played all night long, and although the rays frequently shone into the windows of my sightinghood, the watchers at the fort never once saw me. Had I been an enemy, I could have easily destroyed the efficiency of our observation mine defenses by cutting the shore connections.

I had previously written to Mr. Roosevelt, when he was Assistant Secretary of War, offering the Argonaut to the Government for such uses as she could be put to, and he replied that a board would be appointed to look into the matter; but nothing ever resulted.

While at Hampton Roads, I met two officers who were attached to the Harvard, one of the American Line ships that had been converted into an auxiliary. One of these officers had been engaged in a cable-cutting expedition on the Cuban coast and had to grapple and lift the telegraph cable close to the shore while under fire from the Spanish.

He thought the Argonaut was just the thing for that purpose and for mining and countermining. Both officers were anxious to make a trip down to the capes on the bottom, which I was delighted to have them do. All arrangements were made; but on applying to Capt. Sigsbee, their commanding officer, he refused permission, on the ground that he did not feel justified in allowing them to take the trip, as some accident might happen which would deprive the Government of their services.

While I did not obtain recognition from the authorities at Fort Monroe, I gained much valuable experience. I found that navigation over the bottom was much simpler than running a bicycle. The buoyancy could be adjusted so nicely that the submarine would mount any obstruction she could get her bow over. It was interesting to sit in the diver's compartment of the Argonaut and watch through the open door below (air pressure kept the water from coming up into the boat) the changing sea bottom, often covered with oysters. One day we went outside the capes after a severe northeast storm, and found near the bottom a heavy ground swell that would lift the vessel bodily and dash her to the bottom. After breaking a jaw clutch 11 inches in diameter attached to our wheel shaft, we were forced to come up.

This experience exploded the theory that the effect of a wave extends below the surface to a depth only equal to its height, and led me to put the wheels on swinging arms and to provide a cushioning device that would permit the hull of the vessel to rise and fall while the wheels rested on the bottom. The cushioned wheels solved the difficulty. After completing tests to my entire satisfaction and learning much about bottom conditions in Chesapeake Bay and on the coast, I brought the Argonaut to New York under her own power.

Another important lesson learned was that a cigar-shaped vessel is not seaworthy as a surface vessel. I was caught out in the October storm of 1898, and was compelled to lock down all hatches and lash myself to the top of the conning tower. The Argonaut was at this time a cigar-shaped craft like most of the submarines that had been built up to that time. In a storm at sea she would not rise sufficiently with the waves, which would at times go over the top of the conning tower in a solid mass. She was lengthened 20 feet, and a buoyant, ship-shaped superstructure was added to increase her surface buoyancy.

This light, plated superstructure was not designed to withstand pressure, to prevent collapse, and was filled with water before submergence. My light, water-tight superstructure had been adopted on modern types of submarines, except the Holland boat, and is more seaworthy in surface cruising in rough weather.

In 1901 I was called to Washington by a telegram from Senator Hale, then chairman of the Naval Committee, to submit plans to the Navy Department for a submarine torpedo boat. I submitted three designs—one for a small boat to be carried on the deck of a battleship or cruiser, one 65 feet long, and one a large seagoing or cruiser type. The Board of Construction stated that, in their opinion, the plans were the best that had yet been proposed either in this country or abroad. They wished to have vessels of my type in the naval service, but said they were powerless to get them, as Congress had left no authority with the department as to the type of vessel they should buy. They suggested that if I could build, at other than Government expense, the intermediate-size boat, they would have it tested, and if it was found satisfactory, they would recommend its purchase and the adoption of the type for the United States Naval Service.

I returned to Bridgeport and raised sufficient capital to build the Protector. The boat worked perfectly on her first trial. Anyone who could steer a motor boat could control her submerged without any previous experience in a submarine. The department was notified that she was ready, but certain interests opposed her trial until another boat could be built to compete with her. Finally, Mr. Taft, then Secretary of War, appointed a board to try her in comparison with boats then in the United States Naval Service. This board tried her out, and reported her superior to any other boat, and recommended her purchase and the purchase of four others for coast defense.

Mr. Taft sent the report to the Senate and recommended the purchase of the Protector. The Senate, after two days' discussion, voted to purchase her for $250,000, but the proposal was killed in the House. Consequently I accepted an offer for her, and she was shipped to Russia.

On the arrival of the Protector in Russia, she was submitted to exhaustive trials in the Gulf of Finland, in competition with another type, over which she proved her superiority. She was then shipped overland to Vladivostok, where she was placed in commission just previous to the signing of the treaty of peace. Several others of her design were built for the Russian Government, and later larger boats of the cruiser type. These boats were the largest and most powerful that had been built up to 1909. They also performed satisfactorily while submerged on their first trials. They were designed for 14 knots, but the engines were found to be faulty and could not be driven at full speed. They are probably the most powerfully armed submarines in commission up to the present time, as they are armed with torpedo tubes which may be fired ahead and astern or on either side.

The tactics of the submarine will largely depend upon the type of submarine in possession of a country and whether the submarine is being used for defense or offense. If it is proper to carry the defense of one's country to the extent of destroying the enemy's warships and transports in their own harbors, then entirely different tactics must be pursued from that of the purely defensive, and special types must be constructed for that particular purpose.

What might be termed a semipassive defense is the simplest form of defense, but it would be thoroughly effective in preventing the invasion of a country or the bombardment of any of its coast cities.

If the days of common sense ever arrive and all nations get together and agree to disarm, weapons for a semipassive defense should be the only kind permitted.

A perfect defense of any harbor or coast line may be provided by inexpensive submarines with a comparatively small radius of action, both surface and submerged. They should be assigned to fixed stations off the coast, as light vessels are assigned, and to harbors and entrances of estuaries of the sea. They should have sufficient freeboard and surface buoyancy to enable them to ride at anchor comfortably in all ordinary weather and should be fitted with powerful searchlights, wireless, submarine signals, and sound-receiving apparatus. Finally there should be sufficient of them to form a complete cordon about the port or city to be defended.

The Fessenden oscillator is a new invention, and its tests have proved that communication may be carried on between submarines for a distance of 20 miles. Wireless conversation may be carried on under water for several hundred yards. With this arrangement, submarines may be kept in constant communication with shore stations, high-speed scout ships, or with submarines on watch duty. They are able to receive information of the approach of an invading force in ample time to house their wireless apparatus and submerge, leaving only their periscopes or invisible conning towers above the surface. On sighting the enemy, the submarines lift their anchors and proceed to the attack entirely submerged, occasionally coming to rest for an observation. One of the first principles always to be borne in mind is not to let the enemy know of the presence of the submarine, otherwise the quarry will see the white wake of disturbed water, and take to flight.

The commanders of the submarines may, by means of their oscillators, keep one another advised of their course of approach and distance from the enemy, so as to prevent running foul of one another.

Assume the entrance to New York is to be defended by submarines with the characteristics above mentioned, each submarine carrying eight Whitehead torpedoes, each torpedo capable of sinking a battleship. If three lines of defense were established from the entrance at Sandy Hook, one line of defense on a radius of 10 miles, with 4 submarines distributed over the outer semicircle, 3 distributed over the second line of defense on a 5-mile radius, and 1 located at the entrance, it would be impossible for any enemy's ship to reach the entrance without having to run the gantlet within torpedo range of at least 3 submarines. During its progress the submarines could fire at least 12 torpedoes without leaving their stations. The commander of the submarine would, however, on observing the approach of the enemy, maneuver to intercept or get a nearer shot. The chances of the enemy ever getting by the outer line of defense would be very small. This distribution of submarines would be an equivalent to the mining of an area of about 200 square miles with automobile mines. Such submarines can not be discovered by sweeping or any other method known to the art of naval warfare at the present time.

A sea-going submarine called a submarine cruiser was first proposed by the writer to the United States Government in 1901. This vessel was designed to have a speed equal to the cruising speed of a battle squadron. A large surface buoyancy was secured by a superstructure and sufficient freeboard to make the vessel seaworthy and habitable in surface cruising. A number of vessels of this type have since been built, after designs by the writer, for foreign Governments and the United States. Sufficient experience has been had with them to show that they are excellent seagoing boats, and are well able to fulfill the functions for which they were designed, as far as the boats themselves are concerned. As yet no engine builder has produced a suitable submarine heavy-oil engine with sufficient reliability to warrant an ocean voyage of several thousand miles. There are no engine repair shops on the Atlantic highway.

Engine designers and builders are now beginning to listen to the demands of the submarine-boat builders and are cooperating with them to fulfill the requirements. Last year Congress made an appropriation for a 20-knot submarine. The Navy Department, recognizing the difficulty of securing a suitable engine, has allowed three years' time in which to construct such a vessel. Two builders put in propositions, backed by guaranties, to build. I believe that even higher speed will be developed before the expiration of the three years, if the present war continues.

To prevent a long period of suffering, due to one nation driving the commerce of another nation off the high seas and thus isolating it from the rest of the world, a commercial nation can not permit a hostile fleet of commerce-destroying ships, battleships, or transports to remain "in being." As Winston Churchill, the first lord of the British Admiralty says, it must "dig them out."

By holding its own fleets of battleships and commerce destroyers back of mine-protected bases and sending out cruising submarines to destroy the convoys of merchant ships, it is conceivable that one nation might gradually wear down a manufacturing country until it became bankrupt through its inability to carry on maritime commerce.

To destroy ships in a harbor or back of mine-protected bases requires a different kind of vessel from either the coast-defense or the cruiser type. It requires the sly and cunning tactics of a rat, which burrows under or gnaws its way through obstructions and does its work in the dark.

These vessels should be small, provided, like the Protector, with wheels to enable them to maneuver on the bottom. They should be provided with guards to ward off mines while passing through mined fields at low speed, and they should have diving compartments to enable divers to leave or enter the boats and to plant mines underneath the enemy's vessels while they are lying at anchor. This type should be provided with telescoping periscopes for taking observations by day and invisible conning towers for taking observations by night, so as to get direct vision, because the periscope is useless for night work.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish in this connection, however, to read the closing sentences of this wonderful article:

It is surprising how accurately the human ear can detect sound under the water. The writer first discovered in his experiments in Hampton Roads, in 1897, that when the machinery was shut down in the submarine he could distinguish the approach of surface vessels from considerable distances by simply resting a stick against the plating of the submarine and putting the other end into his ear. The steel hull of the vessel became a great sound receiver, and the stick carried the sound waves to the ear. This did not give a sense of direction, so I devised a rotary receiver which could be rotated on top of the hull to pick up the direction of the sound. Shortly afterwards Mr. Mundy, of Boston, introduced his submarine signal and receiving apparatus, which gives a very correct indication of the direction of the sound. Now the Fessenden oscillator improves on that to the extent that conversations may be carried on under water for considerable distances. Not only can you detect the direction of the sound but a little experience with the receivers gives a good idea as to the distance. Every ship has sounds peculiar to itself; the smash of paddle wheels, the slow, but deep, pound of the bearings in large, powerfully engined ships, and the high-speed machinery of the destroyer can all be distinguished by the operator at the receiver. Without any sound-receiving device, while in a submarine resting on the bottom, with all machinery stopped, I have heard even the whir of the machinery in a Whitehead torpedo nearly a mile away.

The "evading submarine" has the advantage of sight and hearing over the surface vessel in searching for its prey. It has invisibility for itself, and carries either mines or automobile torpedoes capable of attacking the surface vessel in the most vulnerable part of her structure. It can make its approach on the surface or awash until near the danger zone of mine fields. It can submerge to the bottom, and proceeding according to the chart, work its way through the cables of mines or under nets or booms until it reaches the vicinity of the enemy's anchorage. If the enemy has its torpedo nets out, the submarine can creep up near the vessel, send a diver out, and attach a bottom mine under her, to be electrically exploded after the submarine has moved a safe distance away. If desired, a mine can be attached to the bottom of the surface vessel and exploded hours later by clockwork mechanism. In this manner mines can be placed under several ships, and all can be blown up simultaneously at a given hour, when the submarine may be miles away. If desired, the submarine can take up a position within torpedo range of several ships, wait until just before darkness sets in, take very accurate bearings, and as soon as darkness arrives, fire torpedoes with net-cutting attachments as rapidly as possible in the direction in which the ships had been located. With this night method the mark of bubbles left on the water by the air-exhaust from the torpedo engines would not betray the direction from which the torpedoes are fired, and the chances are the ships would be destroyed without observing the attacking submarine.

Does this weapon, with such a potential power of destruction, tend to improve mankind or is it a step backward?

The inventors of submarine boats, and those who have given the most serious study to their possibilities agree that they will be the most potent influence that has been conceived to bring about a permanent peace between maritime nations.

Mr. John P. Holland years ago called attention to the important fact that "submarines could not fight submarines." This simple fact makes submarines so potent that I believe they will be able to enforce peace between maritime nations. How can one ward off an attack from the unseen? Dreadnaughts may be pitted against dreadnaughts, aeroplanes against dirigibles, gun against gun, man against man; but take away sight, and all becomes chaos. In this lies the superiority of the submarine, since human vision is incapable of penetrating through the water except for a distance of a very few feet.

The submarine is unique in that it is the first weapon which has a potential power to destroy an invading force and also to prevent an invading force from leaving its own harbors or roadsteads, but which is itself useless for invading purposes.

This states in epitome the essential advantages of the modern submarine, demonstrated by its effective use at the present time in the Old World. In the face of these conditions, is it not folly to go on constructing battleships? This bill calls for two that will ultimately cost between seventeen and eighteen million dollars each. That amount of money devoted to the construction of submarines will give us a permanent fleet, a better fleet, and a cheaper fleet, so far as the aggregate of expenditure is concerned. It requires a smaller number of men to operate them, and at the same time they are, as shown, far more deadly and effective.

Suppose we build these two additional vessels—and some want four and others a greater number—in order that our competition with the other maritime powers may be kept fairly abreast, and war is declared, in consequence of which they may be used: Can they invade an enemy's country? They may attempt it, Mr. President; but when we afterwards learn through the dispatches that they have been blown to atoms by an unseen power whose approach could not be divined or guarded against, will we not then reflect, when it is too late, after these millions have suddenly disappeared and thousands of lives have been lost in an instant, that our policy of ship construction and Navy equipment has been worse than insensate folly?

Mr. President, I believe the time will come when the submarine will be developed so as to serve as a means of transportation. We had, in my judgment, better anticipate these conditions by meeting them with proper equipment than to wait until it is demonstrated by actual experiences of our own how useless it is to continue our present methods.

I propose, although I confess I have no hope of its adoption, before this bill leaves the Committee of the Whole to move an amendment striking out that provision for the building of two more battleships, and providing that the sums of money there appropriated shall be used for the construction of a fleet of submarines both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific Oceans. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that in one particular I think his amendment is defective, because it ought to provide for a certain number of these submarines to be made or operated upon the Pacific coast. With such an equipment the apprehensions of the timid ought to be satisfied; and the greed of the Armor Plate Trust and the Military Equipment Trust will be satiated, if satiated at all, by stimulating the theories and rousing the apprehensions of other nations. Then we will be, as in truth we ought to be, first in all the elements of defensive equipment upon the sea.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I shall not detain the Senate very long.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia what is the relative range of the most powerful guns we have on our vessels as compared with the range of the guns on the vessels of the British Navy and the French Navy and the German Navy?

Mr. SWANSON. We have 14-inch guns on our recent vessels. Unless Germany has recently put on 14-inch guns, I do not think she has any. I think we will have 15-inch guns on some of our vessels. Great Britain has some guns as large as ours, but I do not think there is any nation that has guns of a longer range than those that have been recently put on our battleships. We have generally led the world in the range of the guns on our battleships.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is the range of the guns on our best battleships, and how many of those battleships we have?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know the exact range of the guns on the different battleships. It is stated here in the Navy Yearbook, which will give the Senator the name of each battleship, with the range of the guns and the number of guns; but I am satisfied that, with the exception of the English Navy, our Navy, in range of guns and weight of delivery, is equal to any other navy. I think possibly it is equal to the German Navy, though that is disputed. Some say it is greater, and some say it is less.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does not the Senator believe that the two vital things necessary for an effective fleet now are speed of the ships and range of the guns?

Mr. SWANSON. We have the range of guns. We have no battle cruisers that have great speed. There has been some dispute as to whether it is better to have battle cruisers than to have the regular battleships. Our General Board and Navy Department have been anxious to have some cruisers. They have asked for some cruisers, in addition to the battleships; but we have not made our appropriations as large as they desire, and consequently I think they have preferred the battleship over the cruiser.

Of course, if a cruiser engages with a battleship whose range of guns is less than that of the cruiser, the cruiser, on account of its speed, can keep entirely outside of the range of the guns of the battleship and destroy the battleship, while the battleship could not hurt the cruiser if it kept out of range. But the department has thought that since our ships recently built have guns as large as any cruisers or other battleships, our battleships would not be put in the condition of being in conflict with a battle cruiser whose range exceeded ours; and they have reached the conclusion that with a long range of guns equal to that which any ship could have, it would be better to have battleships that could both receive and deliver blows.

Mr. BRISTOW. But does not the Senator realize that that makes the fleet just half effective? It will be effective in defense if its range of guns is longer than that of the approaching enemy; it can defend itself, but it would be helpless in undertaking to pursue and capture the enemy.

Mr. SWANSON. It would be impossible for it to capture a battle cruiser of excessive speed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask the Senator to allow me to present a conference report.

Mr. SWANSON. I will yield for that purpose as soon as I have finished. I will finish in about 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. BRISTOW. What I wanted to inquire of the Senator is, it seems to me, of vital consequence. I agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] as to some features of this question. It seems to me that it is idle for us to appropriate money to construct ships that have not at least equal speed and equal range of guns with any others in the world. What we ought to do is to provide ships with greater speed and greater range of guns, and then we will not need nearly so many in order to become invincible.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, while we could not capture a battle cruiser, yet, if our fleet was composed of battle cruisers and the enemy had battleships of an equal range of guns, we would be deterred from practically any offensive warfare against them. The only benefit we would have then would be that we would be able to get away and not fight; but if we had 14-inch guns on a battle cruiser and 14-inch guns on a battleship, and they were in a conflict, and each gun was equally effective, and the cruiser was struck, it would be much more easily destroyed than a battleship. The effect of that would be that we would have a good Navy for running away, but a very poor Navy for fighting. We think a Navy ought to have the ability to fight as much as to run away.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I have just turned to the Navy Yearbook; and I will say to the Senator from Kansas, in answer to his question, that Great Britain has 14 battleships that carry 15-inch guns, with a speed of 22 to 25 knots. Germany has 3 battleships carrying 15-inch guns, with a speed of from 22 to 23 knots.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, those battleships of Germany will not be completed until 1916.

Mr. SMOOT. I am reading from the ones that are completed. The United States has six battleships carrying 14-inch guns, with a speed of from 21 to 25½ knots.

Mr. SWANSON. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. SMOOT. I am reading from the Navy Yearbook.

Mr. SWANSON. That is what I have here. The vessels with 15-inch guns of which the Senator speaks are building. One of them will be completed in 1916, one of them in 1917, and one of them——

Mr. SMOOT. No; I take it from the Yearbook, in which I counted the number of vessels, and the names of the vessels are here.

It is true it is in 1916 when they will be completed. It gives the year they are to be completed, and I notice that the last for Germany is 1916.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will yield to a further question, does he not think it is useless for us to expend the money in constructing ships that have an equal speed and an equal range? That simply puts us on an equal footing. It seems to me we ought to have a superior fleet at greater range in order to have any advantage at all. Now, to go ahead and construct ships that are inferior to those that the other great maritime nations are constructing, it seems to me, is wasting money, for they are of no use at all. The conflicts which have been had between England and Germany demonstrate that one ship with the greater speed and range is absolutely the victor against almost any number.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the speed of our battleships is equal to the speed of the German battleships.

Mr. BRISTOW. What about the English?

Mr. SWANSON. It is equal to the speed of the English, except some of the battle cruisers. We have not constructed battle cruisers. Battle cruisers would be very effective against our 8, 10, and 12 inch guns, but could not be effective against the larger guns. With guns of equal range and size, the battleships would have every advantage in the conflict, because one hit from a battleship's 15-inch gun against a cruiser with a 15-inch gun would be twice as effective and would be most destructive. The increased armor plate on a battleship would protect it.

Mr. TILLMAN. There are no cruisers that have 15-inch guns that I know of.

Mr. SWANSON. Of course, our Navy is deficient in not having some battle cruisers that can sail fast. I should like to see some constructed.

Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate long in replying to the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Colorado. I have great confidence in the judgment of those Senators. Their discursive talent goes into all fields of investigation and thought; they have splendid genius and splendid acquirements; but I have more confidence in the General Board of the Navy and in the department, in the Admiralty, and in the navy departments of England, Germany, France, and Italy, and all the other Governments of the world than I have in the judgment of these two gentlemen.

So far as these submarines are concerned, the Senate scarcely realizes what the committee has done. We propose to authorize five seagoing submarines. The General Board of the Navy recommended only three.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has stated that he has great confidence in the judgment of this board. Why did the committee increase the number?

Mr. SWANSON. I will state to the Senator that they recommended only 3 and 16 submarines. The committee gave the 16 submarines and recommended 5 seagoing submarines, 2 in excess of the recommendation of the General Board. We authorize for submarines in this bill $16,300,000. Five seagoing submarines at $1,500,000 each will cost $7,500,000. Sixteen submarines at $550,000 each will cost $8,800,000. There is authorized by this bill from the committee $16,300,000 for submarines. That is all that we can afford to authorize with the present condition of our Treasury and with the question of the effectiveness of seagoing submarines still experimental. We can not afford to exceed that sum. That, as I have previously stated, is more than the General Board recommends.

The proposition of the Senator from Utah to appropriate for 25 seagoing submarines at $1,500,000 each and for 25 coast submarines is entirely unnecessary, considering it from any standpoint.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. How would you view an amendment that would place in the hands of this board $50,000,000 to be spent for such increase and improvement of the Navy as could be made effective in six months, and leave it to their discretion, with the approval of the President, as to how it shall be spent?

Mr. SWANSON. I think the proper way to make these appropriations is for the General Board to make its recommendations, for the Navy Department to make its recommendations, for the committees of the House and Senate to examine and make their recommendations, and then for the Senate and the House from all these sources to reach a conclusion as to what the interests of the Government require. Then we get the information, the judgment, and the views of all of these departments as to the wise policy to pursue in connection with our Naval Establishment.

Now, let us see whether we could appropriate more money for submarines. Senators have an idea that we have no defense to our coasts except through submarines. Mines are effective. No battleship will go where mines have been laid. They are equally as effective as a submarine. The advantage of a submarine is that it can go out where mines can not be laid and thus have a torpedo hit a battleship.

Now, as to the seagoing submarines, I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Navy, which states that seagoing submarines, of which the Senator from Utah wants 25, are still an experiment. The first time these seagoing submarines were recommended was last year, this Government leading other nations, as usual, in its naval policy. The department had an idea that we should have a submarine to accompany our fleet, to go anywhere the fleet would go—if necessary, to go around the world with the fleet—and we have been building one that is experimental in this matter. The contract was let only in December. It is doubtful whether it will be a great success or not. It has to be seagoing to accompany the fleet. It is known as a fleet submarine. Before 5, 10, or 25 should be authorized and constructed we should have an experiment to know that it is a success. We do not know that Germany and Great Britain or any nation has constructed a submarine that can accompany a fleet. There have been some newspaper articles on the subject, but the Navy Department says that they have no positive information that a seagoing submarine has been an absolute success.

There is no doubt the coast-defense submarine has been made a success. We authorized 8 last year. We now authorize 16, making 24 in the last two years. If Senators will read the report of the Secretary of the Navy, they will ascertain that Great Britain has the largest number of submarines, France next, and the United States next. The mistake that France made in its naval policy was to stop building dreadnaughts, as desired by the Senator from Colorado, and thus she lost the position of fourth in naval power. When she was ahead of Germany she had a minister of marine who believed in submarines, and she has submarines second to Great Britain, but when war comes it is the dreadnaught, the battleship, that determines the question of the control of the seas.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. If the German Navy shall ever invade the shores of France and attempt to assail her harbors from the ocean, the Senator will then discover the statesmanship of the French ministry, which constructed a fleet of submarines, and it will be demonstrated to perfection, for it will constitute her protection and not her line of battleships.

Mr. SWANSON. Possibly the judgment of the Senator from Colorado may be correct, but the naval establishment of France thinks otherwise, and France is now trying to remedy its defect in the direction of dreadnaughts and is rapidly increasing dreadnaughts. The judgment of the French ministry is that it made a mistake, and it is trying to get back its naval power by building battleships.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. The development consequent upon Liebnechts's exposé of the Armor Plate Trust indicated that officials high in the French and British Governments and their navies, aye, in the established Church of England, for material reasons, exercise the most potent influence sometimes toward the construction of these expensive equipments rather than those which are not so expensive, but which are at the same time more efficient. Since that time I must confess, speaking for myself alone, that my confidence in the judgment of those who make these expenditures is far less than it was, for the greatest of all combinations on earth and the most remorseless is one which coins blood and tears into dividends, whose assets are war and rumors of war. So the people who furnish the equipment to the armies and navies and who have their stockholders and supporters in all——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield further.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, as to trusts—his advocacy of 25 submarines of a coast character and 25 of a seagoing character, making $30,000,000, equal to the cost of two battleships, as only two companies in America are able to construct submarines—the Elco and the Lake may come behind this, if trusts are working—there is a big, if not a bigger, monopoly behind submarines than behind battleships.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Just a moment.

Mr. THOMAS. I simply wish to say when this fleet is constructed there will be no necessity of duplicating and multiplying them as in the case of the battleships, which become obsolete before many years.

Mr. SWANSON. I beg to differ from the Senator from Colorado. What occasions Great Britain's supremacy to-day on the sea? What makes British commerce in all parts of the world continue except the little portion of it that might be destroyed by submarines? It is because Great Britain has the greatest aggregation of battleships in the world. Germany is afraid to let her battleships come out and contest supremacy with Great Britain. All that Germany is trying to do with her submarines is what? To destroy battleships sufficient so that her battleships can come out and have a conflict with Great Britain. She realizes that when the contest comes it is the fleet of battleships that will determine the supremacy and not the submarines. The only purpose of submarines is as an auxiliary to give supremacy to battleships and not as a navy. It does not look forward to taking care of your commerce. Without the battleships your trade and your business is a failure from beginning to end. France realizes that, and France is now trying to correct the mistake.

A submarine must wait for an opportunity before it is effective. We have given it all the merit which it is entitled to, but it is not a fleet. It can only make the relative differences between two fleets stronger or less. A submarine can not chase a battleship. A submarine is only effective when it gets into the line in which a battleship is going. If a battleship is going from it it can never overtake it. It must wait an opportunity to be in its path. A submarine can only stay 24 hours under water. That is the maximum. When it has been under water 24 hours it has got to come to the top, and the destroyer or the battleship near there can destroy it quickly and rapidly, and it ceases to be of any value. It can only go under water about 45 miles. When it goes under water 45 miles it exhausts its battery and must come to the top. It is dependent upon opportunity. I, for one, am not willing that the great, splendid fleet of America shall be destroyed and that we shall depend upon submarines or gunboats.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Agreeing with the Senator entirely about the propriety of not relying upon submarines but increasing our large vessels as rapidly as possible, I wish to ask the Senator whether any request was made from the General Board indicating a willingness by the department to go much beyond the ordinary appropriations for the purpose of putting the Navy in the best possible fighting condition if it had to do some fighting in the next six months.

Mr. SWANSON. The General Board wanted two more battleships. It desired some other auxiliaries. It desired more torpedo destroyers. But after considering the condition of the Treasury and the fact that the navies of the world are now at war among themselves, and that none of these nations could direct all of its navy against us now, the committees of the House and Senate and the Navy Department reached the conclusion that this was all that ought to be recommended at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose it was the view of the Senate that the condition of the Treasury should not control, but that other conditions should, and that we should spend all we could intelligently spend for the purpose of putting the Navy on a fighting footing within the next six months, does the information furnished by the General Board give us a basis for such an increase?

Mr. SWANSON. I think the report of the General Board was made in November. They examined the conditions of the world in November and the possibilities and the chances of the fleets of the world. Much of the information they had was secret and can not be given to us. They can not give all the information and sources of information, but the only real difference between the committee and the General Board is that the General Board recommended four battleships and the committee recommended only two and the other four auxiliaries, which could be supplied. So far as the request for submarines are concerned, we exceed the request of the General Board.

Mr. President, this committee has recommended, after investigation, the largest naval budget that America ever had. It exceeds any appropriation ever recommended in the past and all the conditions that might arise in the future will require. The Senator must realize that at least two or three years must elapse before these battleships will be constructed. He must realize that that is to be taken into consideration. He must realize the fact that, with all the great powers in the world to-day at war, none of them will send their entire fleet here.

There is no more necessity for increasing this any more now than heretofore, except the committee realizes the idea that the submarine has proved its worth, has proved its effectiveness, has proved its power of offensive and defensive warfare, and consequently we felt justified in exceeding the recommendations of the General Board in that respect.

Now, Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Utah on the table.

Mr. LEWIS. I believe that cuts off debate under the rule.

Mr. SWANSON. I will withhold the motion.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like a few moments to make some observations, if it does not conflict with the polity of the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. I will withhold the motion if the Senator from Illinois desires to address the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments while I express some ideas that I fancy I can not claim a monopoly of. The inquiry of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is my conferee on this committee, seriously arrests my attention. What I will say I do not say as a member of the Naval Committee. I have not given that committee such attention as it deserves from me. Therefore I speak only as a Member of this body, and I speak wholly for myself.

The expression of the Senator from Georgia in his inquiry to the Senator from Virginia respecting the prospective preparation of building battleships within the next six months gives a suggestive form of wisdom that does not clearly appear upon the surface, but which, in my mind, has much more justification than the ordinary man hearing the inquiry would ordinarily apply to it.

For myself, I have no desire to court the reputation of being an alarmist or one who would inflame my country with unnecessary fear, nor shall I speak in any but the calmness of deliberation. Mr. President, I can not look at a great conflagration blazing all around my household and noting the impotency of my fire department without realizing that I, too, may be caught within the flare of the flame and that the habitation in which I reside may be subject to destruction.

The country to-day—I say the country, Mr. President, meaning the world about us—is in the most inflammable state that has existed in a century. To assume that we, the United States, made up of people subject to the same emotions, fretting under the same form of restraint, sensitive to the same affronts as others of the lands involved, can escape complications and, perchance, involvement in a world war is to lay a "flattering unction to our souls" that can not be supported by the mere application of the standard of human nature.

My mind reverts to the fact that there are no records of wars that can be summoned up by the scholars and able men who do the compliment to listen to me here in the Senate but will be recalled as having been brought about in large instance without intention, brought about without a war object, and resulting from conditions little dreamed as likely to provoke conflict so soon as they did.

Wars, Mr. President, as history informs us, are not decreed by Governments in power, by policies of administration in existence. Wars are made by the opposition to the administrations in power. Wars are made by the man in the street, the woman in the house. Wars and conflicts are often brought about by those without who assail administrations in power either for reasons of political issue or to avenge personal remissness in protecting national honor. From such disputation the public is aroused to feel that to maintain national honor it is necessary that conflict be declared.

There sit about me Senators who recall from history that England had no intention of getting into the war of the Crimea. She was removed by interest and by distance miles and miles from every question at issue. It was not the object of her premier when he rose to speak of the conditions surrounding the world to involve England. He sought merely to maintain a neutrality as against Russia and Turkey and two other countries which then threatened to enter into the arena. But we do know that in that undertaking England found herself in a conflict of so great and stupendous a nature that pen has seldom described and history has but barely defined its outline.

There was no intent of England or Germany, Mr. President, to become involved in the Napoleonic wars when the assaults were addressed only to Italy and Austria. It was but an effort, as we recall, to maintain freedom in isolation from assault. But soon England and Germany found themselves enveloped by the flames of the conflagration and soon the torches of wisdom were lighted with flames of war and these countries found themselves marching to the conflict and forced to maintain it to the end at Waterloo.

Sir, do we, Mr. President, fancy that we may escape where others of the same strengths of sentiment of peace and caution as ourselves have not been able to exempt themselves?

What, then, is our condition? If I may be pardoned, as a mere citizen, for expressing myself as I see that condition, I will answer my own inquiry. It is, Mr. President, first, the hope from the heart of every citizen that we may be able to escape the conflict that is now swirling around us. We know that the dream from the bosom of every mother who has a son who might bear arms and lay his life down on distant hills and hidden vales is that the conflict of life and death may never arise. But we are conscious that it has arisen with us under the very exact conditions that it has arisen, suddenly and unintended, in other countries. I see distinguished Senators around me who sat with me in 1898 in the House of Representatives. It is well remembered that I participated in a matter which if I could apologize for and erase from my record I would unhesitatingly offer to do so. The record is that a resolution was offered by Mr. LEWIS, Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Washington, who happens to be the same Mr. LEWIS who is now a Senator from the State of Illinois. The resolution was to recognize the belligerency of Cuba and her independence. It had no object other than to involve a parliamentary conflict between myself and a distinguished Democrat with whom I could not agree at that time and my honorable opponents, the Republicans. But our opponents, the Republicans, seeing that such maneuver was a mere parliamentary attempt, having for its object a political expediency, tendered an amendment to my resolution which demanded the independence of Cuba to be recognized by the McKinley administration.

The Democrats did not dare to vote against it. The Republicans had not desired to bring on this conflict, but in order that there should be no party advantage from either side the Lewis resolution and the resolution tendered by the distinguished gentleman, afterwards the Speaker, Mr. Cannon, were carried unanimously without the slightest intention on the part of any one to effect any other result than a mere parliamentary advantage. In one week from that day the Maine was blown up, as we know, in the harbor at Habana. Our country then cried for vengeance. War was upon us. The experiences of that conflict are well remembered and our unpreparedness and its consequence are recalled.

So we may assume to-day that war never would have been declared but for the affront which Spain felt she suffered by the resolution which we passed in Congress, which at the time did not have for its purpose war. No Member on either side I am sure expected that war would follow. All would have avoided it.

Mr. WORKS rose.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator from California rise to interrupt me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if he does not think that we are inviting exactly the same trouble now and increasing our danger by shipping munitions of war and other things to the belligerent nations in our own ships?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], with an erudition which all admire who know him intimately, and with a premonition of the future which must have been very clearly indicated by his interrogatory, comprehended some of the things the able Senator from California has just intimated, and that is that within the next six months, deplorable as the possibility may be, some things can arise in this country to which this our country would give serious aspect to and as far as possible prepare for as war.

I answer the Senator and say my country may be verging ever closer and closer to that serious conflict, but which only the calmest intellect, the noblest emotion, and the highest Christain cooperation can rescue us from.

So with words of the Prince to Horatio—

> Since the affairs of men still rest uncertain
> Let's reason with the worst that may befall.

Mr. President, I recount some of these situations. We are a sensitive people; we are a people slow to take affront as a body; but when we take affront we seldom surrender the offense without some form of resentment to the extent of retaliation. Keeping in mind the question of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], of late we have noted the irritation caused our country by the contentions of some of those nations now engaged in war. On the part of Germany and her spokesmen there is a demand that there shall not go from America ships carrying certain things which an ordinary American ship, when her Nation is at peace, would have the right to convey. Mr. President, breadstuffs is threatened as contraband. It is gravely proposed in certain quarters that our Nation should assume the agency of serving one or the other of the combatants, depriving our own people of the revenues coming from the sale of their own products and our commerce of the prosperity of the exchange, notwithstanding that article 12 of the treaty with Prussia in 1785, revived by the treaty of 1828, guaranteed free intercourse with foreign nations, an "intercourse of commerce not to be interrupted." This treaty followed the spirit of similar treaties with Prussia as early as 1799, which has at present the same spirit in expression—declaring in form of contract—authorizing this, the country of America, to send its manufactured products into any part of the world wherever our country shall not be at war, we being a neutral. There is a disposition to deny that privilege. We stand strong upon our rights.

England in the meantime steps aside, if I do not mistake her position, from the literal word of our treaty obligation with her, and she likewise insists that there shall be no engagement on the part of the United States by her vessels in any matter which her rival may enjoy the benefit of, be it of whatsoever condition, quality, or quantity, particularly opposing the sending of breadstuffs. It is forgotten by England, I am sure, that in the war between Japan and Russia, when one of the combatants there urged a similar doctrine against us to that which England is urging upon us, the Secretary of State for the United States, Mr. John Hay, controverted the principle, and in an official note, receiving the indorsement of America, said:

> The Russian rule obviates the necessity of blockades; it renders meaningless the principle of the declaration of Paris—that a blockade in order to be obligatory must be effective; it obliterates all distinctions between commerce in contraband and noncontraband goods, and is in effect a declaration of war between a people of a neutral and those of a belligerent State.

We recall that upon the receipt of that note from America Russia receded from her position, though she was on the eve of applying it in the East against us in the same manner as is now threatened in European waters in the attitude of England in the European war.

During the South American war Lord Salisbury, speaking of the attitude of Great Britain, anxious at that time to have such supplies as would serve their purposes against the Boers, did not hesitate to affirm saying:

> Foodstuffs, though having a hostile destination, can be considered as contraband of war only if they are for the enemy's forces; it is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used; it must be shown that this was in fact their destination at the time of their seizure.

Yet, President, I take it that all Senators sitting around me, doing me the courtesy of paying their attention, recognize these principles as fundamental in the guaranties to America.

Now, the question of the Senator from California and that which was no doubt in the mind of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] brings me to ask, Mr. President: If nations shall, for purposes of expediency, or being driven by the exigencies of war, find it agreeable to treat these treaties as having no existence or to violate them because it may serve their objects elsewhere, what should be our position? I answer, can the United States supinely surrender its rights merely to accommodate the exigencies of others at war between themselves? Shall we decline to enforce the duty we owe the American citizen because it might conflict with the conveniences of one or the other of the belligerents or place one at a slight disadvantage to the other in the arena of war? Mr. President, we can not. Shall we decline to protect our commerce in its right to enter into every avenue in the open sea wherever it can be occupied to the advantage of our people while we are a neutral complying with the law applicable to neutrals? I answer, we can not.

Then, sir, if there shall be any country which shall grow so courageous or allow its courage to take advantage of what is alleged in certain quarters to be our unprepared state and rise to the altitude of audacity and not only violate its treaty with us but to assail our American ships in such manner as to destroy them to prevent their cargo being delivered to the destination, and, as a consequence, sir, shall take the life of an American citizen, as the lives of American citizens were taken when the Maine was blown up in the harbor of Habana, does any Senator assume that our American people will be so quiescent under mere rule of neutrality or desire of peace as to allow that affront before the world to go without resentment? Dearly as we would love to feel that those matters might be adjusted without conflict, we know our country, we know our people. They will not take insult nor remain inactive under assault. Then, Mr. President, in view of this fact of our immediate surrounding of danger of possible conflict and complication, why should we not look at it fairly and reckon with it openly?

The reason why the Navy of the United States to-day has not as complete preparation as it should have and why the Army is not so sufficient as it might be is because every time a public man occupying the public arena somewhere has risen to propound to his countrymen the dangers as he saw them the public press of our country, anxious for peace and solicitous to allay the alarmist wherever he may be, has immediately announced that there was no foundation in the fear of the spokesman. The citizen has been educated, therefore, to believe that we have no dangers ahead and that, therefore, it is unjust for us to put an expense upon him for a thing that could not be justified; consequently, where we tender the expense for increase of Navy and Army at this time the reply is, "There are no dangers to justify it."

I hold, Mr. President, that the hour is upon us when we should tell our countrymen frankly where the dangers really are, that we may justify them in their confidence in us and cause them to feel that their contribution of the necessary expenses for the rehabilitation of the Navy and the proper adjustment of the Army is vindicated by the conditions.

Sir, some of them rise to my mind, and I take the liberty to revive to the memory of Senators that when I assumed to open the debate upon the Panama-toll bill on this floor, supporting the viewpoint of the President and giving the reasons, I then advanced the logic of why we should not hastily break treaties with other countries and thus invite conflict against our commerce and retaliation at the hands of the nations of the world against our ships and the consequent result of war possibilities, as had occurred with England and France by the United States. I pointed out the dangers as I saw them of what we might enter upon.

I now call attention, Mr. President, to the fact that Japan, however much her leaders might feel the desire for peace, has grievances against this, my country; that Russia, however much her administration might desire peace, has resentments growing out of broken treaties against this, my country; that in South America there is not a feeling of kindliness or affection to this land of ours. These South American countries feel that, under the guise of the Monroe doctrine, we are gradually intruding ourselves upon them, first as guardians and next as proprietors. Sir, with the memory of what transpired in connection with Panama and Colombia, coupled with conditions now in Mexico and as they have been for the last year and more, we can hope for nothing but a sentiment of resentment and unkindliness from that particular zone of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. President, I now wish to ask that if a conflict should arise between any of these countries and ours, how do we stand? Let us frankly look at it as a citizen might. Japan is to-day allied with Russia, France, and England. With one of the countries she was only lately in deadly combat. Does any American of intelligence assume that the Japanese are not an artful people, that their legislators are not shrewd and wise, and that through generations of 2,000 years they have not educated themselves to the art of skillful diplomacy that disguises real purpose when necessary? Will it be denied that they would take advantage of every just opportunity?

What are their two grievances? First, we contend that it is contrary to our principles to allow their people to enter into our country upon the same equality as does the European. The Japanese resent that. Mr. President, supposing China was to be set upon by Japan and there shall be a repetition of the war between China and Japan, and there shall be before America the very appearance that China is to be absorbed by military methods on the part of Japan; and supposing, in behalf of the commerce of America and our institutions, we should go to the rescue of that young Republic, modeled after our Constitution, and should attempt to render some aid by advice, or in any other form, for the protection of that which is hers and ours, in the meantime denying Japan the renewal of the "gentlemen's agreement," so termed, respecting her citizens entering into this country and enforcing that other, to wit, the exclusion of her subjects, Japan will have her grievance against America. Do you think, my colleague Senators, it will end there? Permit me to be so presumptuous as to offer my suggestion as to what will transpire. Japan will say to Russia, to France, and to England: "Gentlemen, in the hour of your trouble I was your ally and friend. In return for that I now demand of you that you serve your partnership with me, joining with me—Japan—in a demand upon America that she shall fulfill what I feel is her just obligation; but, at any rate, that you shall join with me—Japan—in supporting me in my demand for the same rights in America for my countrymen that you—Russia, France, and England—enjoy."

Will anyone imagine that these three countries can remain indifferent to that demand? Will any of my brother Senators, historians and scholars as they are, deny that such was the very reason that England was forced into the Crimea? Will they forget that that was the very reason of the obligation that caused England to enter the Napoleonic wars? Will they lose sight of the obligation that these countries will really owe to Japan in view of Japan's entrance into the arena against Germany in the East? Then if France, England, and Russia did not feel that they could enter into active operations with Japan, and though they might withhold their steaming galleons and not assault our Atlantic coast directly, it is perfectly plain we could expect no sympathy from them and that our enemy would be receiving at their hands every form of supply that could go to an enemy, wherever such was, either in money or munitions. Then we would have to assault these for their indirect war on us.

Then there would be that other situation in South America and in Central America. They would be encouraged to be the base of supplies to the enemy, with France and England and Russia—France and England particularly—entering in their own commercial spheres in those countries against America and converting the Panama Canal against us.

Now, Mr. President, it is perfectly plain that, if we look at our country through the glass of history, we must recognize that she will have reflected upon her the very same conditions that have followed other countries and set upon them under similar conditions. Then what should be our position of preparation? Should it be to sit quietly by and assume that these things can not arise because we are American? Is there any magic in the name America to these, our natural foreign opponents?

We have been regarded by them as intruders in commerce, experimenters in government, innovators in the attempt to overthrow kings. We are received with wonderment, but in no wise accepted with approval. Shall we fancy that merely because we are America, in the splendid prestige that we have enjoyed in the past, these, our natural opponents, shall be frighted from their opportunities when the time shall come? If, as the able Senator from California intimates, one of these great countries should feel that we are violating neutrality by sending out our ships, which may carry arms, on the one hand, or breadstuffs, on the other, the grievance is the same to each. Their privilege to resent it will remain as strong. Their power to retaliate and punish will remain as firm, while their qualifications to enter into the conflict quickly and hastily is demonstrated by the very manner in which they are waging the contest of death and the immolation of countries before the eyes of civilization.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator rise to interrupt me?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I did not make my inquiry of the Senator from Illinois upon the ground that we were violating the neutrality laws at all. I was thinking alone of the interest of our own country, whether we were not, by shipping munitions of war, foodstuffs, and various other things that are going from this country to the belligerents, endangering our own country and tending to bring us into the very conflict that we are trying to escape?

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, Mr. President, I can not overlook the Christian character of the able Senator from California and his great anxiety to avoid conflict by doing such things as he feels would be humane, Christian, and godly. His point of view is rather born of that standard; but, as much as I would love to enjoy such, I am compelled to recognize myself merely human and my fellow citizens of my country intensely so, and that if the time shall come when they feel they must take a practical method to enforce practical results no amount of precept will restrain them; and, if any opponents bring upon themselves the necessities of conflict, conflict only will our Nation be content with, and to the fullest extent necessary. I therefore say to the Senator it may be all true as he says, but our people will not accept that holy theory of righteousness as the sole standard.

Now, Mr. President, what should be our attitude of defense, if I dare offer it as a fellow citizen and as a Member of this body? In the first place, Mr. President, no adequate Navy can, as the Senator from Georgia intimated, be so constructed within the next six months or the next year as to wholly defend us against the advances of these things which may arise; but some immediate steps must be taken by us for the legitimate anticipation of future difficulties. This all men should admit. It may be that we may expend a little more than necessary; but what is the loss? I have lived on the Pacific coast. I was born and reared, as is well known—at least to those who have interest enough to know anything about me at all—on the Atlantic coast. I had an inconsequential service in the Spanish-American War; I am intensely interested in the welfare of the National Guard, of which I am an humble officer. I view the standpoint of my country to some degree, let it be admitted, affected by my interest in the militia and the experience I have drawn from a very casual and not important service.

I would, Mr. President, therefore feel that if this country should expend a little more money than necessary two things would follow: First, in the fortifications of the coast cities. In these fortifications being made sufficient work could be given thousands of men now out of employment; factories could be given occupation; all that enters into fortifications would be utilized, and the fortifications would serve as an alarm and warning to those who would hereafter contemplate, if contemplate they should, advancement upon our coast. To that extent we would minimize the cost of a large Navy.

Then, when it came to the Navy construction of the large ships—as this has been the theory of the committee, and in it I heartily concur—we have a double advantage. In constructing these large ships we construct them at home. Formerly, when the cry went out against the building of a Navy because of expense it was in those days when we bought most of our material abroad and our money therefore went to others. But to-day the iron and steel, the wood and the cloth, the interior and the exterior furnishings, all come from our own people; and if we spend the money of our Treasury we spend it on ourselves, by extra employment to labor in all forms of its utilization, reaping the benefit through a sense of protection which gives security to the citizen at home and offers an insurance to him in undertaking with freedom his general commerce and business, which otherwise he would hesitate upon, for fear of dangers which now menace him.

Therefore, the committee's recommendation has my approval, and I give my reason for my justification of the committee. If this thing that I fancy can arise to my country, and which I feel it should prepare for openly, courageously, and bravely, I accept it and prepare for it. I can not accept the idea certain distinguished Senators have expressed on the floor that if we give evidence of undertaking war preparation we arouse a sort of resentment on the part of other countries. I can not care if we do; I can not pause in the discharge of the duty I owe my country to measure what some other country may feel from its punctilious sense of affront or what it feels may be its privilege to be sole in the preparation for self-defense. I can only calculate the rights of my own people as I see them, contemplate the justification of my own Nation in her conduct as I feel it to be just and righteous.

Mr. President, I have in these utterances given reasons why I support the committee and have expressed the fear that I now reiterate—that dangers surround this, our country; that in the universal conflagration we are threatened with, the prospect of being involved in the flame is apparent; that if we escape, it will be an instance contrary to the rule of history, for which we should first express our gratitude to God, then our appreciation of the patience of our countrymen that enabled us to enjoy such fortune.

But, sir, as I conclude these observations, let me send one word from this arena, speaking for myself. I trust that no country in the world will draw any encouragement from any differences that Senators on this floor may disclose in discussion or that Members of the House of Representatives may voice in what is called naval military preparation. I trust no country will assume from these debates that there is any party in this land that is opposed to a just national defense. That none will lay to themselves the consolation that there is a spirit in this land that would discourage the very fullest resentment of a wrong that was against American honor. We may have our differences, as we will have, in purely local politics. We will contest in the arena of thought upon political ideas, and we will differ in debate as to the best method of achieving results; but to the world we send this greeting: We welcome them all in peace; we pray God that benign state will always continue with us, with the world; but if there shall be any who now brood the thought of visiting upon America any other form of fortune than peace, let them contemplate that we know our duty; we feel our honor; we are sensitive of the complete unity and support we enjoy from the humblest to the highest of the citizens in this land. Mr. President, if I correctly understood the allusion made this morning it was to assert that there were financial institutions and organizations existing now in these United States with purposes to antagonize our country here at home to serve our enemies abroad. Mr. President, I can not believe that any organization of American citizens, foreign born or otherwise, could band together to embarrass their adopted country. I will not accept the accusation. To the charge made from any quarter I answer—for them, for us, for all—and say that we are Americans; and in America there is no place for any man or set of men who shall resolve themselves into any order of citizenship with the issue of themselves as financiers or as foreigners against America, their home. By no pretense or excuse will this be justified in American hearts; and, while no man will receive at our hands discrimination, nor his nationality be abused, nor his race discredited, matters not from what land he comes, having been received in our asylum of liberty, blessed with the generosity of our justice, we will ask of him that he, too, be an American and serve as an American.

If he can be less, ever so little, he is no American. Then, as all are Americans and must remain such in any hour of conflict from any land anywhere, let it be understood that we are a united people in America as against all forms of opposition against America. The differences of the past between our dear beloved country of the South and of the North have been healed in blood, and all sections now live together in love. All political differences of the ballot box likewise close; and in serried ranks of union we move to protect the flag and maintain the honor of our country against all form of assault, while we sustain the dignity of the Nation and uphold the supremacy of her people as against all enemies wherever, within or without. So, Mr. President, paraphrasing Philip of Faulconbridge in King John, we proclaim to the earth, saying:

> Now, these her princes are come home again,
> Come the three corners of the world in arms,
> And we shall shock them. Naught shall make us rue,
> If America to itself do rest but true.

I support the amendment of the committee, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I consider the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a very important amendment and in the interest of peace. I want to see this country at peace with all the world. I want to see it stay at peace with all the world. I am in favor of doing almost anything, short of impairing our national integrity, in order to preserve peace, and especially to keep out of the contest that is now going on in Europe. I can see no excuse for our getting into this contest. We ought to keep out of it by all means; but I am fearful that we are tending toward getting into it, not intentionally, not purposely on the part of any officials of the Government, but nevertheless surely. I feel satisfied that they are all striving to keep us out of this contest, but it looks to me as if we are moving almost inexorably toward this strife. I hope I am mistaken; but as I see the events that come from day to day, and the steps that are being taken and attempted to be taken, I am sometimes led to wonder whether fate is not driving us irresistibly into this contest.

It seems that selfish interests and selfish desires have led to practically every contest in the past, and those same interests and those same influences seem to be controlling our destinies at the present time. I fear that many of the acts of the Government itself have a tendency to lead us nearer and nearer to the seat of war. We have passed a law providing for Government insurance of private vessels—war insurance. We have placed the Government behind the proposition to hold out this inducement to the merchant and the shipowner and the commerce trafficker, and have said to them, "Take the risk, face the dangers, and we will stand behind you, and we will pay your losses—the people, the Government of the United States." They are taking the risks, they are going into the war zone, they are striking the mines, they are being blown up, and our people are going to be asked to pay the bills.

The other day I saw across the whole front page of one of our great daily papers, in great headlines, the name of a certain vessel flying the American flag, and the statement that she had been blown up by a mine or a torpedo. Mr. President, that can have but one effect upon the people, and it will to a greater or less degree inflame their minds and increase the war spirit throughout the country. How many such incidents as that it will take to bring us to the point where the people will insist that something shall be done in a radical way, in a forceful way, in a warlike way, to prevent such occurrences, I do not know. Certainly, however, there are certain interests and elements in the country that seem to be willing to take advantage of these incidents in order to create, apparently, a warlike spirit throughout the country. Inflammatory statements are made in the papers; attention is called to the fact that a vessel flying the American flag has been blown up; and it is now stated in the papers that this Government as a Government is liable, by reason of the insurance we have authorized, in the amount of six or seven hundred thousand dollars for the destruction of these vessels.

These are privately owned ships, they were carrying privately owned cargoes, and yet the American people must make good the loss they have suffered. They knew where they were going. They knew what they were going for. They knew they were in a danger zone. They had been warned by the Governments at war as to what was likely to happen in this territory, and yet they took the risk. For what? For gain solely; for profit only. The Government of the United States, as a Government, gets nothing out of this matter. The benefit is simply to commerce. That benefits a few individuals, a few people, and certain industries.

Then again, Mr. President, we are urged to pass a law under which the Government of the United States itself is asked and expected to send a Government-owned ship into these same waters, into the ports of the warring countries. Why, Mr. President, what would that mean? The people of the country understand, when a ship flying the United States flag, but owned by a private citizen, goes into this territory and is blown up, that of course the integrity of the Government is not affected; that the Government property is not destroyed; that the Government sovereignty is not infringed upon; that to a certain extent the private owner has taken the risk. But suppose a Government ship, not only flying the American flag but owned by the Government of the United States, operated by the Government of the United States, and part of the very territory of the United States, and part of the property of the United States, is blown up?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask my colleague if he thinks any material difference would be made in the situation he has just described by creating a corporation as the instrument by which the Government owning the vessels conducted the business?

Mr. JONES. Not at all. That is simply a subterfuge. It really makes the transaction worse.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me the Senator has not at all overstated the dangers that would arise from that situation, and that the mere indirection of operating through a corporation does not relieve us in any respect.

Mr. JONES. Not at all; I do not think so. I treat it as a Government vessel. Other nations will look at the substance and not regard the shadow. It does not make any difference if we are doing this through a corporation, and, Mr. President, it does not need any argument. As a matter of fact, you can not argue a proposition of that kind. We know what the American people are likely to do in a case of that kind. We know how they are likely to act in a case of that kind. We know what a feeling of indignation and of patriotism would sweep over the country the moment the news was flashed across the electric wires that a Government ship—a ship of the United States Government—had been sunk by a torpedo or by a mine.

It seems to me that the events of the last few days ought to make us stop absolutely in the course along which we seem to have been headed, if for no other reason than to avoid such possible risks.

I would do this, if I were the President of the United States, under the present condition of things: I would issue a proclamation stating to the people of the United States that every owner or operator of a ship going into the war zone that has been declared such by the belligerent powers of Europe does so at his own risk, and he must not expect to involve the people of the United States in this terrific struggle simply because of his desire to make a few paltry dollars for the carrying and sale of cargoes.

It is true that we have rights as a neutral Nation. It is true that our citizens have rights as citizens of a neutral Nation. It may be well and proper for us to insist upon those rights ordinarily, but there are times when a man is not justified in insisting strictly upon his rights, or if he does he must take the consequences.

Out in our western country we used to have—we do not have them very much any more—classes of men who very frequently came into our towns and went down the street shooting out the lights and shooting out the windows, shooting up the town, as they called it—cowboys. If a citizen of the town learns that there are two bands of these men shooting up a certain street, he has a perfect right to go out and go on that street while this is going on, because it is a public highway, but if he does he ought to take all the risk of anything that happens to him, and if he gets shot, or if he gets an eye put out, he has nobody but himself to blame, and the man who would insist on doing it simply because it is a public highway and he has a right to be on it would get but little sympathy if he should be shot.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, is it the understanding of the Senator from Washington that the Government now takes the risk of these vessels that are going into the danger zone?

Mr. JONES. I see that some of these vessels that have been blown up have had insurance under the war-insurance bill that we passed. If that statement is correct—I simply take the newspaper reports for it—then, of course, we are liable; but that is not the point I am trying to make at all. The point I am trying to make is that we see in the papers every day statements that our vessels are neutral; that we have neutral rights, and that our ships have a right to carry our commerce from the ports of this country to the ports across the water, whether belligerent or neutral, and they seem to be insisting that the Government should get behind these people and insist upon their rights notwithstanding the fact that the belligerent countries, the countries at war, have declared that certain territory is a war zone, and that mines are there and submarines are there and torpedoes may be expected there, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, as to the wisdom of the Government engaging in the insurance business, I desire to direct the attention of the Senator from Washington to this recent experience:

The Evelyn, I understand, was insured for $100,000 on her hull by the Government and $311,000 on her cargo. The premium paid was $13,000. The Carib was insured on her hull for $22,253 and her cargo for $235,850. The premium paid was about $8,000. The total premiums received by the Government for the insurance of these two vessels amounted to about $20,000 and the loss which the Government must bear amounts to over $650,000. The total amount received by the War Risk Bureau in premiums since the passage of this law is $1,500,000, and the liabilities of the Government amount to $55,000,000.

If that is a good enterprise for the Government of the United States to engage in, it is not working out very satisfactorily.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, from a financial standpoint it may not work out well. I do not expect it will if this war lasts long, but I am not so much interested in that. We may lose thirty or forty million dollars, but that is nothing—nothing compared with what would happen if we should get into this struggle. That is what I want to warn against. If a few more ships are blown up upon which we have issued war insurance, it will not be the fact that it will cost us more money that will inflame the people of the United States—not at all. That will be used simply as an incentive or as a means of inflaming the people. It will be called to their attention that their money is behind these ships, their Government is behind these ships, and, therefore, that their Government is attacked when these ships are sunk; and this will be used as a leverage by certain interests to inflame the people of the country and lead them into trouble to maintain the Nation's honor, when, in fact, it is all done in the interest of trade, commerce, and financial profit. That is what I am afraid of. It is not the financial loss that worries me in regard to this matter—not at all.

But as I was proceeding to say, Mr. President, we ought to notify and give the trading interests of this country to understand that while it is true we have neutral rights and they may have neutral rights, this is not the time and this is not the occasion to absolutely insist upon the strict observance of those rights; and that when Germany lays down a war zone and when England lays down a war zone, each for its own defense, and warns the neutral nations of the earth that they must keep out of there, then we should say to our people, "If you go in there, you go there at your own risk."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Suppose Germany or Great Britain laid down as a war zone the Atlantic Ocean. Does the Senator contend that the United States would have no business to send its ships out into the Atlantic?

In other words, my question is to this effect: Suppose Great Britain or Germany or any other nation outlines a zone that is entirely unreasonable, that interferes with the shipping of the United States. Is this Government going to serve notice upon its people that they can not go upon the sea, because the nations have outlined this unreasonable zone?

Mr. JONES. I have not said that we should notify them that they can not go into these zones, but that if they go there they go at their own risk. So, if England declares the Atlantic Ocean a closed sea, which is an almost unsupposable case, as a matter of self-defense, as a matter of self-protection, unless we want to get into the war, then I think we should say to our people: "There is the declaration. It is made by these belligerents. Their passions are aroused. They recognize no international law that interferes with their right of self-defense, and international law goes the way of war when war comes, and if you go into this zone you do it at your own risk." Now, then, we might have a right to say that England has no right to declare the open sea a closed zone, but we can not enforce that except by war if England determines that, for her protection, she must do it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I share with the Senator from Washington his desire for peace. I am willing to go to the very extent of honor to secure it and maintain it; but I have grown up in this country to believe that it is the business of the Government to protect the rights of its citizens where they have a right to be, and I think the way for this country to get into war is supinely to lie down and say to the nations of the world, "You can prescribe your zones, you can lay down your rules, and we will say to our people, 'We will not protect you. We will not follow the flag where the flag has a right to be.'"

I repeat, I think the very suggestions that are made that we must acquiesce in what the other nations say to us is an invitation to war. It can not possibly be avoided, because there is no person so subject to attack as the coward, the man who will not support his own rights.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not urging this from a cowardly standpoint. I am urging it from the standpoint of our own interests. I am not urging it from the standpoint of fear of Germany or of England. I am not urging it from the standpoint that we are not able to enforce what we claim is our right to navigate the sea, but I am urging it in the interest of those who must fight if fighting is done. I am urging it in behalf of those who must die if dying is to be done. I am urging it in behalf of the homes of the land that must be broken if war comes; and I say that the homes of the land and the lives of our citizens are worth far more than the right to carry trade and commerce for freight and to gain a few paltry dollars through any open sea or war zone.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I am going to get through after I say a few things.

Mr. SWANSON. If we do not get the bill in conference soon, it will be impossible to pass it. There are a great many differences. The Senator is discussing what our conduct should be in connection with a question of diplomacy. I hope the Senator will let us get the bill in conference and defer that for a future speech.

Mr. JONES. I know the anxiety of the Senator from Virginia to get the bill into conference, and I want it done. I sympathize with him in that, but there has been a good deal of freedom of debate in this matter this afternoon, and I am going to take a little time. In fact, I would have been pretty nearly through by this time but for this colloquy. If the Senator will just let me go on, I have a few things to say, and I am going to say them, not because I want to delay the bill, but because I want to say them, I guess, and because I think they ought to be said.

Now, Mr. President, it is not a cowardly policy that I am advocating. It is not the policy of fear, it is not the policy that invites aggression, but it is a policy that I advocate in behalf of the people of this country and one that conserves our own interests and the welfare of our people.

It was stated on the floor a moment ago that we must protect and assert the rights of American citizens. That is true, but the American citizen will have to protect and assert his rights if anything is done by way of force. We can not protect the rights of American citizens on the floor of the Senate. If force must be used to assert and protect his rights, that must be done by the bayonet in the hands of the American citizen, and his breast will be bared to the cannon ball and the saber thrust when his rights are defended or asserted by force.

I ask, Mr. President, that we shall follow a policy when the nations of the earth are inflamed with passion and hatred and stubbornness that will keep us out of it—not from fear, but for the preservation of the happiness and peace and prosperity and homes and rights of our own people and our own country.

Now, Mr. President, I have here an editorial from one of the papers of my State that expresses my sentiments pretty thoroughly on this matter, that I want to read. This is from the American-Reveille, of Bellingham, Wash. It says:

[From the American-Reveille, July 16, 1915.]

GENERAL EMBARGO MAY BE NECESSARY.

The attitude of Great Britain and Germany toward United States shipping has created a feeling of such tenseness as to be truly alarming.

There is not a doubt that both of these great nations would draw this country into the conflict if by doing so they can see an advantage to themselves.

I do not think there is any doubt about that—

Germany seeks to make our shipping so perilous that the United States will decline to accept the responsibility of sending American ships across the Atlantic. Great Britain, on the other hand, by flying the Stars and Stripes over her vessels, is tempting Germany to torpedo one of our ships and thus provoke a quarrel.

Both of these nations are utterly selfish in the new policy adopted by them. They do not care a rap what injury is done to this country if, perchance, they secure an advantage thereby.

And it is this condition that is so disquieting.

If Germany were to destroy an American ship, presuming it to be a vessel of one of her enemies flying false colors, the United States could do little else than to protest. Our Navy could not punish Germany. Our Army would never be sent to Europe to command respect. We would be required to await the end of the war and obtain such justice as could be possibly rendered in the courts. And this would be a humiliation to the United States such as this Government has never been called upon to suffer.

This country can keep out of this trap by forbidding ships of American registry crossing the Atlantic until the crisis has passed. It can avoid complications by keeping out of the war zone. Furthermore, it can lessen the dangers of being brought into the conflict, now or later, by placing an embargo upon foodstuffs and war materials intended for either of the belligerents.

There would be a loss of business, true, but a thousand times better it would be to the United States to lose this trade than be involved in war. No business is so important as to require the risk of the peace of this country while all Europe is crazed with war. Indeed, from the domestic standpoint, there should be no more shipments of foodstuffs exported for a year at least. The demand from abroad is already working a serious hardship upon this country. It is the essence of folly to empty our storehouses when we, ourselves, may be upon the verge of war.

Washington holds the key that locks the door to permanent peace. That key is in the form of an Executive embargo. If we permit a few grain speculators and ammunition manufacturers to menace our peace while trying to reap the profits of a foreign war, now that the transporting of these articles threaten to involve us, we commit a national crime.

If we can not trade abroad without endangering our interests, we should manage to forego the temporary benefits, keep our surplus supplies at home, and "watchfully wait" until our warring neighbors have recovered their sanity.

South America wants and needs much of our surplus. Trade with neutral nations, such as Norway, Sweden, Italy, and China, and especially with those that have ships that can transport supplies purchased of us, can be continued. But to risk the perils of being held unneutral because of selling supplies to belligerents is too grave to be continued. We had better establish storehouses of our own and fill them for a possible emergency, even to the point of purchasing these supplies with Government funds, than pursue a policy that threatens a breach with any power.

It is believed by men whose judgment should be sound that the present attitude of American merchants in collecting and shipping supplies for those at war is prolonging that conflict. If this is true, all the dangers considered, we should be strictly neutral, keep our products and manufactures at home or sell to other neutrals, and await the time when trade may be resumed without embarrassment.

England will not permit Americans to supply foodstuffs and clothing even to civilians of her enemies. Germany will not consent to us manufacturing cannon and ammunition with which to arm and equip her foes. War-time logic sustains both in these representations. Then why favor either; why indirectly assist either?

Mr. President, the whole idea of that editorial is not fear, not cowardice, but it is a desire to protect our own people and preserve our own interest, promote our own welfare and our own happiness. It places life, happiness, and peace above avarice, selfishness, trade, and the dollar.

Now, Mr. President, just a word about this amendment. About 15 years ago, soon after I entered the House of Representatives, I received an invitation to go down on the Potomac with other Members of Congress to see an exhibit of a submarine. I went and I saw that exhibit, and I have been a strong advocate of submarines ever since. This was in the early stage of submarine development, and yet enough was shown to me, at least—unscientific and inexperienced in naval matters as I was—enough was shown there to convince me that that was the coming instrument of defense in war. It showed even in its imperfect condition how it could go under the water, how it could sink and then maintain a certain depth for a considerable distance. I was convinced that it would only be a short time, I was convinced that the time was not far off, when these vessels could not only be sailed under water, but they can also be directed under water without anything showing above the surface for a considerable distance. I do not think there is any doubt about it. They will direct their course under water by compass or in some similar way.

They have been developed wonderfully since that time, and every day in the papers I see evidences of the effectiveness of the submarines. Battleships have been sunk without any chance of defense or protection. Cruisers have been sent to the bottom, and now almost every day merchant ships are sunk. It seems to me that this war has actually demonstrated what I was convinced of before—that a new era has opened in naval warfare. I have appeared before the committees of the House and I have urged in the Senate increased appropriations for these submarines, and I am glad that the committee has made very liberal appropriations for submarines. I am glad it has been as liberal as it has been, and possibly we have no right to expect that they should do anything more in view of the recommendation of the naval board and the action heretofore taken.

Right here I want to say this, Mr. President. I have a great deal of respect for the opinions of these expert officers. But my observation with reference to experts has been that their opinions are not very reliable along the particular line in which they are expert, and they do not take into account the general practical situation and results, and so I think that oftentimes the opinion of the layman as to the general policy that should be pursued is far better and more reliable than the opinion of the experts. The experts recommend, I believe, one of these ocean-going submarines. I am glad the committee has disregarded that recommendation and has recommended five. I think the committee has shown more wisdom in a broad way than this expert board, who are no doubt patriotic; there is no question about that; who are no doubt experienced naval men who want to do what is for the best interest of the country, but their horizon of wisdom is narrowed by their expert training.

I do not believe that this country can do better in the way of defense than to get a large fleet of submarines. I guess it is all right to have two battleships. I have been voting for them for quite a while. A certain program was adopted a few years ago, and I have been willing to vote to get enough battleships to carry out that program to make up different units in the fleets that they want to make up, but I have hoped that some time we would get those units filled and stop building these great battleships that become practically useless after just a very few years, and cost a million or two each year to operate.

I would be glad to take out one of the battleships of this bill and take the money for its construction and put it in submarines. I think we would add to our Navy by far and large by such action as that. But I suppose we can not do that. It might not be desirable to do it in view of our trying to bring up these battleship units.

So I will not propose anything of that kind. I should like to see it done, and I hope we will soon do it, but if we are not going to do it now, I should like to see us increase this appropriation to a certain extent in order to get this means of defense.

O Mr. President, we do not want anything for offense in this country. We do not need anything for offense. But if it is necessary for defense, then we have our millions and our billions. I have no fear of being attacked unless, as I said a while ago, in some mysterious way over which apparently we have no control, and which seems to be accelerated by our own acts, we should be drawn into this struggle—as I hope we will not be—but if we are to be, then we should have something for defense. I am anxious for this increase of submarines, because they can be constructed in this country in a comparatively short while, and they can be put in the principal harbors of our country without much delay. If we have 40 or 50 of these submarines along our coasts and harbors, there is not a battleship fleet in the world that will dare to come within striking distance of it. If they do not come within striking distance of us, what is the use of our having battleships, then, to repel their battleships and go out on the ocean and try to sink them or let them sink us. What does it amount to when we are sunk? If we can keep them away from our shores, that is all we care for. I think what this country really needs for its Navy is a good flotilla of submarines and a few fast cruisers—not battleships, but cruisers—that can run away from, if you please, the warships of any other country on the seas and catch any merchant ship that floats. Then we can destroy the commerce of our competing country; and that is really what counts in these wars, so far as the sea is concerned.

Mr. CLAPP. That is all it is about.

Mr. JONES. That is all it is about, as the Senator from Minnesota states. Somebody said a while ago that we want battleships to protect our commerce. You do not see any battleships protecting the British commerce. What does protect her commerce? Her cruisers; cruisers that can run faster than the cruisers of the enemy and can shoot farther. That is the reason the cruisers of Germany were sunk down here off the coast of South America a short time ago. It was because they could not run as fast as the British cruisers and could not shoot so far. That is what we want on the sea. It is to destroy the enemy's commerce; and we can do that by ships that can run faster than her commerce ships and also faster than the enemy's warships. We keep out of their way and catch the commerce vessels and destroy them. That is what I should like to see if we get in war. I should like to see built a few cruisers—the fastest cruisers in the world.

Of course I suppose they would turn right around and build some faster ships. That is what war development comes to in the end. This can be done with battleships and cruisers, but it can not be done with submarines. One submarine can be more efficient than another, but one can not wholly surpass another. The nature of their operations prevents that. Their effectiveness does not depend alone upon their speed and the size of their torpedoes.

The real thing that we want is a defensive navy, and there is not a better defensive navy than a fleet of submarines in the different harbors of our country.

We are appropriating millions for fortifications. I suppose that is all right, and yet these touch only a few points on the coast. They are fixed and immobile. This war has shown that fortifications do not really amount to very much any way in the face of modern artillery. If you take the money that we are spending for fortifications and build submarines for these different harbors, it will do more to keep battleships away than these fortifications and cover a far greater territory.

Now, Mr. President, this is the cheapest way to build up a navy. It will build up the most efficient navy of defense. It can be maintained in the cheapest possible way. Then why should not we adopt it?

Just right here I want to call attention to what probably every Senator knows; I really did not know it—that is, I did not think about it or that it amounted to so much. If I had stopped to study and add up the appropriations of each year, then I would have begun to realize what we are spending for war in time of peace. I do not mean for pensions. I do not mean for what has come out of the Civil War, but I mean for what we have been appropriating year after year for war preparation in time of peace and without actually expecting war.

For the Navy alone we have appropriated $1,892,103,000 in annual appropriations since 1898—almost $2,000,000,000; with the appropriation in this bill it is over $2,000,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. For how many years?

Mr. JONES. Since 1898.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator how those expenditures compare with the amount which has been expended in the same length of time by Germany, and how the two navies compare?

Mr. JONES. I will let the members of the Naval Committee tell the Senator. I have not looked it up. I am really interested in what we have done.

Mr. LANE. For the information of the Senator I will say that we have expended a number of millions more money than Germany. They have an effective and efficient navy, and ours ought to be in the hospital from what I can learn.

Mr. JONES. We must not overlook this, that we pay our officers and our men, both in the Army and Navy, much more than is paid for officers and men in the other armies and navies of the world. This makes up a large part of these appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, we pay our laborers more to construct our ships; we pay them almost twice as much.

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it is not true that our Navy is not in good working order and an effective fighting force.

Mr. JONES. I imagine that our Navy would give a pretty good account of itself if it got into trouble.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ship for ship, our Navy is as good as any in the world.

Mr. JONES. I presume so; but I am just calling the attention of the country to what we are actually expending for the Navy in time of peace.

For our Army we have appropriated $1,495,885,000 since 1898—one and a half billion dollars—not for war, but for our Army in time of peace. We have expended for fortifications $122,716,000, or a total of actual appropriations since 1898 of $3,510,704,000, and in this Congress we are going to appropriate $250,000,000 more; in other words, since 1898, with the close of the coming fiscal year, we shall have appropriated almost $4,000,000,000, which has been taken from somebody somewhere and somehow, and used in preparations for war, in this country.

Mr. President, I am willing to put a little bit more into this bill for submarines, because I think they are the most effective means of defense; we can get them ready very soon, and they will make our coast and our Nation absolutely impregnable. Then let us stop the battleship construction, diminish our expense, relieve the people of some of this tremendous burden, and add to the sum of human happiness and the comfort of the individual citizen.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long. It is very seldom, indeed, that I differ from the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and I do not now differ from him in the desire he has for peace; but I have been somewhat surprised at his statements in reference to our duty at this time.

I said a moment ago that I believed that a surrender of fundamental rights on the sea might lead to war. Such surrender, I am convinced, would stamp us as cowards; and the coward is always open to attack. It has not been our doctrine in the past to surrender national rights at the order of any nation, and we have been clear of trouble. I commend, as I could commend nothing else that President Wilson has ever done, the two messages he has recently sent—one to Great Britain and the other to Germany. Those two messages meant more for the security and honor of the people of the United States than anything he has done since the European war opened.

I do not want to invite war, but I do want to preserve the rights of the American people. I condemned the proposition to buy ships by the Government to put upon the war-stirred sea because I maintain that it was an unwarranted invitation to trouble. I did not like the proposition to invite the merchantmen of the warring nations of Europe to desert their nations in time of trouble by granting them the right to enlist under our flag. It was an act unbecoming a great neutral nation. It is possible that Great Britain may excuse, in a measure, her approval of hoisting the Stars and Stripes over her ships as a deception to Germany's guns; but under the law of nations, under the unbroken custom of all civilized maritime nations, we have undisputed rights upon the seas, and any nation can be permitted to say to our country, "You must keep out of a certain zone that we mark out"; they can say, "You must forego your trade with South America; we are going to patrol the southern seas, and if you go in there you go in at your peril."

Mr. President, I say that such has not been the policy of the United States in the past, and it has had the respect of the world because it has first demanded nothing that was not right, and then has at all times insisted that its rights should be observed.

I object most strenuously to pulling down the flag or vacating any right essential to national sovereignty which belongs to this country and which does not entrench upon the rights of any other nation. I insist that we must maintain the honor, integrity, and sovereignty of the United States. If we do that, we shall be secure from attack; but, if we do not do it, we shall say to our producers, to our farmers, and others, "The markets which have been secured through peace and war throughout our history, the markets of the world which are yours, you must forego for fear you shall violate some policy—some false and improper policy—which other nations have adopted." No, sir; I want to avoid trouble, and to avoid it I want to be prepared at all times to protect and defend American rights.

During Cleveland's administration England sought to make trouble in Venezuela, and it looked as though there would be war, but the President of the United States served notice on Great Britain that American rights would be protected. The result was peace, and the Stars and Stripes was made more secure in its rights on the seas and elsewhere. So, Mr. President, I repeat that I sympathize with the Senator from Washington in his desire for peace, and I will not invite war by supinely surrendering to any preposterous claims which Great Britain, Germany, or any other nation may make upon us.

Mr. JONES. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; certainly.

Mr. JONES. I merely want to interrupt the Senator to suggest that the conditions now are entirely different from what they were in the Venezuela incident. Then we were at peace, and now war is on.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the United States is at peace at the present time. Some mistakes have been made in our foreign policies; but at this momentous time it is the duty of the people of the United States to stand by the President in our vital foreign relations when he insists upon the rights of the American people; and I, for one, propose to do so.

I will vote for a sufficient appropriation to make a Navy that will be strong enough to protect us in every relation. I do not like the suggestion of "running away" or of building boats that can "run away." It has been the policy of the United States to stand up to the fighting line when it has been necessary to do so, and all the world has believed that we were capable of doing it. I do not want to change that policy now; I do not want to lose the respect of other nations, because to me it might mean war. It not only might mean war, but it would mean humiliation and disgrace, which are generally worse than war. This Nation must maintain its self-respect. It can do that by asking no unjust thing, by assuming no improper position, but, at the same time, insisting that its every national right shall be sacred in the eyes of the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not understanding the amendment some time since, the Chair was in error in ruling that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was in order. The amendments proposed by the committee are first in order. Then the amendment of the Senator from Utah will be taken up. The next amendment of the committee passed over will be stated.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 63, line 17, to strike out "one submarine" and insert "five submarines."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the amendment of the Senator from Utah in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, and therefore does not the vote first come upon the amendment of the Senator from Utah?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee is to strike out and insert.

Mr. SWANSON. I make the point of order against the amendment of the Senator from Utah that it has not been estimated for; that it is not reported by a standing committee of the Senate; and that it increases an item of expense.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any question but that we can amend the House provision of a bill; and that is virtually what my amendment proposes to do. The committee has already amended the provision of the House bill, and I will offer an amendment to the House provision. I inquired when I took the floor, as a parliamentary question, whether the amendment would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can be no doubt that committee amendments are first in order. The committee has the right to perfect the text before the motion is entertained to strike out.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the Chair is right in that, and that is the reason I made the inquiry before I began to speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the matter, as he had not looked at the bill when he previously ruled. Without objection, the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was on page 63, line 18, after the words "speed of," to insert "twenty-five knots or more if possible, but"; in line 20, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$1,400,000" and insert "$1,500,000 each"; in line 21, before the word "submarines," to strike out "eleven" and insert "sixteen"; and at the beginning of line 23 to strike out "$2,305,000" and insert "$6,820,000," so as to make the clause read:

Five submarines to be of seagoing type to have a surface speed of 25 knots or more if possible, but not less than 20 knots, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $1,500,000 each, and 16 submarines to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $550,000 each, and the sum of $6,820,000 is hereby appropriated for said purposes to be available until expended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Chair to Rule XVI, which reads:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah increases the amount—

or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

That is not true of the amendment of the Senator from Utah—

or treaty stipulations—

The amendment does not comply with that requirement—

or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session—

It does not comply with that requirement—

or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

It does not comply with that requirement—

or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

And it does not comply with that requirement. It is not estimated for.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee has amended the House provision and the committee amendment has not been estimated for. Five seagoing submarines have not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any requirement that they should be.

Mr. SWANSON. That amendment was moved by direction of a standing committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was moved by direction of a standing committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 24, page 63.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have not yet been disposed of, and nothing is in order until they are disposed of. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, beginning in line 18, after the numerals, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to purchase armor at what he considers to be a reasonable price he is authorized to begin the construction of an armor plate factory upon land already owned by the Government, the total cost not to exceed $8,000,000, toward the construction of which $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided further, That the time for the submission of the report of the committee appointed by the act of June 30, 1914 (Public, No. 121), is hereby extended to the regular session of Congress convening in December, 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is in the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to come in on page 63, after line 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, line 24, after the word "expended," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief machinists, chief carpenters, and chief pharmacists shall be termed commissioned chiefs, and that the commissioned chiefs and warrant officers shall constitute a corps in the naval service to be known as the service corps, which corps is hereby created: Provided, That the commissioned chiefs shall, after six years from date of commission, be recommissioned with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, and six years from date of commission as chief with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, be recommissioned as chief, with the rank of lieutenant in the naval service: Provided, That officers of the service corps shall take precedence next following officers of like rank in the line of the Navy whose commissions dates on the same day or previous to that of the service officer, except in the case of chief carpenters and chief pharmacists, who shall take precedence in a like manner to officers of the construction corps and Medical Corps, respectively: Provided, That officers of the service corps shall receive the pay and allowances, including longevity pay, heat, light, and quarters' allowance, as is now allowed or may in the future be allowed officers of equal rank in the line of the Navy: Provided, That warrant officers shall receive the same allowance for heat and light as is now allowed or may in the future be allowed an ensign in the line of the Navy, this to be in addition to the pay and allowances already provided by law: Provided, That immediately on the passage of this act that officers of the service corps shall be recommissioned in accordance with the provisions of this act, and thereafter all officers of the service corps shall be examined for promotion by a board of officers from the service corps.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I raise the point of order that the amendment violates paragraph 3 of Rule XVI.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I hope the Sentaor will not raise the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 13, after the figures "$980,799.50," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the increased compensation as now fixed by law for the Marine Corps for foreign shore service shall hereafter be paid to the officers and enlisted men in that corps while on sea duty, in the same manner and under the same conditions as is provided by the act approved May 13, 1908, for officers of the Navy.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator will withhold the point of order until I can explain what the amendment means.

Mr. SWANSON. I withhold it for that purpose.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, three or four years ago it was determined that it was fair to allow the officers of the Navy additional pay for performing duty at sea beyond the limits of continental United States. The officers of the Marine Corps are performing the same kind of service that the line officers and staff officers of the Navy are performing, and there is no reason why the conditions of pay should not apply to one corps as well as to the other. It is distinctly unfair that these men, because they happen to belong to another corps of the service, should be receiving the same pay that they would receive if performing duty at the navy yards of the country, while other officers on the same ship under the same conditions are receiving 10 per cent additional pay. I hope the Senator will see the fairness of the proposition and be willing to allow it to go into the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. I will let it go into conference and look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, on page 33, which it seems to me should be adopted in order to carry out the clear intention of the law. It can not be done directly, because of the point of order that would lie against it if the positive remedy were to be suggested here.

The point that I wish to cover is this: On March 4, 1912, the Congress passed a law providing for a Naval Dental Corps. It treated the corps just as it did the naval corps itself. That provision of law, however, has never been observed. The provision of law to which I refer is found on page 14 of public act No. 433, which provides as follows:

That a Navy Dental Reserve Corps is hereby authorized to be organized and operated under the provisions of the act approved August 22, 1912, providing for the organization and operation of a Navy Medical Reserve Corps, and differing therefrom in no respect other than that the qualification requirements of the appointees shall be dental surgeons and graduates of reputable schools of medicines or dentistry instead of "graduates of reputable schools of medicine," and so many of said appointees may be ordered to temporary active service as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary to the health and efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, providing the whole number of both regular corps and reserve corps dental surgeons in active service shall not exceed, in time of peace, 1 to each 1,500 of the said personnel.

Here is what I want to call your attention to:

And no dental surgeon shall render service other than temporary service until his appointment shall have been confirmed by the Senate.

Under that act no regular dental surgeons have been appointed. No name has been presented to the Senate for confirmation, but certain dental students or dentists have been detailed by the department to act in this capacity; and the ruling has come to be by the Attorney General that these details, not having come to the Senate at all, are now appointments for life.

I propose, on page 33, at the end of the paragraph at the top of that page, to offer a limitation to that appropriation, which I send to the desk.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I think that matter was disposed of last night on a point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No, indeed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, on page 33, line 7, after the words "said active list," the following:

Provided, That no money appropriated for the pay of the Navy or for the pay of retired officers of the Navy shall be used for the pay of any dental surgeon, or for the retired pay of any dental surgeon, or for the pay of any dental surgeon on whose behalf a claim for retirement for age or disability as an officer of permanent tenure might be predicated, unless such dental surgeon shall have been appointed a dental officer by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I think that is a limitation on an appropriation, and a point of order would not lie against it; and I will consent to its going to conference, to be looked into.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I made the point of order last night on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] as being general legislation, and I renew it now.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is not at all the same, Mr. President. This is a limitation and not general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled. This is simply a limitation on paying out some money, and says that it shall not be paid out for a certain purpose. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the matter at the top of page 31 stands as printed in the bill? I am somewhat confused on account of the changes that have been made.

Mr. SWANSON. It reads as follows:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, within two years of the date of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps any officer who may have been transferred from the active to the retired list of the Navy under the provisions of section 9 of said personnel act.

Mr. WEEKS. Then, Mr. President, I offer an amendment to that, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 31, on line 6, after the word "section," it is proposed to strike out the word "section" and insert "sections," and also to insert the words "eight or," so that it will read:

Under the provisions of sections 8 or 9 of said personnel act.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to explain that amendment. Under the personnel law a list of applicants for voluntary retirement is provided in section 8, and from that list are selected by the Secretary of the Navy those who may retire at the end of the fiscal year, taking the place of men who otherwise would be selected out if these applications for voluntary retirement had not been made and the applications granted. Now, we are providing in section 6 of the bill that the President may within two years reinstate those who have been plucked from the service. It seems to me that he should have the same privilege in the case of those who have made application for voluntary retirement. It means that the President may restore efficient officers who may have been sick at one time, have recovered their health, and who are strong enough to perform valuable service, as well as others. I hope the amendment will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I do not know to what extent this would permit reinstatements in the Navy. Has the Senator any idea as to how many officers would be affected by it?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. There is a list in the Navy Register of those who have retired.

Mr. SWANSON. How many have been retired by voluntary retirement?

Mr. WEEKS. I should think probably there are about as many as have been plucked. There may be 50 on the list now. I could tell exactly by examining the register.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The distinction between the two classes is that one class retires voluntarily, and the other retires involuntarily. I think that as we have repealed the so-called plucking law, we had better let that provision stand as it is, and deal with that alone. I hope the Senator will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reply to what the Senator from New Hampshire has just said.

We have had a plucking board in operation which has presumably plucked the men who were least efficient, and who therefore could be better retired than others. These men who have voluntarily retired have been almost invariably men who were in good health, but in many cases they have voluntarily retired because they may have intended to take up some other vocation. After retiring, however, they found, as a result of regulations made by the Navy Department, that they could not take up employment with any company or any individual who was furnishing supplies to the Navy. If they had not supposed when they made their application for retirement in many of these cases that they could take up such employment, they would not have asked for retirement. I think they are, on the whole, better men than the men who are proposed to be restored to the service by section 6, and if we are looking to the efficiency of the service rather than to do something for somebody, we should give the President the same privilege in the case of those who voluntarily retire that we have given him in the case of those who were involuntarily retired.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further observation?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that this is a most extraordinary procedure. A man is educated at the expense of the Government for the service of the Navy. He sees an opportunity to go into business, and he voluntarily retires. He may not make a success of business, and he wants to get back into the Navy. I can not see that we are under any obligations to provide that he shall get back into the Navy.

Mr. WEEKS. If the Senator will pardon me, I think as far as the usefulness of the Navy is concerned we are under just as much obligation to provide that such men may get back as we are to provide that those who have been plucked shall get back.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a matter of opinion. I do not agree with that.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, my information is that a great many people have voluntarily retired, under the apprehension that they would go before the plucking board.

Mr. WEEKS. I think that is probably true.

Mr. SWANSON. And in that way a great many people who are very inefficient, who wanted to get out of the Navy, and were satisfied that they could not stand before the plucking board, have gone on the retired list.

Mr. WEEKS. There may be such cases.

Mr. SWANSON. I would not like to open up the list to a parcel of people who were afraid to go before a plucking board because they knew their record was such that they would be plucked, and I feel constrained to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. On what does the Senator base his point of order?

Mr. SWANSON. I base the point of order on the fact that the provision of the bill is limited to section 9, and this is an endeavor to put an amendment on section 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I ask the consent of the chairman and the Senate to a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment beginning at the foot of page 32 and ending on line 7, page 33, was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment beginning at the bottom of page 32 and ending at line 7, on page 33, was adopted. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, before this vote is taken I should like to say that the Senator from Missouri asked that this amendment be passed over, and it was passed over; and then it was taken up in his absence to-day, when he was out of the Senate Chamber. I did not know that he was absent; and I think he ought to be given an opportunity, under the agreement that it would go over last night on account of his absence, to offer his amendment now, and have the matter reconsidered for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, then, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, on line 24 of page 32 and line 1 of page 33, I move to strike out the words "on July 1, 1914." I will state that this amendment and the one following will perfect the section, if agreed to. I have submitted them to the chairman of the committee and to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], at whose instance the amendment was put in, as I am informed, and they say they have no objection.

Mr. CLAPP. Do I understand the Senator to say that the amendment is on page 32?

Mr. STONE. It begins on page 32, at the bottom of the page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, in the committee amendment, on line 24, after the word "retired," it is proposed to strike out the words "on July 1, 1914."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that the Senator from Missouri is not in possession of the fact that this amendment was amended, and that there is an amendment here inserting the words "from July 1, 1913, or."

Mr. STONE. I was not aware of that fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator wish to strike out those words also?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, after the word "retired," in line 24, page 32, the words "on July 1, 1913, or July 1, 1914."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Now, Mr. President, on line 6, page 33, after the word "not," I ask to insert the word "so."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 6, after the word "not" and before the word "retired," it is proposed to insert the word "so."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. In the same line, I move to strike out the words "on said date." I will ask the Chair whether it should not be "dates"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It should be nothing now, since we have stricken out the dates.

Mr. STONE. It still appears in the bill, Mr. President, as I understand. The words "on said date" still remain in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; they should go out.

Mr. STONE. They should go out, and I ask that they go out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "on said date" in line 6, page 33.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 4, after the word "duty," it is proposed to insert——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in an amendment which has been adopted. It will be necessary to reconsider it again.

Mr. WEEKS. I move to reconsider it.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask to have the amendment stated.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What does the amendment propose, Mr. President?

Mr. WEEKS. I ask that it may be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes, after the word "duty," on line 4, page 33, to insert the following words:

Or any officer retired under section 8 of said act of 1899, the action in whose case has been examined by the Naval Committees of the House and Senate and favorable reports made by said committees on a bill to transfer said officer to the active list.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that would apply to two officers only, both of whose cases have been examined by the Naval Committees of the House and Senate, and bills have passed Congress restoring them to the service.

Mr. SWANSON. What two officers?

Mr. WEEKS. Commander W. W. White and Commander Harry Kimmel.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator says the committees of both Houses have passed on the matter?

Mr. WEEKS. The committees of both Houses have examined the cases, and bills for this purpose have passed Congress.

Mr. SWANSON. With that understanding and on that statement, I have no objection to the amendment being reconsidered.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that does not qualify the language which precedes it?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think so, in any way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It seems to me that the language used in the Senator's amendment, about the cases being reported on by the committees of the House and Senate, would be applicable to the entire paragraph.

Mr. SWANSON. I did not think so from the language as read by the Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let us have it read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "duty" it is proposed to insert the following words:

Or any officer retired under section 8 of said act of 1899, the action in whose case has been examined by the Naval Committees of the House and Senate and favorable reports made by said committees on a bill to transfer said officer to the active list.

Mr. SWANSON. The word "or" evidently does not limit it to what precedes it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do I understand it is a favorable report by the House committee and the Senate committee, or the House committee or the Senate committee?

Mr. WEEKS. The House committee and the Senate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The word is "and."

Mr. WEEKS. Both.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the Senator mean by that that it must be concurrent?

Mr. WEEKS. I mean to say that both cases have been passed on by the Naval Committee of the House and the Naval Committee of the Senate and the bills have passed Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to inquire if the committee amendment on page 30, lines 1 to 14, has been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate adopted a substitute.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The substitute offered by the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Offered by the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move to add the following to the amendment as it was adopted.

Mr. CLAPP. Let the amendment be read, so that we may know what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, add to the amendment of the committee already agreed to, at that place, the following words:

There shall be kept a merit roll of all line officers, upon which shall be entered and continuously kept the professional rating of each officer, and should it be found at the end of any fiscal year that the retirements pursuant to law—the voluntary retirements under the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899—and casualties are not sufficient to cause the average vacancies enumerated in section 8 of said personnel act, the Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon as practicable after the 1st day of July in each year, select a sufficient number of officers from the grades of captain, commander, lieutenant commander, and lieutenant having the lowest rating upon said roll in their respective grades, to cause the average vacancies enumerated in section 8 of said act. These selections shall be transmitted to the President, who shall thereupon by order transfer the officers so selected to the retired list: Provided, That not more than five captains, four commanders, four lieutenant commanders, and two lieutenants are so retired in any one year. The promotions to fill the vacancies thus created shall date from the 30th day of June of the current year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a speech on this amendment, except to say that it is a method of retiring officers to take the place of the plucking board, which has been abolished. The Senate by a vote to-day abolished the plucking board, and it seems to be the general opinion in the Navy, and, I think, largely in the Senate, that the Navy will suffer very greatly if this system of retirement which has been in force is abolished and nothing is substituted in its place.

The amendment which I have offered provides for the same number of retirements, the same kind of retirements, but instead of having the officers to be retired selected in the discretion of a board, which has come to be called the plucking board, they are to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy from a merit roll, and those are to be retired who have the lowest rating upon that roll.

I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Is the Senator from Washington aware of the fact that three-fourths sea pay of the next higher grade was changed by the act of August, 1912, so that now an officer is retired on the grade he occupies at the time?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I was not aware that the law of 1899 had been changed.

Mr. BRYAN. It has been changed so far that they are retired on the same grade they hold at the time of retirement. I suggest to the Senator that he amend his amendment in that respect.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can see no occasion for the adoption of this amendment. We have already adopted the amendment reported by the committee as a substitute for the elimination of what is popularly known as the plucking board. This amendment simply gives to the Secretary of the Navy the power that the plucking board possessed, except it does say that their records must be examined. The law governing the plucking board required them to do the same thing, and it produced a great deal of discontent. I do not see how the difficulties and objections can be removed by transferring it from the plucking board to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow an interruption there, I will say that the plucking board was not required at all to select officers for retirement from their ratings on a certain record. It is the essential change in the situation that should take place by this amendment, that the selection would be from those whose records have the lowest rating.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask him if he thinks the Secretary of the Navy ever examines those records? Would it not, after all, be in the hands of underlings, who, as a rule, make all the trouble in the Navy?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hardly think so, because the service record of the officers would be known to the officers themselves. Those records are already kept with a great deal of care, and if they are kept with additional care, which it would be incumbent upon them to do if the retirement is to be based upon the rating, a system would be developed which would be comparatively free from inaccuracy. Every man would have an opportunity to inspect his own record, and it would be almost impossible for any injustice to be done or any discrimination shown between officers.

Mr. SWANSON. I think it would be utterly impossible to determine whether a man had a record of 89, 91, 87, or 82 with a degree of accuracy to pass upon the retirement of officers. I think the plucking board law was equally as good, if not better than this. They took the record and, in addition to that, they looked at the general situation, the general competency, the general ability. It would seem that this would leave a record fixed by superior officers, because they must pass on the record, they must determine their derelictions of duty, and it would produce more discontent and would be more ineffective than the present plucking board.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I can not understand how a system which would be based upon merit and upon the official record with a requirement that those standing lowest upon the list should be retired can be compared by the Senator from Virginia with a system which leaves it to the arbitrary discretion of the board to retire whomsoever in their judgment should be retired to promote the efficiency of the Navy. The system proposed by this amendment is a system of rules. The system which was operated under the plucking board was a system without any rule at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. I sent an amendment to the desk sometime ago which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, beginning with line 1, strike out the following words:

Two first-class battleships, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of their class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,800,000 each.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am aware that a point of order was made and sustained upon an amendment similar to the one which I propose to offer. It was the amendment moved by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] awhile ago, but I could not support the amendment of the Senator from Utah because of the great number of submarines for which that amendment provided. However, I think the provision offered by the committee goes to the other extreme. Considering our present submarine equipment and considering present needs and conditions, I think the number of seagoing submarines to be provided for in the bill should be doubled, and that the number of the other class should be, at least, increased from 16 to 20. I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, strike out lines 17 to 24, inclusive, as amended, and insert:

Ten submarines, to be of seagoing type, to have a surface speed of 25 knots or more if possible, but not less than 20 knots, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $1,500,000 each; and 20 submarines to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $550,000 each; and the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose, to be available until expended.

Mr. SWANSON. I make the same point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to occupy about three minutes. On pages 22, 23, and 24, under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," the following appropriations are made for the navy yards of the country: Navy yard, Boston, $25,000; navy yard, New York, $135,000; navy yard, Philadelphia, $55,000; navy yard, Washington, D. C., $145,000; navy yard, Norfolk, Va., $130,000, as amended; navy yard, Charleston, as amended, $95,000; naval station, Key West, Fla., $5,000; naval station, Pensacola, Fla., $15,000; navy yard, Mare Island, $65,000; navy yard, Puget Sound, $60,000.

I observe that the Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy Yard has been forgotten in this distribution of the money of the Government for navy yards. I understand that no estimates were made for that yard by the Secretary of the Navy, and hence it has been entirely neglected. There was a time when Portsmouth shared equally with the other navy yards, but last year that yard was forgotten; and it is forgotten again. I can not imagine why this should be, because there are many things that are needed in that most excellent yard. I do not know whether a message from Washington, which created considerable consternation in Portsmouth at the time of the last election and which was intended for the workingmen in that yard, had anything to do with this neglect or not; but I mention it as a possible reason.

The navy yard at Norfolk, Va., was given in the House bill $80000, but that has been increased to $130,000. I do not find any estimate for that. I will ask the Senator from Virginia whether or not the increased appropriation was estimated for?

Mr. SWANSON. There is an estimate. An estimate was subsequently submitted upon that item.

Mr. GALLINGER. Submitted upon request, I suppose.

Mr. SWANSON. No; the Secretary called on me. He desired to build some torpedo destroyers there.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice also that the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., as the bill came from the House, had $30,000 allowed, and now it is $95,000 in this bill. I can not find that there is any estimate for this increased appropriation. Does the Senator from Virginia know of any?

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary of the Navy wrote a letter favoring it, and so it was inserted. There was no estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury for it. The committee moved it on account of the letter from the Secretary of the Navy and the commandant as to the urgency.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, the commandant, whoever he may be, could not make an estimate under the law. And does the Senator from Virginia accept a letter from the Secretary of the Navy as an estimate for an increased appropriation? All estimates should come through the Secretary of the Treasury, as the Senator from Virginia knows.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator will recall that the rules of the Senate say that when moved by a standing or select committee of the Senate it is in order. The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs does not yield itself entirely to the Navy Department, and where they think an estimate should be exceeded and the facts are presented to show that it should be exceeded, they have usually acted upon it, and it is in order under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator contend that the estimate for Charleston of $30,000 might have been increased by the Committee on Naval Affairs to $100,000 or $500,000 under the rules of the Senate?

Mr. SWANSON. If they thought it was wise and for the best interests of the Government, they would submit it for the consideration of the Senate under the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very dangerous practice, and I do not think the rules allow it.

Mr. SWANSON. The rules of the Senate permit an increase of any item by a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. That means that an amendment shall be referred to a standing committee, acted upon by that standing committee, reported back to the Senate, and then referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That is the way I interpret the rule, not that the Committee on Appropriations shall take charge of a matter of that kind, and without the amendment having been submitted, as I have suggested, increase the appropriation to any amount the committee may see fit to do.

But, Mr. President, I do not care to have a contest over that. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that for two years the Portsmouth Navy Yard has been forgotten in the matter of estimates and in the matter of appropriations, while all the other navy yards have had appropriations granted to them, and now the two navy yards situated in the southern part of the country have had their appropriations increased by the Committee on Naval Affairs beyond the estimates. While possibly I should not find fault with this, yet I think it well to have that fact go in the RECORD, as a matter of reference, and I venture to express the hope that whoever may be Secretary of the Navy next year may not lose sight of the fact that there is a navy yard at Portsmouth, and that it is in need of appropriations, just as much as the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., or Pensacola, Fla., or Key West, Fla., or any other navy yard for which appropriations have been made. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that, so far as the Naval Committee of the Senate is concerned, if the Senator will come before the Naval Committee with any proposition that shows that it is necessary to develop the Portsmouth Navy Yard, that it would be to the general interests of the country, even if it is not recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, he will have consideration by that committee, as a subject entitled to be given consideration under the rules of the Senate. I recall that in the last year Portsmouth was given an appropriation to build a slip, or some construction was started, was it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not a dollar. Not a dollar for any purpose. I will say to the Senator, who is always courteous, and who is always generously disposed toward me personally, that I will not forget, if I am a Member of the Senate one year from now, that he has invited me to appear before the committee. I shall certainly do so. I confess that I have rather felt like leaving this matter, which in former years I have looked after, to another Member of the Senate, and I trust that he likewise will appear before the committee, and we will endeavor to get an appropriation for some very necessary improvements at the Portsmouth yard, a yard which ranks far above the yards at Charleston, Key West, or Pensacola.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to say a few words before the bill is passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not aware of that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall make a part of my speech at the special request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who wanted some enlightenment about the Charleston Navy Yard, and I also had a special request from the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to talk about the plucking board.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am here to listen carefully to the Senator from South Carolina; and I want to say that I have never failed in 18 years to vote for the appropriations for the Charleston Navy Yard, knowing all the time that I could not get an adjournment of Congress until I did so. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Pennsylvania is disposed to be facetious at my expense. I used to be able to bandy epithets with almost anybody here, but since I have been paralyzed I am not so agile on my feet or alert-minded as I once was.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, no matter what the physical condition of the Senator from South Carolina may be, the mention of the Charleston Navy Yard is calculated to put the light of battle in his eye. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. When that navy yard is lied about it does make me angry, necessarily.

Mr. President, the impression has been industriously circulated in the northern press, inspired, doubtless, by selfishness and, perhaps, sectional animosity, that the Charleston Navy Yard is no good, and that the dock is little else than a mudhole filled with silt and inaccessible to battleships for repair. In order to give official proof that this impression is entirely erroneous and that the navy yard ought to be developed instead of being starved, as it has been for seven or eight years, yesterday I presented the report of Admiral John R. Edwards, an officer known to all of you, as to the amount of dredging required last year for keeping the dock free of mud.

Instead of costing, as has been testified in a hearing before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, $75,000 a year, or something like that, the cost last year was only $6,208. I hope Senators will examine Senate Document 957, on page 8, for information in regard to that matter and the present conditions at the yard.

The reason why dredging must be frequently resorted to is because as soon as the mud and silt are gotten out of the dock, of course the walls of soft ooze above and below are washed into the hole when the tide rises and falls; hence, dredging must be resorted to until there is a key wall built extending into the river to the deep channel where there is 34 feet of water at mean low tide.

There is another item for dredging which ought to go in the river and harbor bill, or be provided for in this bill; and that is to remove the sharp bend in the Cooper River opposite Drum Island, 3 or 4 miles below the dry dock. This has been surveyed by the War Department. The estimates are that for $175,000 enough mud could be taken out of the river at this sharp bend to allow vessels drawing 30 feet of water to proceed to the dock and above. If we have a river and harbor bill this session, I shall insist on that item going in. Unless it is put in I shall fight against the enactment of any river and harbor bill and vote against it, and even filibuster to keep it from being passed at this session. So I serve notice now that I am going to fight to have the Charleston Navy Yard made accessible to battleships at all times.

Mr. President, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD the official report of the War Department in regard to this dredging. The indorsement of the project by that department and also by the General Board and the Secretary of the Navy and others shows that the Navy Department is very anxious to have the improvement made in order to render the navy yard accessible at all times, high or low tide, to our largest battleships.

I also present as proof of this official reports of the Hydrographer in corroboration of the speech I made in the Senate in reply to Mr. Meyer.

I also ask permission to insert, instead of having it read, a communication from Admiral Blue, transmitting the report of the Hydrographer in regard to this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing the information you asked for. It has just come in from the Hydrographic Office. You are perfectly safe in making the statement referred to.

Very sincerely,

VICTOR BLUE.

[From Senator TILLMAN'S speech in reply to Mr. Meyer, February 11, 1915.]

Charleston Harbor is the only really good and commodious one between Norfolk and Key West. The commerce of Cooper River would well warrant the expenditure of $175,000 needed to dredge the point off of a shoal now jutting into the channel. When this is done our largest battleships at present constructed can steam into the harbor through the jetties up to and into the dry dock itself at the navy yard at mean low tide.

[Memorandum for Bureau of Navigation.]

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1915.

An examination of the chart of Charleston Harbor shows that at mean low water a draft of at least 28 feet can easily be carried into the harbor and up to the shoal at the north end of Drum Island, and from thence the same or a greater draft can be carried up to the navy yard.

If the shoal referred to is the one at the north of Drum Island, it could be removed, and a draft of 28 feet could be easily carried to the navy yard at mean low water. From the character of the bottom it is presumed that the shoal is of mud and not difficult of removal.

There is a rise of 5.1 feet, which, added to 28 feet, would give 33.1 feet of draft possible to carry any ship from the ocean up to the navy yard; and the draft of 28 feet mean low water is sufficient for almost all of the ships that we now have.

THOS. WASHINGTON,
Captain, United States Navy, Hydrographer.

[Memorandum for Capt. Washington, hydrographer.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1915.

The inclosed is the substance of a statement of Senator TILLMAN. He has just phoned me requesting that it be verified, at least that part of it which states that the largest battleships could steam into the harbor through the jetties up to and into the dry dock itself at the navy yard at mean low tide if the point is dredged off the shoal which now juts into the channel.

As he wants an answer to this to-day, I will thank you to have the matter looked up immediately and a memorandum forwarded to me on the subject.

[Memorandum for the Chief of Bureau of Navigation.]

FEBRUARY 11, 1915.

An examination of the chart of Charleston Harbor shows that at mean low water a draft of 28 feet can be carried into the harbor as far up as abreast the railroad piers at the south entrance of Town Creek and that a draft of 27 feet can be carried up the Cooper River as far as the north end of Drum Island. Through Town Creek a draft of probably as much as 30 feet can be carried up as far as black spar buoy No. 25, above the north end of Drum Island, at which place there is a shoal reducing the depth to 25 feet. From that shoal 27 feet can be carried as far as white light No. 9, about a half a mile below the naval reservation, and from that light to the reservation a depth of 29 feet and more can be carried to the yard.

The mean height of high water above the plane of reference is 5.1 feet, from which it is apparent that no difficulty whatever would be experienced in taking ships of any draft at the present time through the jetties and up to the naval reservation, but at mean low water the shoal off the north end of Drum Island (spar buoy No. 25 and red light No. 8) will reduce that depth to about 25 feet.

THOS. WASHINGTON.

COOPER RIVER, S. C.

LETTER FROM THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY, TRANSMITTING REPORT OF THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS ON COOPER RIVER, S. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 22, 1914.

SIR: 1. Referring to your letter dated February 23, 1914, inclosing a copy of a resolution by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, of the same date, requesting the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to examine and review the report on Cooper River, S. C., printed in House Document No. 947, Sixty-first Congress, second session, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of the report of the board, dated May 19, 1914, in response thereto.

2. In the report referred to in the document mentioned above it was stated that the construction of a channel 30 feet deep at all stages up to the navy yard, at an estimated cost of $175,000, was deemed advisable in the interests of the Navy. It appears that since that investigation was made there has been some commercial development above the navy yard, and the board is of opinion that it is advisable for the United States to provide a channel up to the naval reservation 26 feet in depth at mean low water and 300 feet wide, at an estimated cost of $14,000, local interests having stated that they will provide this depth above the naval reservation. I concur with the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the opinion that the improvement of Cooper River by the United States is advisable in the interests of commerce to the extent above indicated. The full amount of the estimated cost should be provided in one appropriation.

Very respectfully,

DAN C. KINGMAN,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Hon. S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1914.

From: The senior member, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors.
To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Report on Cooper River, S. C.

1. The board submits its report in response to the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, created under section 3 of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, be requested to examine and review the report on Cooper River, S. C., printed in House Document No. 947, Sixty-first Congress, second session."

The report referred to in this document recommended an improvement of Cooper River to a depth of 30 feet, at an estimated cost of $175,000, in the interests of the Navy, there being no commercial need at that time for the improvement. The project has not been adopted.

2. Upon recommendation of the board, the district officer has submitted data covering conditions at the present time. There has been a change in the commercial situation above the naval reservation since the submission of the former report by the establishment of a cotton compress and of storage oil tanks. There was at the time of the former report a fertilizer factory and a lumber mill. The commerce now handled by these industries is reported as amounting to 57,576 tons, having a value somewhat in excess of $4,000,000. This commerce would be benefited if the present available depth, 22 feet, were increased to 26 feet at mean low water. The district officer states that local interests have decided to provide this depth over some shoal places above the naval reservation.

3. Estimates have been prepared for channels 300, 400, and 600 feet in width up to the reservation, amounting to $14,000, $21,000, and $40,000, respectively. The district officer and the division engineer are of opinion that the locality is now worthy of improvement in the interests of general commerce to the extent of providing a channel 300 feet wide and 26 feet deep up to the navy yard. It is also stated that the improvement would be of material value to the Navy.

4. No estimate for maintenance is submitted, but it appears that this will not be large. In view of this fact the cost of improvement seems not unreasonable when compared with the commerce, present and prospective, to be benefited. The board therefore reports that in its opinion it is advisable for the United States to provide a channel up to the naval reservation 26 feet in depth at mean low water and 300 feet wide, at an estimated cost of $14,000. Local interests have stated that they will provide this depth above the naval reservation. The full amount of the estimate should be made available in one appropriation.

5. In compliance with law, the board reports that there are no questions of terminal facilities, water power, or other subjects so related to the project proposed that they may be coordinated therewith to lessen the cost and compensate the Government for expenditures made in the interests of navigation.

For the board:

W. M. BLACK,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers,
Senior Member of the Board.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Charleston, S. C., March 19, 1913.

From: The District Engineer Officer.
To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army (through the Division Engineer, S. E. Div., Savannah, Ga.).
Subject: Examination of Cooper River, S. C.

1. In compliance with instructions contained in third indorsement, Office Chief of Engineers, dated March 16, 1914, on letter transmitting resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives of the United States, the following report is submitted:

2. A survey of the river was made in 1910, and report thereon with estimate of cost of improvement is printed in House Document No. 947, Sixty-first Congress, second session (with map). Recommendation was submitted to Congress for a channel 30 feet deep at all stages, with widths varying from 600 feet to 1,000 feet up to the naval station, at a cost of $175,000; it was stated that Cooper River was worthy of improvement to this extent for naval purposes. In requesting an examination and review of this report, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors states:

"The object is to ascertain whether, in view of changed conditions, if any, the improvement is desirable in the interests of commerce at this time, the original report having only recommended the stream as worthy of improvement for naval purposes up to the naval station."

3. Below the naval station the commercial enterprises that might be benefited by the improvement are located on Shipyard Creek, a tributary of Cooper River. The entrance to Shipyard Creek, however, has a depth of only 15 feet at low water, which depth already exists in Cooper River. Above the naval station for a distance of 1½ miles there are located a lumber mill, tanks for oil and petroleum products, a cotton compress, and a fertilizer manufactory. The cotton compress and the oil tanks have been established since the report on the Copper River was submitted. These concerns would be benefited by the improvement. For the year 1913 the following business was done by them:

	Tons.	Value.
Receipts:
Fertilizer material	11,781	$157,563
Petroleum products	12,000	160,000
	23,781	317,563
Shipments:
Cotton, 55,180 bales	13,795	3,655,775
Lumber, etc., 20,000,000 feet	20,000	300,000
	33,795	3,955,775
Total	57,576	4,273,338

4. The deepest draft vessel that brings cargo of fertilizer materials upstream is about 24 feet; but there is ample storage capacity at the plant for larger cargoes in deeper draft vessels. As vessels bringing such cargoes to Charleston have a draft of 27 or 28 feet, it is probable that they would go up the Cooper River were facilities provided. The depth at the fertilizer wharf is only 22 feet, but the owners state that they would increase the depth to procure larger cargoes.

5. The deepest draft vessels that take cotton downstream are about 24 feet, with length of 480 feet. They are not fully loaded, as the compress has not sufficient capacity to fill a vessel bound for a single foreign port, such as Liverpool or Bremen. The loading may be completed elsewhere or the vessel may arrive partly loaded and complete its cargo. Arrangements have been made to increase the capacity of the compress to 150,000 or 200,000 bales; and it is intended, in addition, to develop the shipping of other and heavier cargoes, such as steel rails, cottonseed products, etc., as through business.

6. The accompanying map (not printed), showing this section of the river, gives the location of the foregoing plants, and the depths in the stream as determined from Coast Survey charts. Below the compress wharf soundings of 18, 20, 22 feet are shown, and unless such shoals were removed, there would be little benefit to commerce to increase the depths below the naval station. The owners of the compress have decided to remove these shoals to a depth of approximately 26 feet at low water, which is the general depth in that vicinity. A good 26-foot channel as far as the naval station would consequently be of benefit to commerce.

7. The entrance channel to Charleston Harbor has a low-water depth of 28 feet, and this depth or greater extends to the upper end of Drum Island, as shown on the map accompanying the report on the Cooper River. To procure a channel 26 feet deep at mean low water with a width of 600 feet would involve dredging for a distance of 3,000 feet at the upper end of Drum Island, and removing shoals off Clouter Creek. The cost would be:

Dredging:
Drum Island, 225,000 cubic yards, at 12 cents	$27,000
Clouter Creek, 28,500 cubic yards, at 20 cents	5,700
Superintendence and contingencies	7,300
Total	40,000

8. Such a channel would not only benefit present and prospective commerce, but would be of material assistance to the Navy. A channel 600 feet wide with a low-water depth of 26 feet would have a high-water depth of 31 feet, and would probably allow a battleship of the North Dakota class to reach the naval station, as this ship on a visit to Charleston in 1912 had a draft of 28 feet 10 inches, with a length of 510 feet. On a sheet issued by the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy in 1911, the controlling depth to the yard at Charleston was shown as 22 feet. The improvement to 26 feet would increase the controlling depth 4 feet and would greatly add to the efficiency of the station.

9. It is believed advisable at the present time in the interests of general commerce and navigation to improve the Cooper River as far as the naval station to a low-water depth of 26 feet with width of 600 feet, at an estimated cost of $40,000. This amount should be appropriated in one sum. The expense of maintenance will be small; in fact, no estimate can be submitted, as it is believed several years would elapse before maintenance would be required.

Respectfully submitted.

G. P. HOWELL,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

[First indorsement.]

OFFICE DIVISION ENGINEER, SOUTHEASTERN DIVISION,
March 21, 1914.

To the CHIEF OF ENGINEERS:

1. It would appear from the report of the district officer that commercial conditions in Cooper River above the navy yard have changed since the report in 1910, published in House Document No. 947, Sixty-first Congress, second session, and that there is now a commerce passing the navy yard amounting to 57,576 tons, valued at $4,273,338.

2. Based on the present and prospective developments of this commerce, the district officer recommends dredging at two localities to obtain a low-water channel 600 feet in width and 26 feet deep, at an estimated cost of $40,000. He believes that no maintenance work will be required for a number of years.

3. In addition to its value to commerce, the district officer states that the suggested improvement will also be of advantage to the navy yard.

4. In view of all the circumstances, I concur in the conclusions and recommendations of the district officer as expressed in paragraph 9 of the report.

W. C. LANGFITT,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Charleston, S. C., April 30, 1914.

From: The District Engineer Officer.
To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army (through the Division Engineer, southeastern division, Savannah, Ga.).
Subject: Improvement of Cooper River, S. C.—additional estimates.

1. As requested by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in letter addressed to the Chief of Engineers United States Army April 21, 1914, the following additional estimates with reference to improvement of Cooper River, S. C., are submitted:

2. Referring to paragraph 7 of the report of March 19, 1914, there is off Clouter Creek a shoal in the middle of the river on which the depth is less than 26 feet. This shoal is in dimensions about 850 feet by 250 feet. To cut it down to a depth of 26 feet would require the removal of 22,000 cubic yards, costing, at 20 cents per cubic yard, $4,400. To form a channel 300 or 400 feet wide on either side of this shoal would require the removal of about one-half of it and would leave the remainder as a menace to navigation in time of fog or strong currents. As the cost of entire removal is so small, it is believed it should be done.

3. The dredging near Drum Island would be as follows:

300-foot channel, 35,000 cubic yards, at 20 cents	$7,000
400-foot channel, 65,000 cubic yards, at 20 cents	13,000

The unit price has been increased from 12 cents in previous estimate to 20 cents on account of the reduction in yardage.

4. The total cost would be, including contingencies:

300-foot channel	$14,000
400-foot channel	21,000

5. Either of these widths will be adequate for the class of merchant vessels that may be expected to use this channel.

6. Referring to paragraph 6 of the report of March 19, 1914, concerning the shoal near the compress wharf, it is recommended that the improvement of the Cooper River below the navy yard for the benefit of merchant vessels be made contingent upon the prior removal of this shoal to a depth equal to that to be obtained below the navy yard.

Respectfully submitted.

G. P. HOWELL,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Mr. TILLMAN. These reports prove conclusively that the battleship fleet we now have can steam into the harbor from the ocean at mean low tide. They prove that if the dredging is done off Drum Island, costing $175,000, the fleet could proceed directly to the navy yard itself and be put into the dry dock without the slightest difficulty.

I saw seven battleships, the largest we now have, steam in and anchor at Charleston December, 1913.

Of course, while the dock is deep enough it is not long enough to dock any vessel over 575 feet in length. These would have to go to New York. But we ought to have another dock at Charleston, and will some day, I hope.

Now, while I am on my feet I want to say a word about the plucking board.

Mr. President, as a member of the Naval Committee for 20 years, and therefore somewhat familiar with naval affairs and our naval officers, I heartily favor the abolition of the plucking board. It is of vital importance that we should have some instrumentality to get rid of deadwood among naval officers; but I would much prefer to see the machinery provided for promoting zealous and able young officers on merit alone rather than see the retired list filled up with officers who are personally very meritorious, but for some reason are not suited for high command. The President of the United States ought to be given authority to select for promotion any officer above the age of 30 whose record warrants his being jumped over his fellows. We will never have that efficiency and energy, a determination to do or die, which characterized John Paul Jones, Lord Nelson, Farragut, not to mention others, until the American Navy has some system of promotion such as I have outlined.

I have examined into the matter, and I find that Lord Nelson was made post captain in the English Navy at 21 years of age, was 40 years old when he fought the Battle of the Nile, which bottled Napoleon up in Egypt and led finally to his downfall, although he became Emperor afterwards, and that the same man who bottled him up in Egypt defeated the French and Spanish fleets at Trafalgar when he was 47, and was killed there.

John Paul Jones was only 32 when he won immortality as captain of the Bon Homme Richard in his famous fight with the Scrapis, showing that men who are young make the best fighters. There will be heartburnings, of course. There always are in such matters, but we simply can not afford to keep the plucking board because it has been a failure, and the Naval Committee has become a court of appeals to try the merits of officers who have been "plucked." All of them believe they have been wronged; all of them have friends; hence we devote more time to such bills than we ought. There should not be any machinery in the Navy which would make it necessary for the Naval Committee to deal with such cases. And above all we should not have on the retired list men who are physically able to do good work, but who, in order to enable promotion to be rapid, are retired on three-fourths pay to make room for those below. That system is vicious and ought to be abolished, and I sincerely hope some scheme may be evolved by which promotion for merit may be obtained without the heartburnings caused by the plucking board, so young men educated by the United States may be allowed to serve their country instead of being laid on the shelf.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator one question. I do not intend to tax his strength, but I should like to know what the expense is estimated to be for rendering the harbor and waters and channels approaching the Charleston Navy Yard navigable for battleships?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have just explained that the report of the Army engineers shows there is deep water sufficient now, and that $175,000 will dredge off a corner, a sharp curve, where battleships are likely to go aground. If we get that $175,000, we could have the battleships go in there at any time at high or low tide and steam right up to the dry dock.

Mr. PENROSE. What depth of water would be there?

Mr. TILLMAN. Thirty feet.

Mr. PENROSE. Thirty-five feet is considered the requisite depth, as I understand nowadays, for safe navigation of battleships.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; you have not got 35 feet at Philadelphia, unless it is very recently.

Mr. PENROSE. We expect to have it, and there is a plan now looking to that end.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh!

Mr. PENROSE. It has been projected for and surveyed.

Mr. TILLMAN. This at Charleston has been projected for and surveyed, too.

Mr. PENROSE. I mean 35 feet is being provided at Philadelphia. Would this be a permanent improvement at Charleston or would the mud come back the following spring?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the key wall is built it will never come back.

Mr. PENROSE. I will vote for the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Vice President appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. PENROSE conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 21491.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21491) making appropriations for fortifications and other works, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it was my intention to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 20150, being the Indian appropriation bill, but I will not make that motion now, as I understand the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] wishes to proceed with the fortifications bill, and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] wishes to move thereafter the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill; but I wish to give notice that immediately upon the passage of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, which is to follow the fortifications bill, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, to wit, House bill 20150.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to say that the conference report on what is known as the seamen's bill was presented yesterday, and I think that report ought to be taken up very soon. I did not know that there was any other program mapped out, and my purpose was to ask to have that conference report taken up immediately after the disposition of the fortifications bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will note the notices in order, and recognize Senators accordingly.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to understand the matter. There was so much confusion that it was impossible for me to do so accurately. It was proposed, as I understand, first, to take up the fortifications appropriation bill, then the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and then the Indian appropriation bill. Does the suggestion of the Senator from Florida differ from that?

Mr. FLETCHER. I stated that on yesterday the report on the seamen's bill was presented, but I did not press at that time for its immediate consideration, with the understanding that it would be taken up to-day. I therefore feel that I ought to move to take up that report immediately after the fortifications bill is disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been proceeding in accordance with the custom of the Senate, as it has been ever since the present occupant has been here, to recognize Senators in the order in which they serve notice that they want to be recognized. The Chair has not anything to say regarding what the Senate will do about it; but if the present occupant of the chair is here, he is going to recognize after the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], then the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and then the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to state that at some time during the afternoon I will move that the Senate act upon the conference report on the bill with reference to the additional judge for the southern district of Georgia.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Florida the floor?

Mr. BRYAN. No.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to make a motion, which I think will be readily agreed to, which is that when the Senate adjourns or takes a recess on Saturday, February 27, 1915, it shall be until Sunday, February 28, 1915, at 10.45 a. m., to consider resolutions and listen to addresses commemorative of the lives and services of William H. Wilder, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, and Forrest Goodwin, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. One moment. I do not know what the Senate desires to do now about holding a session on Sunday.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be for eulogies.

Mr. LODGE. The session will be for memorial addresses on two deceased Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that. I wish to say, however, that Sunday sessions have never been held for that purpose in the past, and I hardly think that a Sunday session ought to be held now. I am not going to object, but I wish to ask why not arrange at the same time for eulogies on the late Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Bradley?

Mr. KERN. I understand Senators are not ready.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist on submitting his motion now, because, I think, under a fair construction of it, any other business on Sunday would be excluded. An emergency might exist for the transaction of other business on Sunday, and therefore I would not like to consent that the right to transact other business be foreclosed.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I supposed that an arrangement had been made which would preclude the consideration of other business on Sunday, and it was my understanding that the time would be favorable for the purpose indicated in my motion.

Mr. KERN. Let me say to the Senator there will be no objection in the world to the exercises referred to.

Mr. WEEKS. It is customary, Mr. President, I think, or always has been customary, to adjourn immediately after holding such exercises.

Mr. KERN. I know that that has been the custom, but I do not know what emergency might arise.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand, then, Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts makes the motion with the understanding that no other business is to be transacted on Sunday?

Mr. WEEKS. I have no knowledge of any other business, and I supposed that an arrangement had been made that no other business would be then considered.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall object to any other business being transacted on Sunday.

Mr. KERN. I regret that the Senator from Massachusetts presents the matter at this time. It can be presented to-morrow, and by that time, perhaps, we can come to some understanding about it.

Mr. WEEKS. Well, I will withdraw the motion.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the fortifications appropriation bill on page 3, line 14.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I desire to say, in reference to the fortifications bill which has just been passed, that as the House passed the bill the amount appropriated was within $130,000 of the estimate of the department. I ask permission to incorporate in the RECORD the first six pages of the House report, prepared by Mr. SHERLEY of Kentucky, who has given many years of study to the seacoast defenses, and who has prepared this year, as he does every year, a very valuable report. By examining this report Senators can form a very complete idea of the scope of the work that has been done since the the establishment of the Endicott Board back in 1886.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. SHERLEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the accompanying bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, submit the following in explanation thereof:

The estimates on which the bill is based aggregate $6,193,641.32, which sum includes $5,863,641.32 submitted in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1916 and $330,000 submitted in House Document No. 1529. The accompanying bill appropriates $6,060,216.90, which amount is $432,516.90 more than was appropriated for the same purposes at the last session of Congress, and $133,424.42 less than the estimates submitted.

During the Forty-ninth Congress (fiscal years 1887 and 1888) no appropriations were made on account of fortifications, their maintenance and armament, and for the 12 fiscal years 1875 to 1886, inclusive, the appropriations by Congress on this account averaged only $540,750 per annum, and only $463,500 per annum for the 14 years, including 1887 and 1888, for which latter two fiscal years no specific appropriations were made, as stated.

The bill reported herewith contains appropriations in continuance of the policy adopted by the Fiftieth Congress in the passage of the acts approved September 22, 1888, and March 2, 1889, and continued at the succeeding terms of Congress in acts approved August 18, 1890, February 24, 1891, July 23, 1892, February 18, 1893, August 1, 1894, March 2, 1895, June 6, 1896, March 3, 1897, May 7, 1898, March 3, 1899, May 25, 1900, March 1, 1901, June 6, 1902, March 3, 1903, April 21, 1904, March 3, 1905, June 25, 1906, March 2, 1907, May 27, 1908, March 3, 1909, June 23, 1910, March 4, 1911, June 6, 1912, February 13, 1913, and June 27, 1914.

The appropriations by said acts for the 27 fiscal years 1889–1915 aggregate $152,584,696.72, of which sum $131,597,432.72 was appropriated for the United States and $20,987,264 for the insular possessions, an average of $5,651,285.06 per annum.

The fortifications appropriation acts enacted during the Fifty-fifth Congress (fiscal years 1899 and 1900) appropriated $14,287,396, in addition to which amount sums aggregating $8,674,898 were provided in deficiency appropriation acts for fortifications and the armament thereof, and the further sum of $13,049,751.86 was allotted for the same objects from the general appropriation of $50,000,000 made for the national defense in the act of March 9, 1898, making in all $36,012,915.86 available for fortifications and the armament thereof under appropriations made during the Fifty-fifth Congress. In addition to the above, the sum of $2,500 was appropriated for fortification purposes in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated September 22, 1888; $35,000 by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated March 2, 1901; $259,200 by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated June 30, 1902; and $389,000 by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army dated March 2, 1903; total, $685,700.

There was also appropriated by the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government approved April 28, 1904, $591,046.25; under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government approved March 3, 1905, $40,000; under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government approved June 30, 1906, $158,953.75; by the deficiency act of July 7, 1898, $0.70; by the deficiency act of February 14, 1902, $2.68; by the deficiency act of July 1, 1902, $4.38; and by the sundry civil act of March 4, 1911, $154,667; total, $944,674.76.

The urgent deficiency act of February 14, 1902, carried $3,000 for fortifications and the deficiency act of March 4, 1907, $977.79.

The joint resolution, approved June 23, 1914, appropriated $31,000 to complete the purchase of necessary land at Cape Henry, Va.

The total appropriations made for fortifications and other works of defense since 1888, and since the recommendations of the Endicott Board of 1885, including the appropriations made in deficiency and other acts, including the Army bills dated September 22, 1888, March 2, 1901, June 30, 1902, and March 2, 1903, the sundry civil bills dated April 28, 1904, March 3, 1905, June 30, 1906, and March 4, 1911, and allotments made from the national defense fund, amount to $175,974,699.13, of which sum $154,682,768.13 was for the United States and $21,291,931 for the insular possessions, and has included the necessary cost of maintenance; $59,198.66 of the amount appropriated for the United States was expended for maintenance of submarine mines in the insular possessions.

The scheme of seacoast fortifications for the continental United States contemplated by the Endicott Board, as modified by the National Coast Defense Board (see S. Doc. No. 248, 59th Cong., 1st sess., for report), and as revised to date, it is estimated, will cost in the aggregate $159,982,534.43, of which amount the sum of $126,112,068.50 has been appropriated and $1,043,998.81 has been returned to the Treasury, a more particular discussion of the details of which will appear elsewhere in this report.

The scheme of fortifications for the insular possessions contemplated by the National Coast Defense Board, as revised to date, it is estimated, will cost in the aggregate $30,177,536.71, of which there has been appropriated the sum of $21,291,931, the details of which are also discussed more at length elsewhere herein.

The difference between the estimated whole cost of the so-called Endicott scheme of fortifications, as modified and revised to date, for continental United States, $159,982,534.43, and the appropriations made therefor to date, $126,112,068.50, less amount returned to Treasury, amounts to $33,870,465.93.

The difference between the estimated whole cost of the scheme of fortifications for the insular possessions, as revised to date, $30,177,536.71, and the appropriations already made therefor, $21,291,931, amounts to $8,885,605.71.

The difference between the combined estimated cost of both schemes, $190,160,071.14, and the combined appropriations therefor to date, $147,403,999.50 (less amount returned to Treasury), amounts to $42,756,071.64.

The difference between the $147,403,999.50 already provided toward the scheme of the Endicott Board, modified by the National Coast Defense Board, and the sum total of appropriations, $175,974,699.13 for fortifications since 1888, amounting to $28,570,699.63, is represented in expenditures for erecting and equipping the gun factory at Watervliet, the gun-carriage factory at Watertown, the powder factory at Picatinny, N. J., the Ordnance and Fortification Board, the manufacture of mountain, field, and siege guns, and ammunition therefor, and for sundry other objects incident to providing and maintaining a system of seacoast defenses, and the amount returned to Treasury.

In addition to the foregoing general statement as to the history of and appropriations for the scheme of seacoast fortifications adopted by Congress in 1888 and prosecuted by annual appropriations since that year, it is deemed pertinent at this time to discuss somewhat more in detail the subject of these very considerable expenditures.

By the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, the President was directed to appoint a board to formulate plans for seacoast defenses. This board later became known under the name of the Endicott Board, and its report, transmitted to Congress on January 23, 1886, formed for many years the guide from which the Secretary of War determined the ports that should be fortified and the amount and type of armament required for each. It will be understood that these plans required many modifications of detail in accordance with the development of commercial and strategic importance of the different ports and emplacements and changes in modern armament. In addition, no provision was made for reserve ammunition, probably due to the fact that the development of satisfactory powder was at that time in an experimental stage. On March 5, 1906, the President of the United States transmitted a message to the Congress, in which he inclosed a report of the National Coast Defense Board, which had been appointed by him on January 31, 1905. This report modified and brought up to date the report of the Endicott Board and added a scheme for the fortifications of the insular possessions of the United States, and is usually referred to as the Taft Board report. In pursuance of the plans and projects recommended in that report, estimates are submitted annually by the Secretary of War of the sums needed to carry on the work, and the items containing such estimates constitute the bill as submitted to this committee.

It should be stated in passing that the estimates for the fortification of the Panama Canal are submitted as a part of the general canal estimates and are carried in the sundry civil bill and are not included in any of the figures used in this discussion.

These items of appropriation may be roughly divided into three general classes, namely:

1. Fortification of seacoast forts, including ammunition.
2. Supply of Field Artillery material, including ammunition.
3. Miscellaneous items related to the above, but not strictly forming parts thereof.

The first classification can be subdivided into three items: (a) Items pertaining to new armament and installation, including reserve ammunition. These items embrace guns, gun carriages, emplacements, sites for defense, electrical installation, searchlights, sea walls, submarine-mine structures, fire-control instruments and structures, and ammunition; (b) items pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alterations of property embraced in subdivision a, except ammunition; and (c) items pertaining to seacoast target-practice ammunition, including appliances for same, and subdivisions a and b should also be segregated according as they relate to continental United States and the insular possessions.

Under these three subdivisions of the first general division there has been heretofore appropriated for continental United States, including practice ammunition used in the insular possessions, $126,112,068.50. Of this amount, under subdivision a, items pertaining to new armament and installation, there has been apportioned $89,013,055.59; items relating to reserve ammunition, $15,252,885.98. Under subdivision b—that is, the item for maintenance, repair, and alteration—there has been appropriated $15,113,070.12. Under subdivision c, seacoast target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated the sum of $5,689,058. There has been covered into the Treasury unexpended $1,043,998.81.

Under subdivisions a and b there has been appropriated for the insular possessions $21,291,931. This total includes under subdivision a items pertaining to new armament and installation, $18,072,209.12; items for reserve seacoast ammunition, $2,800,000. Under subdivision b, for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $419,721.88. So that the total of appropriations for both continental United States and the insular possessions, under heading No. 1, amounts to $147,403,999.50.

The second general classification, to wit: Supply of Field Artillery material, including ammunition, can also be subdivided into three classifications similar to that of item No. 1. In other words, (a) those pertaining to new material, including reserve ammunition; (b) those pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alteration; and (c) those pertaining to target-practice ammunition.

The total appropriated has been $11,880,800. The total of the above that is included under the subdivision a, new material, including reserve ammunition, is $10,388,800, of which $4,201,600 was for such reserve ammunition, leaving $6,187,200 as the amount that has been appropriated for new material. Of this latter sum, $1,005,000 is counted as being for new material, though it is literally for the purpose of making new batteries out of old ones.

Under subdivision b, for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $441,000. Under subdivision c, for target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated $1,051,000.

The third general classification, to wit, miscellaneous items related to the preceding but not strictly forming parts thereof, consists of the following items, totaling appropriations of $16,689,899.63:

Board of Ordnance and Fortification	$2,585,000.00
Proving Ground, Sandy Hook	1,690,978.00
Machine guns not used for seacoast defenses	385,073.00
Ordnance establishments, buildings, gun factory, powder factory, etc	3,376,952.00
Machinery for ordnance establishments	451,397.83
Experimental guns, carriages, and ammunition	653,041.03
Testing experimental guns and carriages, armor plates, etc	148,085.84
Implements, equipments, alteration, and maintenance of old armament	519,038.00
Field material and ammunition of old designs	6,331,819.75
Returned to Treasury	110,928.69
School submarine defense	16,589.00
Amount expended for temporary batteries (national defense fund)	302,817.99
Construction of post buildings, act June 6, 1896	100,000.00
Repair and maintenance Fort Monroe, Va., acts Mar. 2, 1895, and June 6, 1896	18,267.50

This statement does not include estimates of the cost of the additional seacoast defenses needed to complete the fortification projects in accordance with the plans of the National Coast Defense Board, for the reason that the department has now under consideration the subject of modifying the plans of that board so as to provide that the large-caliber guns to be emplaced in future as additions to existing defenses will be of 16-inch instead of 14-inch caliber as recommended by that board. In view of this fact it is not deemed practicable to furnish estimates at this time as to the cost of completing the seacoast defenses.

In addition to the above for the continental United States it is estimated that there will, in the future, be annually required $1,000,000 for maintenance, repair, and minor alterations, and $425,000 for target practice.

And, in addition, it is also estimated that $70,000 will be annually required for maintenance, repair, and minor alterations, plus a proportionate increase due to the installation of new armament as it is supplied for the insular possessions.

Under the second general classification, first noted, it is estimated that remaining items, coming under subdivision a will be as follows: For new matériel, including funds for the alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $3,861,718.07; for reserve ammunition, $5,347,812; making a total of $9,209,530.07

In addition to the above, it is estimated that there will be required annually $55,000 for alteration, maintenance, and repair, and $140,000 for target practice.

It should be stated in connection with the foregoing items for Field Artillery matériel and ammunition that it is also estimated by the War Department that for such remaining matériel and ammunition for the use of the militia there will be required a total of $22,411,239.43; for which latter sum, however, it is expected that estimates will be submitted and appropriations carried in the Army bill.

In the present estimates there is asked, under the first general division for continental United States, subdivision a, new matériel, etc., $1,746,324.42, of which sum there is recommended in the accompanying bill $1,673,000; under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, etc., $1,068,500, of which amount the bill carries $1,038,500; and under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $425,000, and $26,100 for submarine-mine practice, all of which is recommended in the bill, except $100, making a total estimate of $3,265,924.42, of which the bill carries $3,162,500.

In the insular possessions, under subdivision a, there is asked for new matériel, ammunition, etc., $763,678, of which there is recommended in the bill $753,678; and under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, etc., $99,000, of which the sum of $89,000 is recommended; making total estimates of $862,678, of which $842,678, as above stated, is recommended; making a grand total of estimates of $4,128,602.42 for both continental United States and the insular possessions under the first general division, of which there is recommended $4,005,178.

Under the second general classification there is asked, under subdivision a, new matériel, etc., including alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $1,780,000, all of which is recommended, with an authorization of $300,000; under subdivion b, maintenance, repairs, etc., $55,000, of which $50,000 is given; under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $140,000, of which $135,000 is given; making total estimates of $1,975,000, of which the bill carries $1,965,000, with authorization of $300,000 as above.

Under the third general division there are asked the following items:

Current expenses, ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J.	$56,200
Expenses of officers at the proving ground and compensation of draftsmen	18,700
Board of Ordnance and Fortification	15,000
Total	89,900

All of the estimates under the third general division—$89,900—is recommended, and in addition thereto an item of $138.90 for reimbursement of Col. Frank Green, retired.

The funds appropriated under the fortification acts are expended by or under the supervision of the Chief of Ordnance, the Chief Signal Officer, and the Chief of Engineers. In general terms the Chief of Ordnance has charge of those items pertaining to seacoast cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments; mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments; ammunition for seacoast cannon; ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon; ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for seacoast artillery practice; ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for mountain, field, and siege artillery practice; alteration and maintenance of seacoast artillery; alteration and maintenance of mobile artillery; current expenses of the ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J., necessary expenses of officers at the proving ground, and compensation of draftsmen. In addition he has charge of the accounts, although not of the disbursements, pertaining to submarine mines, and the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, and expends the funds allotted him by the Secretary of War for fire-control instruments.

The Chief Signal Officer has charge of the operation and maintenance of fire-control installation at seacoast defenses and the expenditure of such funds as may be allotted him by the Secretary of War for the procurement of wiring and instruments for communication service from the appropriations for fire control.

The Chief of Engineers has charge of the construction, maintenance, repair, and modernization of emplacements for seacoast armament; installation and replacement of electric light and power plants and searchlights at seacoast fortifications; procurement or reclamation of land for sites for fortifications; preparation of plants for fortifications; tools, electrical and engine supplies for operating electric light and power plants in seacoast batteries, and reserve lights therefor; construction, maintenance, and repair of sea walls and embankments; construction, preservation, and repair of structures for torpedo defense; land defenses of seacoast fortifications, exclusive of electrical communications and armament; and the expenditure of such funds as may be allotted him by the Secretary of War from fire-control appropriations for construction of fire-control stations and accessories and purchase of lands and rights of way.

The estimate for fire-control stations and accessories, electrical communications, and range finders, and other instruments for fire control at the fortifications is submitted by the Chief of Coast Artillery, and the appropriation when made is carried on the books of the disbursing officer of the War Department expenditures being made by the Chief of Ordnance, the Chief Signal Officer, and the Chief of Engineers in accordance with allotments made them by the Secretary of War for particular purposes. The estate for submarine mines is prepared by the Chief of Coast Artillery and disbursed under his supervision; the accounts are kept by the Chief of Ordnance.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to take up House bill 21201, known as the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for committee amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico," on page 10, line 14, after the date "1905," to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$18,000," and in line 15, after the word "That," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to read:

To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, and 1905, $18,000: Provided, That $10,000 thereof is made immediately available to resume and continue the work relating to the distribution of water, under the direction of the Secretary of State, and as authorized by and in pursuance to the protocol of May 6, 1896, between the United States and Mexico, and to enable the commission to study the questions connected with the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande River between the citizens of the United States and Mexico, and to make an investigation, under the supervision of the Secretary of State, as to the best and most feasible method of preserving the boundary line between the United States and Mexico by preventing the flood waters of the Rio Grande and its tributaries where the said Rio Grande constitutes said boundary line from disturbing and changing the channel, and also the best and most feasible mode of impounding, regulating, and utilizing said waters in such manner as to secure to each country and its inhabitants their legal and equitable rights and interests in said waters, and to report in detail plans, findings, and conclusions to Congress not later than December 10, 1915.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by substituting "$25,000" for "$18,000" in line 15, page 10, and by substituting "$16,212" for "$10,000" in the same line.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 14, the committee proposes to strike out "$7,500" and to insert "$18,000." The Senator from Texas now proposes to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$18,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make a point of order against that, on the ground that it is an increase of an appropriation and no estimate has been made for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the estimate was made for $25,000. In fact, the estimate was for $50,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the estimate covered much more than $25,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that we had raised it to the amount of the estimate.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; we did not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Fifty thousand dollars would be really needed to carry out the work that is contemplated. It developed at the hearings, however, that valuable work could be done on the American side of the international boundary line with $25,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say now that if there were not a treaty involved in this matter I would oppose the whole appropriation. I have not seen any good that has ever come from it. I have tried to read the reports and get some information on it, and so has the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There were ample hearings before the subcommittee showing the good to be accomplished by this work on the American side. The construction of the Elephant Butte Dam had for one of its purposes the maintenance of a fixed international boundary line for a distance of 80 miles below El Paso, and it will accomplish that purpose. This is to appropriate for an examination, survey, and estimate for similar work from Fort Quitman, 80 miles from El Paso, to the mouth of the Rio Grande. The river is in a state of constant variation. After each flood the channel moves from one point to another, and leaves citizens of Mexico apparently in United States territory and citizens of the United States in what is claimed to be Mexican territory.

The boundary commission has endeavored to settle these questions of disputed jurisdiction and territory, and it has expended about $800,000 in the last 20 years. The settlement of these disputes has been imposed on the boundary commission, and the water commissioner has as part of his duties the preparation of a plan for a fixed boundary line from Fort Quitman to the mouth of the Rio Grande. I say to the Senator that it is a small addition, and the evidence shows that some substantial work may be done with $25,000, whereas with $18,000 only a skeleton organization could be maintained and very little accomplished.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that we gave them about what they had last year. It is true that it was testified before the committee that the system they had had there before had been an absolute failure. They have spent about $800,000 down there trying to establish a line between this country and Mexico, but by reason of the flood waters that come down that river, which change its channel every year, they never have been able to do it. The American part of the commission has a theory that it can make a great storage dam there and control the Pecos River and the Devils River, and that by that means, by storing the waters of these rivers, it can establish a fixed boundary and have it permanently fixed, so that we will know what is the line between Mexico and the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I predict right now that as long as we make appropriations for the International Boundary Commission of the United States and Mexico it never will be fixed, and it only emphasizes the fact that wherever a commission is organized and established by the Government it never ceases.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in this paragraph a report is required to be made next December as to a definite proposition for settling the whole matter. In view of the magnitude of the interests involved, this is comparatively a small request.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I expect a report to be made, and I expect that the report will be the basis of appropriations for the next quarter of a century. That will be about the result of the report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think the Senator will find that that is the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). In view of the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, the Chair is obliged to overrule the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no doubt about its having been estimated for.

Mr. SMOOT. I made the point of order on the ground that it was not estimated for. I understood that we had increased the House amount, as we did, from $7,500 to $18,000, and that we had increased the $5,000 to $10,000. As I remembered, that was the amount of the estimate, and it was upon that understanding that I made the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. But I will say to the Senator that I take the statement just made as being correct, and that the estimate was more than this, and therefore the point of order naturally would not lie.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 15, the committee proposes to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000." The Senator from Texas moves to amend the amendment by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$16,212."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator intend that? He intends to make the amount, as I understand, $25,000 where the committee recommended $18,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; that is correct. That was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. And $16,212 where the $10,000 appears.

Mr. SMOOT. That is $41,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; $25,000 is all.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Twenty-five thousand dollars in all.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is $16,212 instead of $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is one other little clerical correction that ought to be made there. In line 20, between the words "the" and "commission," the word "water" should be inserted, and instead of "commission" the word "commissioner" should be inserted, so as to read "water commissioner."

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "commission" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "water commissioner."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The House provision says, "to enable the commission to study the questions."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was evidently a mistake.

Mr. SMOOT. But that must refer to the International Boundary Commission.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; the engineers of the International Boundary Commission have been put, by order of the Secretary of State, under the water commissioner. There is no international boundary commissioner, and has been none since the resignation of Gen. Mills. The actual work of measuring the water has been done by the water commissioner, and this topographic study is to be under the water commissioner, who will have at his command the engineering and clerical force of the Boundary Commission.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the whole paragraph ought to be rewritten.

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President. The Senator understands that the Boundary Commission is a commission raised by reason of a treaty with Mexico. Mexico has a commissioner and this country has one. Subsequently to the making of that treaty there was a protocol which provided for the water commissioner. Now there is no commissioner from Mexico. There is one, but we do not recognize him under the treaty. He has his headquarters in El Paso, but we do not recognize him as a commissioner. What we are doing there now is measuring the water for the American people, having nothing to do with the Mexican side, under the water commission—not under the commission as provided for in the treaty, but a separate commission, the water commission, which was raised by reason of this protocol which was subsequently issued.

Mr. SMOOT. What I had reference to in stating that the paragraph should be rewritten was this: It is under the heading of "International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The first line says: "To enable the commission," and so forth. Of course that refers to the International Boundary Commission.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator to say that there was no commission now, and had not been for some time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I say there is no American boundary commissioner, but that the clerical and engineering force formerly under the boundary commissioner is being maintained, and that they are working now under the water commissioner on the Rio Grande. That is why we had to make it "water commissioner" on line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 20 it is proposed to strike out the word "commission" and to insert the words "water commissioner."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator what is meant by chiefs of parties?

Mr. OVERMAN. This estimate was sent to the committee by the department in a letter in which they state that parties go out under the chiefs, and they could not get the money to pay off their hands unless some provision was made like this. The department wanted the chief to have the right to have the money advanced to him, he giving sufficient bonds to protect the Government and make the returns to the Treasury Department. This amendment was dawn up by the depatment itself. They say:

> Please permit me to call your attention to a provision included in the estimates of the State Department in connection with the appropriation, "Boundary line, Alaska and Canada, and United States and Canada," and which it seems has not been clearly understood in the House of Representatives.
> This provision was not intended to institute new methods in the handling of funds under the appropriation named, but simply to give specific authority for the method of advances which has been followed since the creation of these commissions, and which method has been in vogue in the Coast and Geodetic Survey for more than 50 years.

It is the same system that the Coast and Geodetic Survey have.

Mr. SMOOT. The designation "chiefs of parties" sounded so strange to me that I wondered what it really meant.

Mr. OVERMAN. The chief is sent out with a party. I understand they send out parties under certain men who are called "chiefs."

Mr. SMOOT. They are called chiefs instead of superintendents or managers?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. They are the heads of surveyors who go out and locate these lands on the lines which were defined by treaty and which are laid down on the surface of the earth. It is a laborious and long process. They have to be far away from banks and counting houses.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to payment of the money. I was trying to learn why they are called "chiefs."

Mr. ROOT. Each survey party has at its head a man called a "chief."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 2, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON ANNUAL TABLES OF CONSTANTS, ETC.

To the International Commission on Annual Tables of Constants and Numerical Data, Chemical, Physical, and Technological, as established by the Seventh International Congress of Applied Chemistry in London and as continued by the eighth congress in New York, as a contribution by the United States toward the publication of annual tables of constants, chemical, physical, and technological, $500.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is a very small matter of $500 which the United States contributes to the International Commission on Annual Table of Constants and Numerical Data. They are very valuable scientifically. Really it seems to me to cut out a little appropriation of that sort which is of great value ought not to be done.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator that a good many such items are cut out this year because of the war troubles. I know nothing about this item. It has been appropriated for years and years and has been going on until everybody almost lost sight of it.

Mr. LODGE. This is an annual appropriation to secure certain publications.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a contribution of $500 to somebody in Europe who gets out reports and sends them here.

Mr. LODGE. They are of great value to scientific men. It is an annual contribution of $500. If we can not get them on account of the war, the money will not be spent. I think to cut off a petty sum like this and deprive us of those tables which are of value——

Mr. OVERMAN. The money will be spent. I inquired about that. This is not for the purchase of books. It is a contribution on the part of this Government.

Mr. LODGE. I know, but we get the annual reports.

Mr. OVERMAN. The contribution is sent on a certain date every year by this Government to some man abroad, whether we get the reports or not, and I suppose we do. Nobody was insisting on this item, and we cut it out.

Mr. LODGE. If the plan is to withdraw us from every civilized communication of a branch of knowledge, I dare say it will work. It seems to me like an unenlightened thing to do. It seems to me to be stupid to save $500 in that way.

Mr. ROOT. We are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for scientific work. We maintain a Bureau of Standards at very great expense. We have the Smithsonian Institution, which is going on at great expense, and we have thousands of men employed in scientific work by the United States. Here is something which is so important for the scientific men of the whole world that the different civilized countries have united in making a small contribution in order to keep up the work, furnishing the basis for scientific work in all the different countries. It seems to me rather picayune to cut off a little contribution of $500.

Mr. OVERMAN. We appropriate in every appropriation bill for nearly every department a considerable sum of money to buy all the books we need to buy. We give them all the expert books they want.

Mr. ROOT. This is not for buying books. This is having work done.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think a man would do much work for $500, and I should not think the warring nations are going to contribute. It was our idea that as the nations are at war we will pay our $500 and they will not pay their contributions. The thing is ended over there, and we thought we could continue it when the war is over and it can be done.

Mr. ROOT. How do you know they will not pay their contributions?

Mr. OVERMAN. We just take it for granted that the countries which are at war will never contribute money for a purpose like this.

Mr. ROOT. If the work is not done, it will not be paid for.

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not pay, we contribute; and even if they do not contribute, if the appropriation is made we contribute our $500 and the balance of the countries do not.

Mr. ROOT. That is something the executive department ascertains for itself. We can not tell about that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked about this matter. As soon as we are notified by some bureau in a foreign country, wherever it is located, we send our check for the amount.

Mr. ROOT. If we are not notified, we will not send a check.

Mr. OVERMAN. They will be apt to notify us. The man who gets the money will notify us. I do not care anything about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 14, line 17——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. There was an amendment which was passed. I wanted at least to vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator refer to the amendment concerning constants?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. I did not understand that it had been agreed to. I objected to it strongly. It could not have been passed without objection, for I had made objection as strongly as I could.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to reconsidering the vote.

Mr. LODGE. There was not any vote. It was agreed to without objection. There was objection, and it was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the clause under consideration.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration," on page 14, line 16, after the word "Belgium," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$500," so as to make the clause read:

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration at Brussels, Belgium, $500.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I trust this amendment will not be adopted. Two thousand dollars have been contributed by this Government to the Interparliamentary Union for many years. In fact, in the year 1904 the members of the union were invited to come to the United States, and an appropriation of $50,000 was made for it.

In order to briefly explain it I may say that the union is made up of members of legislative bodies the world over. Japan is included, Roumania, Portugal, and Spain. The South American countries, I believe, are not represented, but I suppose a majority of all parliamentary organizations in the world are members of this union. It was on their initiative that the Second Hague Conference was held. They have rendered very potent service in the cause of arbitration on many occasions. The association has a very large membership. It is true the annual meeting was not held last autumn because of the war, but it is necessary to maintain the bureau. An effort has been made by the executive officers of the association to bring together members of parliamentary bodies in countries not now at war. At the close of the war it is hoped the organization will be more effective than ever at any time in its history. The fact that certain nations are now engaged in this conflict and may possibly withhold their contributions affords all the greater reason why we should contribute the usual amount.

I do not think it is looking at international relations from a large standpoint to cut down this amount from $2,000 to $500, and I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. The nations now at war have been sending delegates. It is a kind of a private concern, and it has never been adopted by any nation especially, except by some resolutions that Congress passed that we would appropriate a certain amount as our contribution. The different countries that are represented in this interparliamentary union are now at war. We do not propose to discontinue it entirely. This is not done by any treaty or any agreement between nations. It is more of a private concern.

Mr. BURTON. A very influential one, however.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very, indeed; and I hope it can be kept up. Therefore we appropriate $500. They can not use $2,000 with all the nations at war.

Mr. BURTON. It is a contribution as a contributing member.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know it is a contribution as a contributing member.

Mr. BURTON. It is for the most part for the maintenance of the bureau, because at every meeting there is involved a certain amount of expense.

Mr. OVERMAN. Nearly every great country that has been sending delegates is now at war. I ask the Senator if that is not the case? He has attended it.

Mr. BURTON. Germany and France, Austria-Hungary and Great Britain are at war, but the other countries—Italy and Spain and the United States, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Belgium—all send their delegates.

The point I wish especially to emphasize is that there is an exceptional need of money at this time because of their greater activity in seeking to bring about peace arbitration and also the possibility that contributions may be withheld because of the war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Carolina will yield as to this amendment. I feel as the Senator from Ohio does, that here is a bureau whose activities must be greater now than they have ever been in the history of the Interparliamentary Union, initiating resolutions no doubt, and sending out literature and devising some kind of a form of an international agreement. I have not any doubt that their expenses are a great deal more than in any other year, and inasmuch as this is the usual contribution which we have made it seems to me we ought to continue it at the same rate at least.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what kind of work they are doing now or that they can do?

Mr. BURTON. They have been publishing literature year by year. They have been sending out invitations to neutral nations. They have been sending them to me. I fear those invitations will not meet with so favorable a response as to justify a meeting. They are also sending out propositions in regard to the course which neutral nations should pursue.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know what is done. This country furnishes $2,000 and the other countries contribute pro rata. They must have $50,000 or $75,000. What do they do with that money?

Mr. BURTON. I will frankly say that our contributions are the largest.

Mr. OVERMAN. What do they do with the money?

Mr. BURTON. They maintain this union, publish the proceedings of the union and a great amount——

Mr. OVERMAN. Right there, let me say there will be no union this year.

Mr. BURTON. The union is maintained. It has a membership in all these countries. The Senator from North Carolina does not wish any organization that looks to arbitration and peace to be dissolved or abandoned at this time?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not. Therefore we propose to appriate $500. If it is necessary, I would not object to appropriating the whole amount, but nobody has ever told me what they have done with this money. What do they do with it?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, Mr. Langer, the secretary, a very able and competent man, came here last year. He is the secretary of this organization and devotes his entire time to it. He came here for the purpose of trying to increase the efficiency and cooperation of the American parliamentary group. He was devoting a great amount of time in that effort in the different countries of the world.

The organization is composed of members of the parliaments of all the different countries; that is to say, it is composed of men who have something to do with the Governments of all the great countries of the world. Of course a man of consequence and ability can not be obtained to devote his time to the management and direction of an organization of this kind without being paid and without having an officer and assistants and without having contingent expenses. It may be that at this moment many of his activities are prevented by the existence of the war, but I should be very sorry if that organization, which brings together men who are leaders of opinion in every country and have official relations with the Governments of every country, were not ready the instant that there are indications of possible peace to play its part in endeavoring to bring about the kind of peace there ought to be. We will not be wasting any money in America in making provision for having all the influences that can possibly contribute to bring about the right kind of peace ready to act the instant that the war ends or shows a disposition to end.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will agree with the Senator, but I have never yet had anyone tell me how they spend $40,000 or $50,000. When they have had these interparliamentary meetings we have appropriated $2,000 every year, and other nations have been giving it pro rata. They must have $40,000 or $50,000. How do they spend it? Of course, they ought to have some salaried officer. The committee proposes to give $500 this year. We have been giving $2,000. The question is whether we will give $2,000 or $500. If anyone can tell me what they will do to spend $50,000, I should like to know.

Mr. ROOT. Undoubtedly if an accounting were called for it would be produced, but I can not produce it here. The Senator from Ohio can not produce it here.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not ask the Senator to produce any account.

Mr. ROOT. We ought not to cut off this appropriation because an account has not been produced which has not been asked for. Of course they keep account.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we are passing resolutions through Congress all the time and have for the last 10 or 15 years, making binding agreements that we shall contribute to certain conventions abroad or send persons abroad until it has grown to be almost to be a scandal; we have had so many of them. Last year we struck out half a dozen. We did not think we ought to strike this out, but that we ought to keep it going, and we thought $500 was sufficient. The Senator knows that we have not spent so much money every year as contributing members that we have absolutely lost sight of some of them. People over there, foreigners, are drawing money from this Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the American branch of the Inter-Parliamentary Union is a very active one in the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am a member of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They had a meeting on the 24th day of February in the city of Washington, in one of the large committee rooms of the House of Representatives; and I am told it was splendidly attended; and that it was very enthusiastic in the hope that something might be done in the way of proposing terms of peace or securing international arbitration articles, so as to get something in the way of a solid basis for permanent peace.

Mr. OVERMAN. What has this to do with that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is one of the branches. They have no doubt a secretary and they have literature that they have to distribute. You can not have a field composed of the entire world to be supplied with literature without it costing something; and it is a marvel to me that $60,000 could do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. What do they do? This organization, as I understand, is a legislative body, and meets as such; it is a body composed of legislators from the parliamentary bodies of each country. This year they were to meet here, and we appropriated $40,000 for that convention. I want to know why we should spend $2,000 more for an employee, some foreigner, in a foreign country. What does he do? What is the money intended for? That is what I have been trying to find out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I repeat, they must have literature and they must provide for the distribution of their literature.

Mr. OVERMAN. Your own convention has your literature.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it does not. This is for the purpose of the meeting, entertaining persons, paying for the rent of halls, and things of that kind. It seems to me that this provision at this time, above all others, ought not to go out of the bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, there are two or three amendments in the latter part of the bill as to which I was anxious to be present when they were considered. I am compelled to go away now. If we are going to spend very much time on these $500 items, I want to suggest to the Senator if it is agreeable, to make progress, I would just pay those items myself, and go on with the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether or not I can take the Senator's check. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment, on page 14, line 17.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "United States Court for China," at the top of page 16, to insert:

The judicial authority and jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases vested in and reserved to the consul general of the United States at Shanghai, China, by the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act creating a United States Court for China, and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof," and vested by the diplomatic and consular appropriation act approved March 2, 1909, in the vice consul general of the United States to be designated from time to time by the Secretary of State, shall subsequent to the approval of this act be vested in and exercised by a vice consul of the United States at Shanghai, China.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask where that item came from.

Mr. OVERMAN. It came from the State Department. It seems that by some act of Congress jurisdiction was conferred on some officer who has been changed by some other act of Congress. It is now proposed to give the jurisdiction to the consul general.

Mr. ROOT. If it has the approval of the State Department, that is sufficient for me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 16, after line 21, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL SEISMOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment. I want to call attention to the item on page 16, beginning in line 22 and ending in line 26, providing an appropriation of $800.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let there be a disagreement to the amendment, Mr. President, rather than have any debate over it. It is a small amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to will be disagreed to in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain," on page 17, after line 8, to strike out:

Salaries, United States agency: Two counsel, at $2,520 per annum each; one stenographer, at $1,200 per annum; and messenger, $720 per annum; in all, $6,960.

Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $500; rent of rooms, $1,380.

In all, $8,840.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Salaries, United States agency: Joint secretary, at $3,000 per annum; stenographer, at $1,200 per annum; in all, $4,200.

Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $200; rent of rooms, $1,000; in all, $1,200.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. As the Senator from New York remembers, we had some discussion over this matter last year.

Mr. ROOT. I remember it very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Secretary of State, in a letter to the committee, said that he desired to keep only a secretary there at this time; that there is but little to be done; but that there ought to be a secretary kept there to look after the papers and files and to attend to correspondence. This was asked for by the Department of State; and we put it in as though it were an estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. Was it an estimate or was it a letter?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a letter, and it is estimated for in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. It did not come with the regular estimates?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. SMOOT. But it came in the shape of a recommendation?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; that is right.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it is not an estimate, Mr. President.

Mr. ROOT. They have suspended the hearings.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will read to the Senator from New York the letter of the Secretary of State. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 22, 1915.

Hon. LEE OVERMAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. OVERMAN: Owing to the war in Europe, the meetings of the Tribunal of the Pecuniary Claims Commission have been interrupted. This tribunal was created by treaty, and passes upon claims of citizens of the United States against Great Britain and claims of citizens of Great Britain against the United States, which claims are presented to the tribunal by the agencies of the United States and of Great Britain. Necessarily the agency of the United States has not been as active as heretofore, and hence the expense of it has been reduced to a minimum.

I feel, however, that some appropriation should be made to keep the agency going. There are many cases, involving large amounts, still pending, and others which require the drafting of additional pleadings, while there is constant correspondence between the United States agency and the agency of Great Britain; the latter country, although in a state of war, has continued to file pleadings, and has asked that the American agency file its pleadings also. Should the war cease, necessarily the tribunal would resume its labors, and the American agency ought to be in a position where it could transact any necessary business, either before the tribunal or with the agency of Great Britain.

I think that provision should be made for a joint secretary, at a salary of $3,000, and for one counsel, at a salary of $2,520, in addition to the other small items necessary to the work of the American agency.

Yours, very truly,

W. J. BRYAN.

Mr. ROOT. There does not seem to be any provision at all for counsel.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; we struck that out. We did not think we needed any counsel now, as there is nothing for one to do.

Mr. ROOT. I thought the Secretary of State asked for counsel.

Mr. OVERMAN. He does propose counsel at an annual salary of $2,520.

Mr. ROOT. All the counsel have been cut out?

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee thought that, as there was nothing to do, there was no necessity of having counsel, at $2,520 a year, sitting around, and that the secretary could do the work. After the war is over we shall need counsel, but we do not need counsel now.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 18, line 15, after the date "1916," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,500," so as to make the clause read:

Fisheries convention, United States and Great Britain: For the payment of the actual and necessary expenses of a commissioner on the part of the United States under the convention between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, signed at Washington on April 11, 1908, while engaged in work under the convention, including clerical expenses that may be incurred in carrying out the convention during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Waterways treaty, United States and Great Britain: International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain," on page 19, line 6, after the date "1909," to insert "as well as not to exceed the sum of $5,000 for the payment of necessary expenses incurred and for services rendered under the direction of the Secretary of State in the examination and preparation of cases involving the use, distribution, or division of waters and other questions or matters of difference covered by the treaty of January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain, and in representing this Government and the American interests involved in the presentation of such cases before the International Joint Commission constituted under that treaty, $60,000"; and in line 20, after the words "Secretary of State," to strike out "Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be expended for subsistence of the commission, its attorney and secretary, except the sum of $5 per day when absent from Washington on official business; and no part of it shall be expended for subsistence and traveling expenses from and to their places of residence and Washington," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, including rental of offices at Washington, D. C., expense of printing and necessary traveling and other expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, as well as not to exceed the sum of $5,000 for the payment of necessary expenses incurred and for services rendered under the direction of the Secretary of State in the examination and preparation of cases involving the use, distribution, or division of waters and other questions or matters of difference covered by the treaty of January 11, 1909, between the United States and Great Britain, and in representing this Government and the American interests involved in the presentation of such cases before the International Joint Commission constituted under that treaty, $60,000, together with the unexpected balance of the appropriation made for this object for the fiscal year 1915, said amounts to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think, in justice to this commission and in view of some criticisms which have been made of it and its work, that at least a brief statement ought to be made with reference to its work.

As a general rule I think these commissions are almost a useless expense, and I had rather a prejudice against the continuance of this commission; but we had the chairman of the commission and another member of it, Mr. Tawney, before the committee, and they made quite a full statement with reference to its work, and data were submitted by them that convinced me that this is one of the most important commissions if not the most important commission that we have, and that its work is very valuable, especially to the United States and Great Britain and Canada.

The work of the commission is not sensational at all, and but very little notice has been given to the commission by the press or by Members of the House and Senate. The commission is working very harmoniously. If its members were quarreling among themselves, they might get some notice in the papers and otherwise, or if they were encouraging disputes between the two countries they would probably get some notice; but instead of that they are settling disputes, and settling them very successfully.

In view of the statements that were made before the committee by members of the commission and the data submitted, I have thought it proper to prepare in a very succinct form a statement of the principal work of this commission, and I wish to present it to the Senate, so that it may go in the RECORD in a concise form. Therefore I am going to take a little of the time of the Senate to present briefly the work of this commission.

On January 11, 1909, shortly before the close of the Roosevelt administration, a treaty was signed between Great Britain and the United States concerning the use of the boundary waters between Canada and the United States. This treaty had a threefold purpose—first, to prevent disputes regarding the use of boundary waters; second, "to settle all questions which are now pending between the United States and the Dominion of Canada involving the rights, obligations, and interests of either in relation to the other along their common frontier"; and, third, "to make provision for the adjustment and settlement of all such questions as may hereafter arise." It was, therefore, the then existing disputes regarding the use of boundary waters that gave the opportunity, and this opportunity was eagerly seized, to agree to settle all pending questions, whatever their nature; and at the same time, in order that the friendly relations between Canada and the United States should not be disturbed, that the high contracting parties provided for the adjustment and settlement of all future disputes.

It is not my purpose to analyze in detail this important treaty. I merely want to call attention briefly to the jurisdiction, functions, and the powers of the International Joint Commission created by article 7 of this treaty and also to call attention briefly to what the commission has accomplished in furtherance of the purposes for which the treaty was made and for which the commission was created, which statements will effectively answer and refute reckless statements recently made to the effect that this commission was an unnecessary organization and had thus far accomplished practically nothing.

By the express terms of this treaty the International Joint Commission is given final jurisdiction in all cases involving the uses, obstructions, or diversions, whether temporary or permanent, of the waters that mark the boundary between Canada and the United States for more than 2,000 miles. In all cases arising under articles 3, 4, 8, and 10 of the treaty the decisions of the commission are final, from which there is no appeal, either on the part of the people effected thereby or on the part of either Government. Therefore in all cases of difference, specified in the foregoing articles of the treaty, the commission acts as an international court and renders its judgment, which is binding within the jurisdiction of both countries.

Under article 9 the high contracting parties have agreed to refer questions, from time to time, to the commission for investigation, and the commission shall, on the request of either Government, examine and report on the law and the facts, together with their recommendations, on all questions so referred, but their findings in such cases are not binding either as decisions or as arbitral awards. It is important to note that under article 9 the high contracting parties agree to refer questions, from time to time, and that the obligation to do so is created by express language, for in such cases the word "shall" is construed as mandatory.

Although this treaty was signed January 11, 1909, and was promulgated by President Taft on the 13th day of May, 1910, owing to the delay in appointment by the King of Great Britain of the three Canadian members of the commission, the commission was not organized until January 10, 1912. Since then it has been actively engaged in the settlement of disputes that existed at the time the treaty was signed and in the settlement of cases and in the conduct of investigations under article 9, involving the rights and interests of both Governments and the rights and interests of their respective people in the use, obstruction, and diversion of these boundary waters. An examination of the record of the work of the commission will disclose the fact that since its organization three years ago this commission has finally settled and adjusted more controversies between the people of Canada and the United States and between the two Governments than were previously settled and adjusted through the diplomatic agencies of England and the United States since the beginning of our Government.

That is rather a remarkable statement, Mr. President, but it was made before the committee by Mr. Tawney, a member of the commission, and I think it is fully borne out by the report of the work of the commission.

In fact, differences and disputes between Canada and the United States involving territorial rights or other interests of the two Governments and of their peoples through the established diplomatic agencies have been comparatively few. All important questions or disputes arising between Canada and the United States prior to the treaty of January 11, 1909, were referred for settlement either to special boards of arbitration or to special commissions created for such purposes. These boards and commissions always sat either in London or in Washington, but mostly in London, and were always attended with a large retinue of subordinate officials, costing both Governments many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The records of this commission will also disclose the fact that it has settled and now has under consideration and investigation cases involving matters of serious difference between Canada and the United States and between their people which have been pending for over 20 years, during which time the two Governments have failed to adjust these differences through diplomatic negotiations.

For the information of the Senate, I will cite only two of these cases. The first is the Lake of the Woods controversy. Many Senators have doubtless never heard of this controversy or know nothing whatever as to the nature and extent of it, yet it has been pending between the two Governments ever since the construction of the Norman Dam at the outlet of the Lake of the Woods at the city of Kenora, Ontario, in 1888. The Lake of the Woods is a body of water 1,500 square miles in area. In it there are more than 9,000 meandered islands. The drainage area of this lake and its tributary waters is more than 26,000 square miles, almost equally divided between Canada and the United States. From the source of the Pigeon River, the extreme easterly waters flowing into the Lake of the Woods, and the outlet of the lake is a distance of over 400 miles. On the south and west shores of the lake, a distance of over 50 miles when at its normal level, the waters of the lake and the land meet almost on a level.

The construction of the dam just referred to materially raised the level of this lake, submerging many thousands of acres of agricultural and timber lands in private and public ownership. Some of these lands were and are now owned by the Government of the United States. Some are owned by the State of Minnesota, and others are owned by citizens of that State. In addition to this, the construction of the International Dam at International Falls, at the outlet of Rainy Lake, a tributary of the Lake of the Woods, also raised the level of Rainy Lake, which is a boundary water, doing, as it is claimed, great damage to riparian owners on both sides of this lake. The construction of these two dams and their consequent effect upon the levels of both lakes, and the injury occasioned thereby, has led to strenuous protest and to claims for damages on the part of the people, which the two Governments, through diplomatic agencies, have ever since in vain endeavored to settle.

It is estimated that there is invested in industrial enterprises on both sides of these boundary waters not less than $150,000,000, to say nothing of the agricultural interests that are involved. Under article 9 of this treaty, and by reference of the two Governments, the International Joint Commission must investigate and report its conclusions and recommendations as to what the normal level of the Lake of the Woods was, between what range of levels the commission would recommend the establishment of permanent levels, and whether such levels so recommended can be reasonably maintained, what amount of agricultural land will be submerged at the recommended levels, and what is the value of that land.

This has involved a complete topographic survey of the entire drainage area of this lake and its tributary waters. There never has been a survey of this kind of this region in either country. This survey has been completed, and the data thus collected is now being compiled, and the final report of the engineers will soon be made, when the commission must determine the levels it will recommend, and then, by public hearings conducted along these waters, ascertain the value of the land that will be submerged at the levels agreed upon. This will afford to both Governments the necessary information upon which an agreement may be reached for the adjustment of this most difficult question, and also an agreement as to the nature of that international control over these waters and their outlets that is necessary to insure that protection as well as the benefit which the people of both countries are justly entitled to in respect to the use of these waters.

In this case the report of the commission, with its conclusions and recommendations on the questions referred for investigation, will not be regarded as a decision of the questions submitted, nor will it have the character of an arbitral award, for under article 9 of the treaty the jurisdiction of the commission is investigative.

For about 12 years there was a dispute between Canada and the United States over the use of the waters of the St. Marys River for power purposes at the Soo. The St. Marys River, as you know, is the outlet of Lake Superior, a body of water about 34,000 square miles in extent. Congress had previously authorized the construction of compensating works on our side of the line for the diversion of our one-half of the waters of this river for power purposes. The Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario had given like authorization for the diversion of the waters on their side for power purposes. The minimum flow of this river is about 60,000 cubic feet per second. Notwithstanding the fact that the works on both sides of the boundary were authorized by both Governments, the control of these works for the regulation of the levels of Lake Superior and division of the waters, as well as the character of the works themselves, could not be mutually agreed upon, and, in fact, the obstruction of these works after the promulgation of the treaty of May 13, 1910, could not be proceeded with on either side without the approval of this commission. Application was made for such approval under article 3 of the treaty in June, 1913.

The effect of the construction of these compensating works in the St. Marys River was to entirely obstruct the natural outlet of Lake Superior, substituting therefor a mechanically operated outlet. The effect of this will be to raise the mean level of Lake Superior a few inches. Hence it was necessary in the consideration and final determination of these cases on both sides of the line to consider the rights and interests of the people and of the municipalities bordering on this great lake.

The treaty authorizes the commission in such cases to impose in its final order of approval such conditions precedent as in its judgment may be necessary to protect the rights and interests of the people of both countries against injury in consequence of such obstructions. It may even require the applicant to indemnify people injured on the other side of the line in consequence of the change in the levels of the waters obstructed, or it may require as a condition of its order the construction of additional protective works.

The hearing in this case was begun at the city of Detroit, Mich., in March and was concluded in Washington in the month of April. Representatives of both Governments, of the municipalities interested on both sides of the line, and representatives of corporate and private interests were heard in this case. In May, 1914, just 11 months after the application was filed, the commission made and filed with the respective Governments its final order in both the Michigan Northern Power Co. case and the Algoma Steel Corporation (Ltd.) case, finally approving the proposed obstruction and diversion of the waters of this river on both sides of the line for power purposes and creating an international board consisting of an engineer representative of both Governments, with full power to control and regulate the operations of this mechanically operated outlet of Lake Superior, so as to protect the interests of navigation and the interests of both Governments and their respective peoples, both at the "Soo" and on the shores of this great lake.

In the final determination of these two cases the long-standing controversy between Canada and the United States was determined. Another result is the fact that the two Governments have leased to the two corporations referred to the right to use the waters of this river for power purposes. Under the lease executed by the Government of the United States to the Michigan Northern Power Co., which lease runs for 30 years, the United States will derive a maximum annual revenue of $66,000, or a total of $1,980,000 during the entire term of the lease. At the expiration of the lease the compensating works built by the Michigan Northern Power Co. at an enormous cost will become the property of our Government and our Government will continue thereafter to derive an equal, if not a greater, revenue. Measured, therefore, in dollars and cents, the work of this commission in the settlement of this one controversy, if it did nothing else, would reimburse our Government for all the expense incurred in consequence of its existence and on account of the work it has done and is now engaged in.

There were many other disputes existing at the time this commission was created that have since been finally determined. One was the Livingstone Channel controversy in the Detroit River, where our Government had expended $11,000,000 on both sides of the line in the interest of navigation through that river, which was finally determined to the satisfaction of both Governments by this commission. Another was the decision of the commission in the application of the Rainy River Improvement Co. for approval of its proposed dam at Kettle Falls in Rainy Lake. Another was the determination of the application of the Watrous Island Boom Co. for approval of its proposed construction of a log boom in Rainy River 10 miles long, which threatened injury to the navigation interests and to the interests of the people on both sides of the line. Another was the application of the city of Winnipeg for the daily diversion of a hundred million gallons of the water of the Lake of the Woods, which waters are to be carried from the Lake of the Woods to Winnipeg, Ontario, a distance of about 90 miles. There are also other applications now pending before the commission for its final approval under article 3 of the treaty of other proposed obstructions and diversions of these boundary waters for power and other purposes.

Under article 4 of this treaty the high contracting parties have agreed that the waters therein defined as boundary waters and waters flowing across the boundary shall not be polluted on either side to the injury of health or property on the other. In 1912 complaint was made to both Governments that this provision of the treaty was being violated, in that these waters, and especially the rivers connecting the Great Lakes, were being polluted on both sides to the injury of health and property on the other side. Thereupon the Governments agreed to refer and did refer to this commission with instructions to investigate and report its conclusions upon the question as to whether these waters were in fact polluted in contravention of the treaty; and if so, at what places, from what sources, and to what extent; and the Governments also required in their reference that the commission recommend suitable and adequate remedies for such pollution wherever found to exist contrary to the provisions of the treaty.

The investigation of the first branch of this reference has been concluded and the result thereof embodied in a progress report, which the commission presented to the two Governments about a year ago, copies of which report have been furnished Senators and Members of the House. The investigation of this first branch of the reference involved the bacteriological examination of these boundary waters from the Lake of the Woods on the west to the St. Croix River on the east, a distance of over 2,000 miles. It was the most extensive bacteriological examination of water ever made. Over 19,000 samples of water were examined and 17 field laboratories were installed and used for that purpose; 34 bacteriologists were employed under the direction of the consulting sanitary expert, Dr. Allen J. McLaughlin, of the United States Public Health Service.

The field work in this examination was concluded in just seven months from the time it began, with the result that these boundary waters, with the exception of the waters in the Great Lakes, were found to be polluted, and some of them grossly polluted, in contravention of this treaty. Even the waters of the Rainy River were shown to be polluted from International Falls to the Lake of the Woods, a distance of 100 miles. The same is true of all the rivers connecting the Great Lakes, as well as the St. Lawrence River, their outlet.

According to the census of Canada and the United States, this investigation of the pollution of these waters involves directly the health of over 7,000,000 people, for almost the entire boundary water population is located in large centers of population on the rivers connecting the Great Lakes. The commission is now engaged in the more difficult branch of this investigation and one that is far more complicated, namely, the remedies which it is required to recommend to the two Governments for the pollution which it has already found to exist on both sides of the line, to the injury of health and property on the other side.

It will be seen, therefore, that since the organization of this commission it has not only been actively engaged in the discharge of its duty under the treaty, but that it has accomplished more in the final determination of disputes between the two Governments, and especially between their respective peoples, than any other similar institution that has ever existed by authority of these two high contracting parties. Thus far in the performance of its duty its decisions, its reports with conclusions and recommendations have all been unanimous except one, which involved merely a technical question of jurisdiction, in which case one Canadian member of the commission joined with the three American members and rendered a final decision. It is also true that all of the final decisions of this commission and all of the reports with their conclusions and recommendations have been accepted by both Governments as being entirely satisfactory. This commission therefore has not only justified its existence and the wisdom of the high contracting parties in creating it, from the standpoint of material benefit to the Governments and to the people living along these boundary waters, but its work and the satisfaction which the result of its labor has given to both Governments and their people is a splendid tribute to the genius and progressive international statesmanship of the two great English-speaking nations of the world in thus providing a means which, as the result of actual experience, is proving efficient and invaluable for the judicial settlement of great international questions involving treaty obligations or the rights and interests, as well as the health, of their respective peoples.

It must be apparent to anyone that with a boundary between two countries almost 4,000 miles in extent, with millions of people living side by side under two separate and distinct governmental jurisdictions, whose commercial, industrial, and financial interests are necessarily and intimately related, and who are the owners in common of a vast property which marks almost one-half of that boundary, conflict of interest will arise in the future as in the past. This conflict of interest will hereafter as heretofore lead to controversies not between the two Governments necessarily, but inevitably between their people. Between no two countries in the world is there a boundary of such territorial extent as that between the United States and Canada. It is likewise true that there is no boundary between any two countries in the world marked by a common property like the water which marks almost one-half the boundary between Canada and the United States or that is as valuable or as essential to the industrial welfare of the people of both countries as is the water from the Lake of the Woods to the St. Croix River.

Without an international tribunal of some kind whose jurisdiction, in the settlement of international controversies or in the determination of individual rights and interests, may be invoked by the people of these two countries as well as by the Governments themselves for the prompt settlement of such controversies or for the ascertainment and determination of their respective rights and interests, there is no existing instrumentality available for that purpose except the diplomatic agency of the two Governments. Diplomacy does not afford the people of two nations, whose rights and interests are involved in any international controversy or in a controversy between themselves, the opportunity to appear face to face to have their controversies determined upon sworn testimony and according to the principles of law. The necessity, therefore, for the existence of this International Joint Commission or of some similar international tribunal will exist as long as there is necessity for the existence of courts either in the United States or Canada for the determination of controversies arising among their own people. This is so because of the intimate commercial, industrial, and financial relations, and also because of the exercise within their respective governmental jurisdiction of their common right to the use of the water which marks the international boundary between them.

The treaty between Great Britain and the United States creating this international court of justice marks the most advanced step yet taken by any two nations in the history of the world, not only for the settlement of international questions arising between them, but also for the settlement of questions of less consequence from an international standpoint between the people of both nations.

There are many arbitration treaties between the United States and other nations. Doubtless there are many between other nations of the world, but there are none between any two nations, except between Great Britain and the United States, that creates a tribunal composed of citizens of both nations for the settlement of international questions between their Governments or between their people. This commission, therefore, charged as it is with the duty, and having the power to work out practically the great problem of whether or not the theory of international peace through the instrumentality of a court of arbitral justice can or can not be made a success should have the hearty support and encouragement of both Governments and their representatives.

In my judgment, this tribunal furnishes an example of an instrumentality that may be well used, not only between the United States and Canada or Great Britain but between other countries, in the settlement of disputes between nations and people.

I thought, in justice to the commission, that this statement ought to be made, especially after I had an opportunity to see the work the commission has done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Salaries of the Consular Service," on page 20, line 16, after the word "consuls," to insert "from February 5 to June 30, 1915, both dates inclusive," and in line 20, after "$13,333.35," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of consuls general and consuls, as provided in the act approved February 5, 1915, entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," $1,069,000: Provided, That the amount appropriated for salaries of consuls general and consuls contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," approved June 30, 1914, is hereby made available for salaries of consuls general and consuls at the rate of compensation specified in the act entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," approved February 5, 1915; and that there is also hereby appropriated for salaries of consuls general and consuls from February 5 to June 30, 1915, both dates inclusive, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of the said act of February 5, 1915, the additional sum of $13,333.35, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 24, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON PUBLIC AND PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

The appropriation of $15,000 "for the payment of compensation to, and the necessary expenses of, the representative or representatives of the United States on the International Commission of Jurists, organized under the convention signed at the Third International American Conference, August 23, 1906, approved by the Senate February 3, 1908, and ratified by the President February 8, 1908, for the purpose of preparing drafts of codes of public and private international law; and for the payment of the quota of the United States of the expenses incident to the preparation of such drafts, including the compensation of experts under article 4 of the convention," made in the "act making appropriations for Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Massachusetts is rising. To save time, I will ask him if it is expected that this conference will be held here this year? This is making available the sum appropriated last year for this convention to be held here this year.

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; this is not the $40,000 item, unless I have misread.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am talking about the $15,000 one for the International Law Conference.

Mr. LODGE. This does not provide for its being held here.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; not here.

Mr. LODGE. This is our quota under our agreement, which has been appropriated, not used, and is now reappropriated. Of course, if the meeting can not be held, it will not be used.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask whether it is going to be held. If it is going to be held, the money ought to be appropriated. If it is not, why appropriate it? We appropriated it last year. If the Senator tells me it is going to be held, I am willing to strike out the amendment.

Mr. LODGE (reading)—

The appropriation of $15,000, "for the payment of compensation to, and the necessary expenses of, the representative or representatives of the United States on the International Commission of Jurists, organized under the convention signed at the Third International American Conference August 23, 1906.

This is an appropriation to which we are bound by a convention.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. Now, why should we, in the midst of this war, when there are all these questions of treaty observance coming up, suddenly break our obligation because we do not think the money will be called for? If there is no conference the money will not be used. It comes over from last year, I suppose, because it was not used.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is going to be no conference, why appropriate the money?

Mr. LODGE. What difference does it make? In the first place, you are not appropriating the money; you are reappropriating it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; but that is the same thing as appropriating it.

Mr. LODGE. It is money already appropriated and is in the Treasury. What I dislike is, because of the misfortune of a great war in Europe, that we should begin to break all our agreements under conventions on the ground that the meetings can not be held. It seems to me—well, I do not like to use language to describe how it does seem to me. I think it is unfortunate to put the United States in such an attitude at such a time, for the sake of apparently saving a few thousand dollars but not really saving it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 20, to strike out:

COMPILATION OF CHINESE TREATIES.

The appropriation of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the printing and binding of a compilation by the Department of State of the treaties, contracts, and international arrangements entered into by the Empire and Republic of China with other Governments, made in the act approved February 28, 1913, making appropriation for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and reappropriated and made available in the act approved June 30, 1914, making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 10, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON MARITIME LAW.

The appropriation of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, "for the expenses of participation by the United States by officially appointed delegates in the International Conference of Maritime Law to meet at Brussels in 1913," made in the act approved February 28, 1913, making appropriation for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, by the Diplomatic and Consular act approved June 30, 1914, is hereby extended and made available for the meeting of the said conference during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 2, to strike out:

NINETEENTH CONFERENCE, INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION.

The appropriation of $40,000 "For the purpose of defraying the expenses in Washington City incident to the Nineteenth Conference of the Interparliamentary Union, to be held in Washington in 1915, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, made in the 'act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915,' is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. The President is hereby requested to extend an invitation to the members of the Interparliamentary Union."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 2, to insert:

SECOND PAN AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS.

To enable the Government of the United States suitably to participate in the Second Pan American Scientific Congress, to be held at the city of Washington in October, 1915, and for the necessary expenses for clerks, printing (including the publication of the proceedings of the congress in English and Spanish), stationery, and supplies and other incidental expenses, including rent in the District of Columbia, and for the entertainment of the delegates, to be immediately available, $15,000, which sum is in addition to the $35,000 appropriated for the same purposes by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," approved June 30, 1914, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 17, after the date "1915," to insert "$10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to be expended for the entertainment of the foreign delegates," so as to make the clause read:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to invite the several Governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Haiti, and Santo Domingo and Cuba to send official delegates to the meeting of the Pan American Medical Congress, to be held in the city of San Francisco, Cal., Panama-Pacific International Exposition, June 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, 1915, $10,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to be expended for the entertainment of the foreign delegates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 17, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL ENGINEERING CONGRESS.

The President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Engineering Congress to be held at San Francisco, Cal., September 20 to 25, inclusive, 1915: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted for the expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with the said congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Exposition in city of Panama," on page 29, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$100,000," and in line 9 after the word "country," to insert "$75,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the erection, on land donated to this Government by the Government of Panama, of a suitable building, which may permanently stand as a bureau of information and commercial museum to exhibit and draw attention at all times to the industrial and commercial standing of the United States, and the residue to be expended," so as to make the clause read:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept an invitation extended by the Government of Panama to the Government of the United States to participate in an exposition to be held in the city of Panama; and the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable suitable participation in said exposition by this country, $75,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the erection, on land donated to this Government by the Government of Panama, of a suitable building, which may permanently stand as a bureau of information and commercial museum to exhibit and draw attention at all times to the industrial and commercial standing of the United States, and the residue to be expended for an appropriate exhibit of the arts, industries, manufactures, products of the soil, mines, and waters of the United States, and, as far as practicable, of the functions of the General Government, and an exhibit of such other articles as the President may direct, including an exhibit relating to the Panama Canal.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator in charge of the bill. Is there likely to be a further appropriation in connection with this exposition?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think not.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WEEKS. If the Senator from North Carolina has answered the question, I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey for a question.

Mr. OVERMAN. The House, after investigating this matter, appropriated only $25,000. They wanted to erect a building in which the United States could make a display, and I suppose there might be hereafter some further appropriations. This $25,000 was simply for the purpose of erecting a building in which there could be exhibited certain articles of the arts, industries, manufactures, products of the soil, mines, and waters of the United States. Panama has proposed to donate to the United States a certain amount of land contiguous to our territory.

Mr. WEEKS. There may be peculiar reasons why we should make an appropriation for an exposition at Panama; but I think we have very greatly overdone the exposition business in the past, and almost invariably the undertaking commences with a small appropriation and leads to a very considerable one before it is completed. I should like to know about how much this is going to cost, if the Senator can tell us, before the exposition is completed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Panama has invited this country to participate in this exposition. The House investigated it thoroughly and made it only $25,000. The committee proposed to give the full amount, but it was reduced in the House. We thought we ought to put up a building there and let it be a permanent building for this country for an exhibit of arts and manufactures which people traveling through the canal could see.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the Senator would it not be better to have a permanent building for some of the purposes for which we will require buildings on the Isthmus in connection with our occupation of the Canal Zone or in connection with the canal?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not have it on our own property donated by the Government of Panama for the purpose of exhibiting our own manufactures?

Mr. WEEKS. You mean as a permanent exposition?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; a permanent exposition.

Mr. WEEKS. I am simply asking for information. I do not know anything about it, but I am suspicious about undertakings of this kind, and I have felt that I would not support them in the future.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator, but I do think this is an exceptional case, because the little country of Panama has invited us to participate. The House of Representatives appropriated the amount of $25,000 and we propose to increase it to $100,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], who asked the question if there is likely to be any further expenditure, I beg to state that I am chairman of the Committee on Industrial Expositions, as Senators know. So far as a permanent exposition at Panama is concerned, I know but little, but I do say that I have been solicited by a Representative from California [Congressman KAHN] urging that I present a joint resolution looking to the visit of a joint committee of the Senate and of the House to Panama as well as the California exposition. I would say just at this time——

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Do I understand that this contemplated visit is to be at the public expense?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I may imagine so.

Mr. PENROSE. It would not be a pleasant trip unless it was made under an appropriation.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, that comes very ungenerously from the Senator from Pennsylvania with his big, broad heart and generous promptings and impulses.

Mr. PENROSE. I am not going to oppose it. I simply wanted to know in what direction we were heading.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can say I am not one of those who believe that these great expositions which are held are merely a junket. I believe in expositions. It may be that I am spectacular, but I believe that the great exposition at Philadelphia, the great exposition at St. Louis, and the expositions at other points have been a real blessing and genuine profit to our country. I believe this is a time when the particular purpose in view, celebrating the extraordinary piece of engineering work, the completion of the Panama Canal, means so much not only to the United States but to the world; inasmuch as the United States was the chief and principal factor in it, it is fitting and proper that a dignified and proper recognition should be had upon the part of the Congress of the United States and that it could be well continued on to the California Exposition.

I do not know just what the amount will be, but I believe the public will recognize and not criticize adversely the proper recognition of those two great demonstrations by a reasonable expenditure of money, so that a number, say 7 to 10 Members of the House and about the same number from the Senate, may visit that great exposition. I believe this is a great epoch and feature in our history that we can well afford to recognize, and that the public will not charge us with unwisdom or extravagance on that account.

Mr. PENROSE. After listening carefully to the explanation of the Senator from New Jersey, I do not want to make any opposition to this item.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not believe the Senator would.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me to state that that is not the item which is under consideration?

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me to finish my sentence, I will then yield. If the ultimate object of this exposition is to provide at the Government expense for 10 or 15 Representatives and an equal number of Senators, headed by the distinguished chairman of the Industrial Expositions Committee, I know of no Senator more calculated to uphold the dignity of such a romantic and sentimental occasion. So far from opposing this very modest sum I will vote to increase it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not expect, Mr. President, to be admitted into the select circle who will participate upon the historical occasion, but they shall carry my best wishes to the ancient city at Panama.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say in response to that splendid thought, so beautifully expressed, that I know of no man in this broad land who would be a more delightful associate to accompany the chairman of the committee than the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. I am infinitely happy that God has restored him to his splendid health of days gone by, and that I may hope he may associate with and accompany this committee when it may go.

I may be talking somewhat in anticipation. I have not yet introduced the joint resolution, but I will prepare the Senate for the fact that I shall offer a joint resolution. Just how this committee may be selected I am not prepared to state, but I can say with perfect assurance I feel I express the gratification of every other Senator in this body that we will all glory to the extent of our capacity to have the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania accompany us to that exposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 30, to insert:

EXPENDITURE BY UNITED STATES, PACIFICATION IN CUBA.

The President is hereby requested to take such steps as he may deem necessary to have the Republic of Cuba reimburse the United States to the extent of $6,509,511.26, said sum being the amount expended out of the Treasury of the United States from 1907 to 1909 on account of the army of pacification in Cuba.

Mr. LODGE. On that amendment I desire to make a point of order. I do not want to debate it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The point of order is well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 8, to insert:

CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN FINANCIERS.

The President is hereby authorized to extend to the Governments of Central and South America an invitation to be represented by their ministers of finance and leading bankers, not exceeding three in number in each case, to attend a conference with the Secretary of the Treasury in the city of Washington at such date as shall be determined by the President, with a view of establishing closer and more satisfactory financial relations between their countries and the United States of America, and authority is hereby given to the Secretary of the Treasury to invite, in his discretion, representative bankers of the United States to participate in the said conference, and for the purpose of meeting such actual and necessary expenses as may be incidental to the meeting of said conference and for the entertainment of the foreign conferees the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 2, to insert:

CERTAIN CHINESE RESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES TRAVELING ABROAD PERMITTED TO REENTER UNITED STATES.

Such Chinese residents of the United States, not exceeding 500, as may accompany to China Mr. A. T. Bin Town Chu, a Chinese merchant, resident of the city of New York, N. Y., for the purpose of studying conditions affecting and the ways and means of the building of a model city in the Chinese Republic illustrative of American methods of administration, transportation, sanitation, etc., shall be permitted subsequently to reenter the United States, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. LODGE. That amendment, it seems to me, is a very extraordinary one.

Mr. OVERMAN. This was brought to the attention of the committee by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and we referred it to the Secretary of Labor and he writes a letter recommending it. It seems that this Mr. Bin Town Chu, who is a Chinese merchant, proposes to establish in China a modern city to which to take about 300 or 400 men. He wants to come back when he goes over there and establishes his city, and we propose to provide that he may come back under such rules and regulations as may be provided by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Labor. We do not see any harm in it.

Mr. LODGE. Most of the Chinese in this country are what is known as the coolie class.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think this man belongs to the gentleman class.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think they are persons to engage in the founding of new republics. They are good workmen, no doubt. The trouble with this is that it will take out 500 of these people and may bring back 500, who were not here before, new ones.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked that question. We do not think, under the safeguards, that that can or will be done.

Mr. LODGE. They look very much alike. I am somewhat familiar with the question of immigration, and I assure the Senator I think it is a very dangerous thing to put in the bill without knowing more about it.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask whether there has been any communication from the Government of China on the subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. None at all.

Mr. ROOT. I do not think we ought to do it.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I supposed there had been some communication from the Government of China.

Mr. ROOT. It is a wild sort of a thing. It looks to me like Gilbert and Sullivan.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think it has been diplomatically taken up at all.

Mr. ROOT. I make a point of order that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The point of order must be sustained.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to an estimate which was made by the State Department for the acquisition of a building at Shanghai for the accommodation of the consulate general, United States court, jail, post office, and other offices of the United States, $360,000. I observe that that item was reported in the House bill, and I have been told that it went out on a point of order. I am informed by a Member of the House that this item had the support of the committee of the House, and that it would have met the approval of the House had not the point of order been raised. The Member of the House who spoke to me about it was one of the noted Taft party who made a visit to the Orient, and upon that trip it was the observation of all Americans in the party that the accommodations of the United States for the offices of the consul general and the other offices that were there were too inadequate and not at all dignified in character or in location.

Since that time, as the result of some agitation upon the subject, the question has been considered by the State Department of the purchase of a suitable lot on the Bund, the chief commercial street of Shanghai, on the water front, the street upon which, I believe, all the offices of foreign countries are located. The portion that is subject to acquisition by foreigners in the city of Shanghai is very limited, and this particular location is a very desirable one. Unless the United States Government avails itself of the option that has been secured, which expires, I believe, in March next, it is extremely probable that the location will be acquired by some other power.

I may add that since the trip in which the Congressman participated the Government acquired by lease the very premises that it now seeks to acquire by purchase, and that there is danger of its losing possession of the property under the lease and of the property being sold.

It does seem to me that this is a matter of importance. I observe that it is very strongly recommended by the State Department in a communication to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, what is the amount of the appropriation that has been suggested?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Three hundred and sixty thousand dollars. The most complete evidence, I may say, of the reasonableness of the price is contained in the communication from the Department of State. They make comparative statements in reference to the purchases and sales that have been made in that locality and show that the price is a very reasonable one.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand that it has been estimated for?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It was estimated for.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it is authorized by law?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am in great sympathy with the Senator's suggestion. I have called the attention of the Senate several times to this matter since I have been permitted to occupy a seat here, and I hope that at some time we may take a broad view of the fact that our consuls are housed inadequately in almost every country of the world. I recall the fact that a few years ago talking with a gentleman who had gone abroad for the purpose of trying to extend American trade, and he said the flags of Great Britain and other countries were floating over rather palatial quarters, and when he went to look up the American consul he found him in a back street upstairs.

I think we ought to give the matter consideration, of course, not now, but at some future time. For the present I hope the Senator will get the amendment in which he is interested attached to this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that we are very anxious to do the same thing. I believe under the law it is required that the Secretary of State shall every year make an estimate for a building somewhere abroad. There ought to be a building in London, there ought to be a building in France, and one in Switzerland, and in all those countries, but we did not think with the condition of our Treasury this year that we could spend $360,000 upon a building in China.

This old idea that there is an option upon the property has been advanced before. There is nothing in that. We can buy this property later, and if not we can buy just as good property somewhere else. I do not think this is the time to make this appropriation. I assure the Senator from Nevada that we adopted the policy last year, and we are going to carry it on, but this is not the year to do it. We have not enough money to spend $360,000 at this time upon a building in Shanghai, when such a building is needed in London, and another in France, and in Germany, and in other countries.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I regret very much to push any amendment here against the disposition of the Senator in charge of the bill. I hoped to persuade him to consent to this amendment. It is admitted, of course, that it is a step in the right direction, and that we ought to act much more largely upon this question. It seems to me that when well-authenticated necessity is shown and the reasonableness of the price fully demonstrated, accompanied by a strong recommendation from the State Department, and the statement is made that there is danger of losing this property unless it is acquired now, this is the time to act with reference to it.

The communication from the State Department shows that the area which can be acquired for this purpose under the laws of China is exceedingly limited. Foreigners are not allowed to acquire property except in very limited area, and foreign Governments are seeking the choicest locations. I may say that on both sides of this particular location prominent foreign Governments have already established themselves. The United States Government is now in possession of this property under a lease, having selected it as a most appropriate place for this purpose. In view of the fact that the option expires in March next and that the area of possible purchase is exceedingly limited, and foreign Governments are taking up the most available sites and are crowding into this area, it seems to me it would be wise for the Senator to acquiesce in the insertion of this amendment now, so that it can be considered in conference. I ask the Senator whether he will not assent to having the amendment put in the bill with a view to its consideration in conference? And then, if the conclusion of the conferees should be that it is not advisable, I will rest content.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not accept it. In the first place, we are not able now to make an appropriation of $360,000 for a building abroad. In the next place, I want to get this bill through. I know it would be fought on the floor of the House, no matter what the conference committee agreed upon; and we do not want to make a fight on an item like this. We must finish this bill and all the appropriation bills if we are to get away and avoid an extra session. At this time, in the condition of the Treasury, I do not think I can afford to accept an amendment appropriating $360,000 for this purpose.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator can not see his way clear to assent to this amendment, I will not press it, because I do not wish to have it defeated.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. JONES conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE SEAMEN'S BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 136.

Mr. GALLINGER. Pending that motion, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson	Page	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Jones	Penrose	Smoot
Burton	La Follette	Pittman	Sterling
Catron	Lewis	Pomerene	Thomas
Chilton	Lodge	Ransdell	Thompson
Clapp	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Tillman
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Root	Vardaman
Gallinger	Newlands	Shafroth	Walsh
Gronna	Norris	Sheppard	White
Hardwick	O'Gorman	Shields
Hollis	Overman	Simmons
James	Owen	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. LANE responded to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming and Mr. NELSON entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

Mr. KERN entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 136. The question is on the motion. [Putting the question.] It is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 136. The question was put and declared carried by the Chair. Then the yeas and nays were demanded. The Chair has decided that not a sufficient number demanded the yeas and nays, and the report is therefore before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield to me to have four pension bills from the House considered.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Maine for that purpose.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20643) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and the widows of such soldiers and sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 8, before the word "Company," to strike out "Regular Establishment," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Margaret A. Warren, widow of George W. Warren, late of Company D, Nineteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of William Kral, late of Company I, Third Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 14, before the words "per month," to strike out "$17" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Wesley C. Beatty, late of Company K, Third Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 5, after the words "late of," to strike out "Companies" and insert "Company"; in the same line, after the word "Fifteenth," to insert "Regiment," and in line 6, after the word "and," to insert "Company," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 12, to strike out:

The name of Mahala J. H. Johnson, widow of Paul W. Johnson, late of Company H, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 21, before the words "United States," to insert "Regiment," and in line 24, before the words "per month," to strike out "$17" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of William S. Wilmoth, late of Battery E, First Regiment United States Artillery, and Companies F and K, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 1, before the word "mother," to insert "dependent," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Margaret McGreevy, dependent mother of William J. McGreevy, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 20, after the word "late," to strike out "of the," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Thomas B. Lumpkin, late Unassigned Twelfth Regiment, United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Thomas McCormick, late of Company E, Third Regiment United States Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 10, before the word "Thirtieth," to strike out "late of the," and, in the same line, after the word "Company," to insert "United States," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Monroe F. Kirby, late of Battery H, Third Regiment United States Artillery, and Thirtieth Company United States Coast Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Ellen Owens, widow of Barney Owens, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the two minor children of said Barney Owens until they reach the ages of 16 years, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 12, after the word "late," to strike out "of the" and insert "first lieutenant," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Ernest F. Slater, late first lieutenant, Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to strike out:

The name of James W. Gillespie, late of Company B, Thirty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 12, after the name "Gardner," to strike out "wife" and insert "widow," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Lydia L. Gardner, widow of James E. Gardner, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 15, to strike out:

The name of Edward B. Earl, late of Battery A, Pennsylvania Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of William R. Ford, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, after the word "Company," to strike out the letter "I" and insert the letter "C," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Archie M. Leighton, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 9, to strike out:

The name of Daisy M. Watson, widow of Frank L. Watson, late of Company H, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Frank L. Watson until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 11, to strike out:

The name of Virginia Fleming, widow of Horace F. Fleming, late of Company L, Forty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional for each minor child of the deceased soldier until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 6, after the word "Corps," to strike out "of the," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Frederick C. Hammetter, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 15, to strike out:

The name of Katharina Bamberg, widow of Nicholas Bamberg, late of Company G, Thirty-first Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Nicholas Bamberg until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 12, to strike out:

The name of Elizabeth J. Brennan, widow of Patrick J. Brennan, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Twenty-sixth Regiment, United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Patrick J. Brennan until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Joseph E. La Rocque, dependent father of Edmund R. La Rocque, late of Troop E, Fifteenth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Henry Wachter, late of United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Alice W. France, widow of John M. France, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Goldie M. Nichols, widow of Robert J. Nichols, late of Company L, Thirty-fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional for each of the three minor children of said Robert J. Nichols until they shall reach the age of 16 years, respectively.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Senate to consider House bill 21037, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 3, line 10, after the words "per month," to strike out "in lieu of that she is now receiving," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Catharine Mann, widow of Jonathan Mann, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 4, before the word "seaman," to strike out "who served as a" and insert "late," and in the same line, after the word "seaman," to strike out "in," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Catharine Casler, widow of Henry Casler, late seaman, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to strike out:

The name of Robert B. Martin, late of Company H, Forty-sixth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 18, to insert:

The name of Malinda J. Wall, former widow of John H. McMillin, late of Company B, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 16, to strike out:

The name of Jonathan J. Boyer, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 11, after the word "determine," to strike out: "Provided further, That in the event of the death of Catharine McDermott, the name of said Emma McDermott shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Catharine McDermott," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Catharine McDermott, widow of Patrick McDermott, late of Company H, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Emma McDermott, helpless and dependent child of said Patrick McDermott, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 12, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$40," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Albert C. Worthington, alias Amzi W. Cowles, late of Company G, Twenty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 20, to strike out:

The name of William M. Wilson, who served as a harness maker, Quartermaster's Department, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 10, to strike out:

The name of Rodney W. Anderson, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 1, after the name "Walsh," to strike out "who served as a" and insert "late," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Walter Walsh, late coal heaver, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 4, to insert:

The name of Louisa B. Tittle, widow of Christopher C. H. Tittle, late of Company I, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Henry Hodson, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 22, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$30," so as to make the clause read:

THE SEAMEN'S BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report on Senate bill 136 is before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, Senators will see by the comparative print of the conference report on the desk and also by the report itself, which has been printed and laid on the desks, the work of the conferees.

The provisions of sections 1, 2, 5, 7, 10, and 17 of the House amendment are incorporated without changes in the conference report:

Section 2 of the Senate bill and section 3 of the House amendment are the same; section 7 of the Senate bill and section 8 of the House amendment are the same; section 13 of the Senate bill and section 15 of the House amendment are the same; section 14 of the Senate bill and section 16 of the House amendment are the same; section 17 of the Senate bill and section 19 of the House amendment are the same, and all these sections remain unchanged in the conference report.

Section 4 of the House amendment provided that demand for one-half part of wages earned should not be made oftener than once in five days. This provision is incorporated in section 4 of the conference report as follows:

Provided, That such a demand shall not be made before the expiration of nor oftener than once in five days. Any failure on the part of the master to comply with this demand shall release the seaman from his contract, and he shall be entitled to full payment of wages earned.

Section 6 of the committee bill, as reported to the Senate, as incorporated in section 6 of the conference report, contains the following provision for a hospital compartment, to wit:

That in addition to the space allotment for lodging hereinbefore provided on all merchant vessels of the United States, which in the ordinary course of their trade make voyages of more than three days' duration between ports and which carry a crew of 12 or more seamen, there shall be constructed a compartment, suitably separated from other spaces, for hospital purposes, and such compartment shall have at least one bunk for every 12 seamen constituting her crew: Provided, That not more than six bunks shall be required in any case.

The conferees of both Houses recommend the provision as it is reported.

Section 6 of the conference report also contains the following provision from section 5 of the Senate bill, to wit:

Provided, That forecastles shall be fumigated at such intervals as may be provided by regulations to be issued by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Department of Commerce, and shall have at least two exits, one of which may be used in emergencies.

These provisions are intended to add to the comfort, care, and safety of seamen.

The only change made in section 9 of the House amendment, as incorporated in section 9 of the conference report, is that making the vessel as well as the master or owner of the vessel liable to damages for flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment prohibited by the section.

Section 11 of the conference report is the same as section 11 of the House amendment, except that the following proviso at the end of subdivision (e) is stricken out:

Provided, That treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict herewith.

Section 12 of the conference report is the same as section 12 of the House amendment, except that the words "employed on a vessel of the United States" are stricken out, making the exemptions therein provided for apply to seamen generally.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator to state just where those words "employed on a vessel of the United States" are stricken out?

Mr. FLETCHER. In section 12 of the conference report.

Mr. BURTON. On what page of the conference agreement?

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator refer to the comparative print?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Section 12, on page 14, of the comparative print:

That no wages, due or accruing, to any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment, etc.

Mr. BURTON. I see the words "employed on a vessel of the United States."

Mr. FLETCHER. Those words are omitted in the conference report.

Section 13 of the House amendment is the same as section 13 of the conference report, with the following modifications: As amended, the section applies to vessels of over 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes, and so forth. The language exempting the smaller inland lakes only, "where the line of travel is at no point more than 3½ miles from land" is stricken out, and the smaller inland lakes are exempt from its provisions along with rivers. The section is further modified to provide that seamen serving on decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or coast-guard—revenue-cutter—vessels for the time prescribed shall be entitled to the rating of able seamen; also that graduates of school ships approved by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea; also cutting the requirement of 24 months' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, to 18 months, to entitle a person to the rating of able seaman and qualify him to serve as such on the Great Lakes, smaller lakes, bays, and sounds.

Persons who have served 12 months on deck on the Great Lakes as well as at sea are included among those who may become entitled to the rating of able seamen if found competent under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship.

It is further provided that the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the section.

Said section 13 of the House amendment as amended and agreed to by the conferees and incorporated in section 13 of the conference report is as follows:

SEC. 13. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seaman. Every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified for service as such on the seas, who is 19 years of age or upward, and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or Coast Guard vessels; and every person shall be rated an able seaman, and qualified to serve as such on the Great Lakes and on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, who is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least 18 months' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes or on the smaller lakes, bays, or sounds, on a vessel or vessels to which this section applies, including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels or coast-guard vessels; and graduates of school ships approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea: Provided, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, and physical condition, such persons or graduates are found to be competent: Provided further, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce as to eyesight, hearing, physical condition, and knowledge of the duties of seamanship a person found competent may be rated as able seaman after having served on deck 12 months at sea or on the Great Lakes; but seamen examined and rated able seamen under this proviso shall not in any case compose more than one-fourth of the number of able seamen required by this section to be shipped or employed upon any vessel.

Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit and examination, under rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality and age of the applicant and the vessel or vessels on which he has had service and that he is entitled to such certificate under the provisions of this section, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued and shall keep on file the affidavits upon which said certificates are issued.

The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs, or is scheduled to depart: Provided further That any person that shall knowingly make a false affidavit for such purpose shall be deemed guilty of perjury and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court. Any violation of any provision if this section by the owner, master, or officer in charge of the vessel shall subject the owner of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $500: And provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and nothing herein shall be held or construed to prevent the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, from making rules and regulations authorized by law as to vessels excluded from the operation of this section.

Section 14 of the House amendment is agreed to by the conferees and incorporated in section 14 of the conference report, with certain amendments hereafter referred to.

The following proviso is inserted at the end of the first paragraph of section 14, and before the word "regulations," to wit:

Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same.

While section 4488 of the Revised Statutes, which is amended by section 14, seems to apply to foreign vessels as well as to vessels of the United States, the proviso was inserted by the conferee to make it clear that it shall so apply.

Under the title "Arrangements for clearing pontoon lifeboats of water," bags of sand as well as a weight of iron may be used in making tests.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was the proviso which the Senator read on page 19 found in either the House or the Senate bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it was not found in the House bill. I think it was originally in the Senate bill. Perhaps it was not in the Senate bill as it passed the Senate, but as it was reported by the committee to the Senate. I am not sure about that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Was it found anywhere in the Senate bill as adopted?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not being in either the House or the Senate bill, it seems to me the conferees must have exceeded their authority in inserting that new language.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall have to examine to ascertain whether or not it was in the Senate bill. I do not quite recall. It was considered necessary; but at the same time perhaps it was not necessary, because I believe under the law that would be so, anyway. We wanted, however, to make it clear. I think under the statute that would be true.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that a considerable number of provisions have been inserted in the conference report which were not in either the House or the Senate bill? For instance, the provision in regard to hospitals, which I commend and which was in the bill I reported at one time. That was inserted bodily, was it not, without being either in the House or the Senate bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true. It was in the bill as it was reported to the Senate, but possibly not in the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. Not as it passed either House?

Mr. FLETCHER. Or as it passed either House.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not also true that on page 17 the provision in regard to the service at sea or on the Great Lakes is changed from 24 to 18 months, while the minimum in either bill was 24 months?

Mr. FLETCHER. The minimum in the House bill was 24 months.

Mr. BURTON. And in the Senate bill also, was it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think in the Senate bill it was three years.

Mr. BURTON. In the Senate bill it was 3 years and in the House bill 24 months. The conferees have made this 18 months, have they not?

Mr. FLETCHER. They made it 18 months on the theory that on the Great Lakes the service is rather by seasons. It lasts from six to eight months, I believe. Instead of saying so many years, it was supposed that 18 months would about cover three seasons on the Great Lakes; and we made it 18 months so as to make it clear that the service—not necessarily continuous—should be 18 months, which would mean ordinarily about 3 years' service.

Mr. BURTON. Then, in this conference report, there is a reduction in the time required to qualify as able seamen from both bills. It is 3 years in the Senate bill, 24 months in the House bill, and 18 months in the conference report?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is correct.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that in the bill, on page 17, there has been added a class of persons who can be rated as able seamen? It is given in these words:

To which this section applies—

This is the vital part of it—including decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, or Coast Guard vessels; and graduates of school ships approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce may be rated able seamen after 12 months' service at sea.

Is not that an addition, and an addition not only of material but of a new class?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is correct. It was considered, after going into that matter quite thoroughly, that the decked fishing vessels, naval vessels, and Coast Guard vessels ought to be vessels of sufficient consequence that service on them would be the "service on the ordinary merchant passenger ship."

Mr. BURTON. Is it not also true that on page 17 there are inserted the words, "such persons or graduates are," which do not appear in either bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is true. That was done merely to clarify the language and to make it plain rather than to extend it.

Mr. BURTON. In regard to liability for any injury to seamen, on page 12 of this print, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the provision beginning at the bottom of page 11, which is as follows:

Any failure on the part of such master to comply herewith, which failure shall result in the escape of such officer, shall render the master or the vessel liable in damages.

You have it here, have you not, "master, or vessel, or the owner"?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct. We thought that would make the provision somewhat plainer and better and more effective.

Under the title "Equipment of boats and pontoon rafts," in subdivision (f), lifeboats on the Great Lakes or other inland waters are not required to be equipped with masts and sails and gear for same; and in second subdivisions (e and f), under same title, the lifeboats and life rafts on vessels navigating fresh waters are not required to be equipped with provisions and fresh water, as provided in the House amendment.

The House amendment provides that all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes and on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry and shall carry enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew; not more than 25 per cent of such equipment to be in life rafts or collapsible lifeboats. The conferees modified this provision, as it affects the Great Lakes, to read:

That all passenger steam vessels of the United States, the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes, or for service from September 15 to May 15, on the Great Lakes—

That is during the winter season when the great storms occur, and not so many passengers are carried. The vessels can better provide the accommodation during that time, and the risk is somewhat greater. The provision does not apply during the excursion season—on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry, and shall carry, enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew: Provided, That not more than 25 per cent of such equipment may be in pontoon life rafts or collapsible lifeboats.

The conferees regarded the provision in the House amendment harsh and impracticable to apply to passenger vessels on the Great Lakes navigating during the summer months.

Section 14 of the House amendment, under the title "Certificated lifeboat men—Manning of the boats," provides:

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified as follows: If the boat or raft carries less than 61 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 3.

As amended by the conferees, said provision reads as follows:

There shall be for each boat or raft a number of lifeboat men at least equal to that specified as follows: If the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 1; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 2; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 61 persons, the minimum number of certificated lifeboat men shall be 3, etc.

This amendment was made to meet conditions on the Great Lakes and the other inland waters. The lifeboats in use on the Great Lakes will accommodate from 16 to 25 persons and the life rafts from 12 to 15 persons. The conferees did not regard it reasonable to require a lifeboat carrying 25 persons or less to be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and 3 certificated lifeboat men, nor did the conferees regard it reasonable to require a life raft accommodating from 12 to 15 persons to be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and 3 certificated lifeboat men; hence, they divided these boats and rafts carrying less than 61 persons into 3 groups and undertook to provide for the manning of each according to its size and the number of persons carried. The section provides that at no moment of its voyage may any passenger steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, except over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, have on board a total number of persons, including passengers and crew, greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board.

The number and types of such lifeboats and life rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 15 to September 15, inclusive, any such steamer shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 50 per cent of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than two-fifths shall be in lifeboats and three-fifths may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce.

The effect of the amendment made by the conferees is, if the boat or raft carries 25 persons or less it shall be in charge of a licensed officer or able seaman and one certificated lifeboat man, provided that if the raft carries 15 persons or less a licensed officer or able seaman need not be placed in charge of such raft; if the boat or raft carries 26 persons and less than 41 persons, it shall be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and two certificated lifeboat men; if the boat or raft carries 41 persons and less than 61 persons, the same shall be manned by a licensed officer or able seaman and three certificated lifeboat men. The amendment of the conferees further provides that "one-half the number of rafts carried shall have a capacity of exceeding 15 persons."

Section 16 as agreed upon by the conferees reads:

SEC. 16. That in the judgment of Congress articles in treaties and conventions of the United States, in so far as they provide for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of the United States in foreign countries, and for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and the Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment, and any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act, ought to be terminated, and to this end the President be, and he is hereby, requested and directed, within 90 days after the passage of this act, to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, that so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign Governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions.

Section 17 provides:

SEC. 17. That upon the expiration after notice of the periods required, respectively, by said treaties and conventions and of one year in the case of the independent State of the Kongo, so much as hereinbefore described in each and every one of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and to be of no force and effect, and thereupon section 5280 and so much of section 4081 of the Revised Statutes as relates to the arrest or imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment, shall be, and is hereby, repealed.

Section 18 of the House amendment provides that the act shall take effect as to all vessels of the United States 6 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except as otherwise provided. Section 18 of the conference report provides that the act shall take effect as to all vessels of the United States 8 months after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, except as otherwise provided.

Section 20 of the conference report is taken from the proviso at the end of section 7 of the Senate bill.

These are the principal matters in the report. As I have said, the conferees determined upon the bill as it is now presented in this report as the best that could be accomplished after a thorough consideration of the bill as it went to the House and of the substitute which was inserted by the House in lieu of the Senate bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, at the time when this bill passed the Senate I had the misfortune to be absent, owing to illness. In the long period which has elapsed since that time, while the bill has been in conference, I have been occupied with other matters, and I have not examined it with the thoroughness which a measure of such great importance deserves. I can not discuss satisfactorily to myself, to say nothing of anybody else, all the details and domestic features of the bill, but there are certain provisions in the bill which gravely affect our relations with other countries, of which I wish to speak very briefly.

I should like very much to vote for a bill improving the conditions of our seamen in any proper way. It would be a matter of regret to me that I could not vote for this bill, but there are certain features which involve our relations with other nations which, I think, ought to be considered by the Senate before we agree to the conference report.

I believe the House bill had a provision, if I can lay my hand on it, in regard to the matter of treaties, which has disappeared from the bill. It amounted to this, that the provisions of the treaties should remain in force; that the bill should not be enforced where in conflict with treaties. It does not matter, because the conference has substituted for it section 16. That is, it has substituted for the House provision what I suppose to be the Senate provision, but omitting a clause that was in the House bill; but that does not matter. The section as it stands reads:

SEC. 16. That in the judgment of Congress articles in treaties and conventions of the United States, in so far as they provide for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of the United States in foreign countries, and for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and the Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment and any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act, ought to be terminated; and to this end the President be, and he is hereby, requested and directed, within 90 days after the passage of this act, to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, that so much as hereinbefore described of all such treaties and conventions between the United States and foreign Governments will terminate on the expiration of such periods after notices have been given as may be required in such treaties and conventions.

Section 17 provides:

That upon the expiration after notice of the periods required, respectively, by said treaties and conventions and of one year in the case of the independent State of the Kongo, so much as hereinbefore described in each and every one of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and to be of no force and effect.

Mr. President, I am in favor of putting an end to arrests for desertion. I am in favor of bringing to a close the old system which was endured for many years which gives power to the masters of vessels to secure the arrest through the municipal police at the port where they happen to be of any such seaman who has deserted or who is charged with desertion. We have put an end to that in our own merchant marine and I think it eminently proper that it should cease entirely. This bill, however, provides that the Secretary shall give the notice required by the treaties. I think there are some 30 treaties of amity and commerce. It provides that he shall give the notice required by the treaty for terminating its provisions. He must do it within 90 days; and after the notice has been given, if nothing has been said, all the articles relating to this subject shall be deemed to have expired. The President is called upon, in other words, to terminate by notice clauses in treaties of amity and commerce with some 30 nations.

That is a very serious matter. It is the proper way to bring about the result we desire, but it is a very serious matter at any time to undertake to terminate these treaties with friendly nations in that way. A large part of the world is at present engaged in a war of unequaled magnitude. These notices would go to nations all friendly to us, but some of them neutrals in the existing war, and some belligerents. It seems to me that to compel the President to take such action within 90 days is a very serious matter indeed at such a time as this.

We have, if I may venture to say so, a good many very serious questions now pending with other nations, questions which require the most careful management, some of which perhaps may prove perilous; and in the midst of this grave situation, with these questions involving our relations in a most serious way with many of the greatest nations of the world, the President is suddenly compelled by this law in 90 days to terminate the provisions in a whole series of treaties.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if we can terminate a treaty in 90 days upon notice?

Mr. LODGE. No; the clause provides that the treaty shall terminate in accordance with the terms of the treaty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. LODGE. But the President is compelled to give the notice within 90 days.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. No matter whether, for reasons that may seem good to himself, he should judge it unwise to give that notice and terminate the treaty at that moment or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. The treaty could not be terminated, I suppose, until the expiration of a year, or thereabouts? Is that the rule?

Mr. LODGE. The rule is, generally, I think, about a year's notice.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. LODGE. I am reading from page 41, section 16 and the first part of section 17. But the President, charged with all these grave duties, with many embarrassing questions—perhaps more than any administration has ever been charged with—desirous, as we all are and must be, to maintain the best relations with all the nations of the world at such a time as this——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts is probably as well informed upon the subject he is discussing as any man in public life in America, and I shall ask this question for information. Could the notice required under this bill to be given by the President possibly be taken as an unfriendly act, an act out of which could reasonably grow disagreeable relations with the nations concerned?

Mr. LODGE. Technically, of course, under the terms of the treaties, the methods of giving notice and limitation of time are all fixed, and either party to the treaty has the right to give that notice. There is no question of that; but that a notice of a termination of a treaty, without any prior attempt to settle the matter by negotiations, is often regarded as a most unfriendly act, is undoubted. We have had cases within our own knowledge where, although in exact accord with the terms of the treaty, the sudden notice of its termination without any word of preparation or negotiation has been considered a most unfriendly act.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will ask the Senator, further, if it is an unreasonable or unusual notice to give? Certainly our Government would be acting within its rights in giving the notice.

Mr. LODGE. There is no question of the right. I am not questioning the right.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But I can not see how it could in any way be construed as an expression of unfriendliness or one out of which might grow any serious or disagreeable consequence.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, to terminate a treaty by notice, though undoubtedly that is the naked right, is a somewhat drastic step, if no attempt is made before to settle the question by friendly negotiation. It might easily lead to the destruction of the whole treaty, as it did in the case of Russia.

The point I am trying to make is that it seems to me extremely unwise to limit the power of the President, at a time like this, within such narrow bounds. He has many questions to deal with. All these countries have many questions to deal with. They are overwhelmed with matters of the gravest import, and suddenly a nation which is on friendly terms with them projects upon them the legal notice which it has the right to give under the treaty without giving them any chance to say whether or not they will modify it. There is no opportunity for negotiations in the present state of diplomatic business and the present state of communications otherwise than by wire, and therefore I think it is a very serious objection to compel the President to act with such abruptness.

I turn from that to another question, which is not a matter of treaty or notice, but which I think is charged with danger, especially in the conditions in which the world now finds itself. On page 12, section 10 (a)—I am aware that this was in all three bills—I find this provision:

That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order, or note, or other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages. Any person violating any of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100, and may also be imprisoned for a period of not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

I am not going to discuss the merits of the thing. I dare say it has merit, viewed from the standpoint of the evil that it is intended to prevent, but this is not confined to American citizens. It goes on, on page 14:

That this section—

That is, section 10, containing this provision that I have read and the penalty for its violation—

That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels while in waters of the United States as to vessels of the United States, and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

That is, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by fine, and he may also be imprisoned.

Under that we undertake to arrest the masters of foreign vessels, as I read it—the citizens or subjects of other powers. We undertake to arrest them and punish them in our courts for acts which are entirely lawful in their own country. I can not conceive that any country in the world, if I read those sections correctly, would patiently submit to having its citizens and subjects who are the masters or officers of vessels arrested in a foreign port and tried and fined and perhaps put in prison for an act which is entirely lawful in their own country and under their own flag. It seems to me that in practice that would be very much resented.

We have an undoubted right, if we see fit to do it—this is a question of expediency—to refuse clearance to a foreign vessel from our ports if we are willing to interrupt our commerce, to check the flow of exports by refusing clearance to vessels which do not conform to our regulations and whose masters and owners do not conform to our regulations. That we have an undoubted right to do. That is a question of expediency for us to determine. We can say, "If you do not conform to certain laws, you shall not trade in our ports." That is what it amounts to, but I can not believe that we have the right under any international law to arrest a man on his own ship, under his own flag, for the commission of an act which is lawful in his own country. That is the contract which he has made in his own country.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for a question there?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I find this clause at the top of page 14:

That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels while in waters of the United States as to vessels of the United States, and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

Does that mean that if the master or owner has made an allotment in a foreign country, say in Germany or England, he may be arrested in the ports of the United States, or does it mean that he may make an allotment in the ports of the United States without incurring a penalty? I think that question very vital.

Mr. LODGE. It seemed to me on reading it that it is here made unlawful to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages or to make any order. I assume that means an advance here.

Mr. BURTON. And not abroad?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose so.

Mr. BURTON. So that an allotment might be made in Germany, where it is very common, without incurring this penalty.

Mr. LODGE. I am not clear on that, but that is my personal impression. I have not had time to give it careful consideration.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I do not think that is intended to apply except in case the allotment is made in a port of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. That is my impression.

Mr. BURTON. I am frank to say that the interpretation of the words "agent of any foreign vessels who has violated its provisions" is somewhat doubtful.

Mr. LODGE. Then it goes on to say:

Other evidence of indebtedness therefore to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages.

It seems that must apply to both ends of the line. That is the description of a certain offense; but suppose a master of a foreign vessel had agreed to make a certain advance and to pay a certain amount of advance on the arrival in the port of destination, which is the United States.

Mr. BURTON. I may say in this connection, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, that that is not the usual way in which it is done.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that. I am only putting it as an illustration.

Mr. BURTON. It is meant to be paid on the other side to the family or creditor of a seaman who departs for this side.

Mr. LODGE. But it seems to me that it opens the door to a great deal of misunderstanding. If we are to assume the right to arrest masters of vessels or officers of vessels for the performance of that which may well be entirely lawful under their own laws, it struck me in such an examination as I could give to the bill as a very doubtful if not dangerous provision.

There is also one other provision to which I desire to call attention—on page 19, the proviso to which the Senator from Ohio has already called attention, I think, as not having been in either the House or the Senate bill:

Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same.

There is no doubt whatever that we have a right to compel all those things and that our method of compulsion is to refuse clearance, but, again, it seems to me unfortunate to do that at this precise moment. The carrying tonnage of the world has been reduced. Freight rates are very high. The ordinary tramp steamship, on which we must very largely depend for the carriage of our exports, would probably shun our ports under that provision. The great lines which ply regularly between this country and Europe would probably meet it, and I have no doubt they ought to meet it, but it will have a tendency to still further reduce, I think, the carrying capacity now open to us for our exports. Those are the points to which I desired to call attention.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me an interrogatory?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the Senator's position is that he does not think this country has a legal right to enforce the provisions in its own harbors, in its own jurisdiction, or that, even though it has a legal right, it is not wise to do it?

Mr. LODGE. I just stated that we had the undoubted right to refuse clearance of the vessels that did not comply with any conditions we chose to impose. My objection was that it was very inexpedient to do it at this moment, for reasons which I tried to explain.

Mr. LEWIS. I thought I understood the Senator to assert that we had the right to deny clearance papers. I thought I gathered from him that he thought we did not have the right to enforce the penalties in our harbors.

Mr. LODGE. That relates to another subject.

Mr. LEWIS. It relates to the violation of another section?

Mr. LODGE. It relates to another subject. I was speaking last of procuring ships. The other one was the arresting of the master of a ship for the performance of an act legal in his own country but in violation of this law. I do not mean to say that we may not have the right to do it and that we may not do it, but I do say that I believe other nations may become very impatient of it, as I think we should.

Mr. LEWIS. I only want to ascertain the Senator's attitude. It is not that we have not the right in our ports to enforce it; but, having the right, the Senator does not regard it wise or expedient to avail ourselves of it?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is wise or expedient. I think there is some reasonable doubt. It would depend a great deal, of course, upon exactly what happened; but I think there is a very reasonable doubt whether under this section, which was pretty broadly drawn, we should not arrest men for a less violation of the laws when we had no right to do it.

Those are the points, Mr. President, to which I wish to call attention and which makes me view the placing of this law upon the statute books with some apprehension. Before I sit down I should like to read a report from the maritime committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce. The committee took this measure up and gave it great care and attention. The chamber of commerce is a very large one. I think it has the largest membership of any in the United States. They say:

We have reviewed this bill, having in mind—

This was in 1914. Of course that does not apply to this precise bill, because this was a year ago. The bill has been some time upon its way—

We have reviewed this bill, having in mind the maritime conditions as we find them, both as to seamen and as to vessels. We have assiduously made inquiries among shipping circles to find the reasons for and against this bill and have heard arguments on both sides, from representatives of the seamen as well as from representatives of the shipowners.

It appears to us that this bill does not properly provide for safety at sea or encourage our young men to go to sea, and by adding considerable extra cost to the operation of all shipping will hinder the development of our merchant marine, thereby seriously affecting the interests of the American shipper and tending to divert trade to foreign countries.

We are further of the opinion that the bill as proposed will in many ways conflict with treaties now in force with friendly Governments and might result in ill-feeling and possibly retaliation which can not but have a serious effect on our foreign trade and would effectually prevent uniform rules for safety at sea which are desirable amongst all nations.

I frankly say that the provisions of the bill as to safety at sea I have not examined with sufficient care to venture upon giving an opinion about them or as to their encouragement of young men to go to sea, still less as to added cost. I have no doubt it will, but that is not to be considered, of course, if we are to attain the higher object. But I do think the statement of the committee on maritime affairs of the Boston Chamber of Commerce in regard to the ill effects of the bill abroad are sound, and if they were sound in January, 1914, I think they are much sounder now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, can the Senator state what bill the committee on maritime affairs had reference to—whether it was the Senate bill or the House bill?

Mr. LODGE. It was the Senate bill, an act entitled "To promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States." I suppose that is the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is the number given?

Mr. LODGE. One hundred and thirty-six.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the Senate bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Massachusetts says he has not had time to examine the regulations with reference to life-saving equipment, and so forth. He understands, of course, that these regulations are the London conference regulations to which most of the nations informally assented. They ought not to be very injurious if they were assented to in the London conference. The Governments did not generally ratify the London conference, but that was due almost entirely to the fact that they were at war with one another at a time when the ratifications were to be exchanged.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is now referring to the regulations for safety of life at sea?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I am referring to the recent convention at London. This bill practicaliy indorses the London conference regulation regarding life-saving equipment.

Mr. LODGE. I made no comparison. The reason why I expressed some slight surprise was because in this case I can not understand why there is such opposition to the convention.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The regulations were adopted in toto by the conferees.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means the provisions about hull construction?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Unfortunately the question of hull construction is not dealt with. I wish it had been. I will say without any hesitatioh at all that the recommendation upon the question of hull construction in the London conference was a genuine achievement upon the part of the American representatives in that convention.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator and I agree upon that very strongly. As I have said, I have not examined those portions of the bill, and I ask for information whether those were included.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In my opinion, the recommendations with reference to hull construction, if given effect by them, were to be the rule hereafter in the construction of vessels, would go further to protect life and make it safer to travel at sea than any of the regulations contained in this bill. But the question of hull construction was not adopted in this bill. It was not. We were laying down a plan of that character, but did not go so far as the London convention did. However, with reference to equipment, we adopted the London convention regulations.

Mr. LODGE. Is there anything in here about wireless telegraphy?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, we have our wireless law.

Mr. LODGE. I mean in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have our wireless law, and it works very well.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing in this bill about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; that would be a mere repetition. I think, in fact, the London conference weakens in a measure the American regulation.

Mr. LODGE. It was not as good as the American law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am inclined to think that the American law with reference to the use of wireless at sea goes almost further than any other country and quite creditably to the United States. It is not here because it would be a mere repetition.

Mr. LODGE. No; it is not necessary, of course; but what I said was that the conference regulations about wireless telegraphy, though inferior to ours, were, as I remember, better than those of many other countries. It raised the general standard.

Now, if the Senator will allow me—of course he is very familiar with the subject and I am not—does this include anything about freight routes and ocean lanes of navigation?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; there are no lanes prescribed in this bill.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing about ice patrol.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No ice patrol.

Mr. LODGE. It comes down to the mere declaration which relates to equipment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Exactly. I think there are a great many things in the London convention which would have been very valuable if they could have become the law of nations, but unfortunately they encountered the European war situation which made it impossible to pass upon the question properly.

Mr. LODGE. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he said that practically all the provisions of the London conference were in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I had reference to equipment merely.

Mr. LODGE. That is what surprised me.

Mr. LEWIS. May I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts a matter on which either I am misinformed or he himself? May I be permitted with his consent? It may be recalled by him that I had the honor to represent this body in the conference at London.

Mr. LODGE. I recollect it very well.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to call to your attention that while Portugal ratified the conference in England there came to us in some form, a separate form, that the Chamber of Commerce in Boston, after looking over what was done by the London conference respecting equipment, and the chamber at New York, and one of Detroit, the city of my distinguished friend, modified previous views of opposition which had previously been expressed in the original bill and accepted the theory of equipment, not because they thought it best but because of the suggestion of uniformity for all nations; and also the wireless, which the Senator from Massachusetts correctly alludes to, as the Senator from Massachusetts says correctly, really less than we had originally, was also admittedly weaker, but in order to have uniformity, because of Belgium's peculiar form of objection. I do not wish to be understood as saying the Chamber of Commerce of Boston, but your great shipping associations sometime afterwards withdrew their objections to the House bill, not on the ground that they did not regard the objections well taken but gave concurrence to equipment on the grounds that it had been accepted as most uniform by these countries and most agreeable to them. Does the Senator recall that?

Mr. LODGE. I do not recollect the action of the Chamber of Commerce of Boston or the course the mercantile association took on that point. I have not discussed the question of equipment at all.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. LODGE. I had nothing to say about it. The Senator from Michigan referred to it.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, I wholly misapprehended the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I desire to say that it seems to me Senators are to an extent misunderstanding each other, and that is made clear by what the Senator from Massachusetts has said just now.

The House bill very largely followed the provisions of the London conference as regards life-saving appliances at sea, the number of lifeboats, and the class of persons to man them; but it did not deal at all with the question with which the Senator from Massachusetts is concerned and upon which he has commented—the payment of wages, allotments, able seamen, or anything of the kind.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; I know that.

Mr. BURTON. No doubt the Boston Maritime Association, or whatever it may be called, approved the action of the House, which was widely different from that of the Senate in adopting the provision of the London conference in that line—that is, in relation to lifeboats, and so forth.

Mr. LODGE. The London conference, which I think did a very great and valuable work, covered roughly hull construction, ocean lanes, the ice patrol, wireless telegraphy, and the life-saving equipment. Roughly, the work may be divided in that way. I do not intend to say how much of it has been embodied here, but from the Senator from Michigan I learn that all that has been embodied are the provisions relating to life-saving apparatus. Of course, I need not say to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who had a large part in the London conference, that the work of the conference went far beyond the single question of equipment.

Mr. LEWIS. I thought there was confusion growing out of a misunderstanding of the terms.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, there are some things in this bill that I like and some things that I do not like. I should be glad to have the old practice of enforcing the contracts of seamen by arrest and return to their vessels done away with. I think that is an anachronism, and I think our own experience with regard to sailors upon our own ships in our own ports has shown that it is not either necessary or useful.

I regretted very much that the ratification of the treaty, or in the Senate's advice to the ratification of the convention produced by the London conference, the assent was of a partial and almost destructive nature. Accepting compromises, which always have to be made in a conference of that kind in order to reconcile conflicting interests and views, we passed a resolution, which accepted the compromises made by others, and declared that we would not abide by any concessions made by ourselves unless we saw fit to do so. As I was very friendly to that convention, and thought it was a most admirable piece of work, I am glad to see its provisions regarding life-saving apparatus and the manning of such apparatus to a great extent reproduced in this bill.

The bill, I think, goes further, however, in the attempt to control foreign vessels than it is either expedient or lawful for us to go. I should like to call attention to some provisions which seem to me to be open to the second objection—that is, provisions which I think we have not any right to enact. In section 4 there is found this provision:

> SEC. 4530. Every seaman on a vessel of the United States shall be entitled to receive on demand from the master of the vessel to which he belongs one-half part of the wages which he shall have then earned at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the voyage is ended and all stipulations in the contract to the contrary shall be void: Provided, Such a demand shall not be made before the expiration of, nor oftener than once in five days. Any failure on the part of the master to comply with this demand shall release the seaman from his contract and he shall be entitled to full payment of wages earned.

When the voyage is ended the seaman is entitled to the remainder of his wages. The section ends with this provision:

> And provided further, That this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States, and the courts of the United States shall be open to such seamen for its enforcement.

That provision plainly applies to contracts which have been made and which must have been made in the case of a foreign vessel in the home of the vessel. I may be mistaken, but I can see no other reasonable construction. A French, German, or Italian ship coming into the port of Philadelphia immediately becomes subject to this provision; its crew are navigating the ship under contracts made in France or in Germany or in Italy. Those contracts may have provided for any one of many different kinds and periods of payments. It may be entirely in violation of the contracts that the seaman, one party to the contract, shall be entitled to demand and be paid one-half his wages up to the time when he reaches the port of Philadelphia. This provision, if I understand it correctly, declares that the seaman shall be entitled to have that payment notwithstanding the contrary contract. It declares that a contract to the contrary shall be deemed to be void, and it declares that the seamen shall have the assistance of the courts of the United States to enforce—what? Not the contract, but the obligation of law, the obligation arising upon the statute which voids the contract and substitutes a different obligation.

Is it competent for us to do that? Of course every lawyer will concede that we have not power by our statutes to control or affect a contract made in a foreign country between two persons in that country; and as we can not control or affect that contract, we can not add to or detract from the obligation created by the contract as between the contracting parties. When we say that our courts will enforce a claim by one of the contracting parties against the other in violation of the contract, we say that our courts will by force of their process assist one party to violate the contract as against the other.

Sir, that is a pretty harsh proposal. We have with most of the civilized maritime countries of the world treaties providing for freedom of commerce, treaties under which their ships are declared entitled to enter our ports to bring in merchandise and to take out merchandise, to be subject to tolls and port charges, directly limited and regulated; and, as respects all those ships, what does the proposal amount to but that we impose a new and different condition upon the exercise of the right secured by these treaties? We say, "True, we have agreed with you that you shall have freedom of commerce; that your ships may enter our ports with their merchandise upon terms that are stated; but we will now no longer permit your ships to enter our ports; we will no longer permit to you freedom of commerce, except upon certain new conditions, which we impose of our own free will; that is to say, we will no longer permit your ships to engage in commerce with us except upon condition that you at home, in your own country, will make contracts with your sailors not in accordance with your public policy, but in accordance with ours."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to repeat the same question which I asked the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. What does the provision in subsection (e), at the top of page 14, in regard to allotments, mean?

Mr. ROOT. I am now speaking about section 4, on page 6.

Mr. BURTON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he was referring to the other section.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I can see no escape from the construction of the perfectly plain meaning of this provision, and I say that that is a wholly unpermissible and unjustifiable attempt to control the legislation and the freedom of contract in a foreign country by refusing the rights and privileges of commerce with us unless they yield to our view as to how they ought to conduct their affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether, in the absence of the treaty to which he refers, our courts could acquire any jurisdiction over the two foreigners who are parties to the contract to which he refers? Could our courts acquire any jurisdiction over a contract made in a foreign country between two foreigners, not citizens of the United States, except for the treaty to which the Senator refers?

Mr. ROOT. Oh, Mr. President, we can give our courts jurisdiction over causes arising in foreign countries, provided there is jurisdiction of person, and that is assumed. There is jurisdiction of the person here; the ship will be here and the sailors will be here, and the question whether our courts can exercise jurisdiction in a controversy as between them is merely a matter of the scope of jurisdiction that our statutes have given them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And the treaty, in the estimation of the Senator, would not give us any additional jurisdiction or rights?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly not. The treaty is not the source of jurisdiction in that case; the treaty is merely an additional limitation upon our right to impose conditions; and even if there were no treaty, the universal custom of the civilized world would lead to practically the same result. Unless we are going back to the old and barbarous days in which the ship of a friendly nation could not enter the port of another nation without being liable to seizure and confiscation, the principle of freedom of intercourse among civilized people denounces any attempt like this to prevent—for that is what it amounts to—the ships of a friendly country from entering our ports unless they will submit to our laws controlling their contracts in their own home.

There is another provision, Mr. President, which runs along in the same direction. On page 14 there is a provision at the close of section 11—and this is what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] asked about a few moments ago—which reads:

(c) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels while in waters of the United States as to vessels of the United States, and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel of the United States, or of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States, shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance, and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

(d) That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce the Commissioner of Navigation shall make regulations to carry out this section.

Section 10, which is referred to in these provisions which I have just read, contained at the outset this provision:

That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order or note or other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages.

I do not think it is so clear as it was, regarding section 4, that this provision applies to payments made outside the United States. It may be that by construction that denunciation of illegality may be confined to the payment of advance wages while in the territory of the United States, but the language is very sweeping. It is not merely that the section shall apply to vessels while in the waters of the United States, but it is that no clearance shall be granted to any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with. In the section there is a series of affirmative provisions which might well, if not complied with, furnish the ground for refusing the clearance in accordance with this positive clause which I have read; and of course, if that be true, the observations that I have made regarding the attempt to impose a condition upon the exercise of the right of free commerce upon a vessel because of something done or not done outside of our jurisdiction, and which we have no legal right to control, would be applicable.

There are still further provisions. Section 13 provides:

That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seaman.

Mr. President, that is pretty strong language. I see no limitation to it. The natural construction would be that it means what it says—"that no vessel * * * shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board" such and such men. I dwell upon this because—and I hope I am not transgressing the rule regarding references to another place—the protagonist of this bill in the lower House has declared that that is his construction of this section, and that is what it was intended to mean; it was intended to include foreign vessels as well as vessels of the United States, and the language is made thus sweeping and comprehensive with that purpose.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ROOT. I yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. There is a provision in section 13, which the Senator has just read, which excepts from its provisions such vessels as are "provided in section 1 of this act." I was reading that over the other day. I do not know where "section 1 of this act" is. The bill, on the first page, begins:

That section 4516 of the Revised Statutes—

And then it goes on to section 2. I have been wondering what the exception covered by section 1 may mean. I did not know whether the Senator from New York perhaps had looked up that matter to see what it covered, or whether perhaps the Senator from Michigan might understand it.

Mr. ROOT. Section 1 of the bill provides that that section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels or yachts; and I suppose this language was intended to carry into this other section that same exception.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then the Senator will notice that prior to that the section is made to apply to all vessels of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes, while in section 2 of the bill it is apparently made to apply to all vessels except those navigating rivers, harbors, bays, or sounds exclusively. Now, it so happens that in the community which I represent the proviso excepting rivers, harbors, bays, or sounds pretty thoroughly eliminates the waters contingent to Rhode Island from the provisions of this measure; but when we come back to section 13, instead of excluding rivers, harbors, bays, and sounds, simply rivers are excluded. I have been trying to establish in my own mind whether that proviso in section 2 eliminates Narragansett Bay from all the provisions of this bill or only from a portion of them, because it would make a very great difference as to the opinion I might have of the bill.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I shall not try to solve that, because I am unwilling to treat Rhode Island as a foreign country, and I am now trying to get the judgment of the Senators who are here on the proposition that this act is an unjustifiable and unlawful restraint upon the freedom of conduct of other countries in matters over which we have not any jurisdiction. It attempts to force them to conduct their affairs in accordance with our views rather than in accordance with theirs; in accordance with our policy rather than in accordance with theirs, by means of refusing to them the privileges that are included in freedom of commerce. According to our treaties and according to the customs of the civilized world I do not think we ought to attempt it. I do not think it is consistent with the development of commerce among nations, with the friendly and harmonious relations necessary to the promotion and development of commerce. These foreign countries have a right to fix for themselves the numbers of the crews they shall have on their ships. If we say to the French Republic, "We will not let your ships come into our ports unless you regulate your crews according to our laws instead of according to your laws," we are denying them freedom of commerce. The result would naturally be that they would turn around and refuse to allow our ships to go to their ports unless we do the things that they choose to have done instead of the things that we choose to do. We would have just as much right to say, "Your ships can not come into our ports unless they are painted blue. They shall not come into our ports unless they are of such a size. They shall not come into our ports unless they are of such an age."

You can not conduct commercial relations on any such basis as that. If we are going to let English ships, French ships, German ships come into our ports and expect them to let our ships go into their ports, we must take their ships as they are, and have them take our ships as they are. That is quite a different thing from merely regulating their conduct while they are here. Of course we are entitled to regulate their conduct while they are here, but we are not entitled to say what they shall be before they come here, or what they shall do before they come here, or what contracts they shall make before they come here, or what crews they shall be required to put upon them to navigate them in order that they may come here.

There is another provision which runs along in the same general line, section 14. I want to call especial attention to this also. I thought I had the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] interested for a few minutes——

Mr. STONE. I am very much interested.

Mr. ROOT. And I should like to have him listen to this. In this bill we say, in section 14:

That section 4488 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding thereto the following: "The powers bestowed by this section upon the board of supervising inspectors in respect of lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, and other life-saving appliances and equipment, and the further requirements herein as to davits, embarkation of passengers in lifeboats and rafts, and the manning of lifeboats and rafts, and the musters and drills of the crews, on steamers navigating the ocean, or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States, on and after July 1, 1915, shall be subject to the provisions, limitations, and minimum requirements of the regulations herein set forth, and all such vessels shall thereafter be required to comply in all respects therewith: Provided, That foreign vessels leaving ports of the United States shall comply with the rules herein prescribed as to life-saving appliances, their equipment, and the manning of same."

Of course, the way to enforce that would be by refusing clearance. Under this language no collector would be entitled to give clearance to a foreign vessel unless she complied with the rules, to which I shall presently call attention, upon the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to ask him right there whether he thinks the Government of the United States has power to enforce that provision?

Mr. ROOT. I will answer the Senator; but will the Senator let me do it in my own way, as I intend to do in a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. Before I answer it let me call attention to the circumstance that this does not apply merely to passenger steamers. I should be heartily in favor of saying that no ship under any flag should take American passengers from our ports without making provision that we regard as adequate for their safety. But we do not limit it to that. This applies to every tramp steamer, it applies to every schooner, every vessel that comes into an American port. A vessel built and owned in Italy, officered and manned in Italy, carrying a cargo of Italian produce, landing it in New York, and proposing to sail out in ballast, is to be prevented from going out, prevented from going out of that port, imprisoned, interned, to use the modern phrase, unless she has complied with certain provisions which are enumerated here, and those provisions are that such and such things shall be done, there shall be such and such boats and such and such rafts, and the boats are to be laid in accordance with detailed provisions, and they are to be manned in accordance with detailed provisions. But the provisions are accompanied by a series of grants of power to our Board of Supervising Inspectors and our Secretary of Commerce. For example, there must have been such and such drill for the use of the boats, and the boats must be capable of being lowered within the limit fixed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce; and when the length of the vessel exceeds 1,030 feet the supervising inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, shall determine the minimum number of sets of davits and of open boats of the first class for that vessel.

Now, a ship comes here from Naples, owned in Italy, officered and manned in Italy, unloads in the port of New York her cargo of Italian passengers, and she can not leave, she can not get a clearance unless she has the number of boat davits that our Secretary of Commerce concludes she ought to have. What business is it of ours to dictate to the Government of Italy how many davits she shall require her vessels to have? If she carries American passengers, even then our authority would be limited to saying you shall not carry them unless you have the 24 davits; but if the Government of Italy thinks that 12 or 16 of 18 would be sufficient, what business is it of ours to say that that vessel shall not be entitled to enter and leave a port of the United States?

Mr. STONE. Would the Senator refuse clearance to such a vessel if it did not come up to the standard prescribed by our regulations, if it were to carry American passengers, or would the Senator, by some other means, prevent the ship from receiving such passengers?

Mr. ROOT. Either, Mr. President. It would be quite simple to draft a statute which would prevent a vessel from receiving or taking out or clearing with American passengers unless she complied with certain regulations; but to say she shall not go or say she shall not bring and unlade goods or she shall not take out and carry away goods unless she is adapted to our policy rather than to the policy of the nation that owns her seems to me to be wholly useless.

There is another provision under this same head:

> A licensed officer or able seaman shall be placed in charge of each boat or pontoon raft; he shall have a list of its lifeboat men and other members of its crew, which shall be sufficient for her safe management, and shall see that the men placed under his orders are acquainted with their several duties and stations.

We define in this bill an able seaman. A vessel comes from Naples, the ship that I am using as an illustration. She comes in with boats in accordance with the Italian law and she has highly skilled boatmen on board to take care of them. They may not comply with our definition of an able seaman. They may be vastly more efficient. They may answer to the demands of the conscience of the Government of Italy that are far better than our definition of an able seaman, but that ship can not go out when her provisions in this respect are in accordance with the laws of her own country, instead of being in accordance with what we see fit to impose.

Mr. President, that concludes the clauses of this bill that I had in mind to call attention to, and I will relieve the attention of the Senate by saying that these provisions illustrate what I believe to be a wholly erroneous method of attempting to carry on trade with the world. You can not do that with a club. You can not do it with arrogant indifference to the interests and even the prejudices of other nations. There was a time when we, an agricultural country with all of our life confined within our own borders, could get down and ignore the fact that other people in the world had their ideas and were entitled to entertain them and to act according to them. But a country whose production and industries have been so organized that its life and prosperity are dependent upon the continuance of a commerce of thousands of millions of dollars, almost, a year can not live upon any such method of legislation.

For that reason, I am against this bill.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] desire to proceed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I will wait.

Mr. BURTON. I am perfectly willing to yield, because the Senator will favor the proposed law, I understand. Perhaps it would be more evenly divided if he went ahead.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, on one or two other occasions I have opposed many provisions of this bill. In October, 1913, almost alone I opposed certain requirements which appear in this conference report. Possibly a majority of the Senate are in favor of this kind of a measure, but I am unwilling to allow it to become a law without uttering a word of protest and without pointing out the very serious dangers which lurk in this conference report. Four-fifths of this report I should approve. I certainly indorse its humanitarian features, which if time offers I intend to enumerate.

But I wish to call attention, in the first instance, to the influence such a law would have upon both foreign and domestic shipping through regulations which must hamper their usefulness, which must impede commerce and which must involve us in serious friction with foreign nations. You can not interfere with the orderly commercial relations existing between us and foreign countries without inviting a measure of disaster.

First, I desire to take up certain requirements in this bill which are new to our own country, and, so far as I know, to any country in the world.

I refer, in the first place, to the provision in regard to wages. On page 6 of the conference agreement I call attention to section 4. I repeat, I know of no such provision in the statutes of any country in the world. It is my desire to explain briefly how this will work out:

> SEC. 4. That section 4530 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:
>
> "SEC. 4530. Every seaman on a vessel of the United States shall be entitled to receive, on demand, from the master of the vessel to which he belongs one-half part of the wages which he shall have then earned at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the voyage is ended, and all stipulations in the contract to the contrary shall be void: Provided, Such a demand shall not be made before the expiration of nor oftener than once in five days. Any failure on the part of the master to comply with this demand shall release the seaman from his contract and he shall be entitled to full payment of wages earned. And when the voyage is ended every such seaman shall be entitled to the remainder of the wages which shall then be due him, as provided in section 4529 of the Revised Statutes: Provided further, That notwithstanding any release signed by any seaman under section 4552 of the Revised Statutes, any court having jurisdiction may, upon good cause shown, set aside such release and take such action as justice shall require."

Thus far this differs in one part only from existing law; that is, so far as it pertains to domestic shipping. That one particular is that the present law authorizes the seaman to make a contract by which he shall demand half of his wages. Those contracts are usually made in the shipping articles. But there is an addition at the end which is almost startling, as it affects our relations with other nations:

> And provided further, That this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States, and the courts of the United States shall be open to such seamen for its enforcement.

The usual custom in Europe is to make an apportionment of the wages which a seaman will earn on his voyage, to be paid to his relatives or to his creditors. The agreement is signed, and when the boat has passed the last European port on the way to America a cablegram is sent to the home office of the line—if the boat sails from Hamburg, the message is sent from Plymouth or Cherbourg—to the effect that the seaman still remains with the vessel. Then the apportionment is carried into effect by the payment of the amount specified. That apportionment may be the whole amount of his wages as far as New York. That is the almost invariable custom. It has been said that it would be impossible to make contracts with sailors without such an apportionment, but under this law, notwithstanding the payment in advance of a part or the whole of the wages earned, before leaving New York or a port in the United States the seaman may demand one-half those wages again. The avowed object of this bill, declared by its advocates, is to give to the seaman an opportunity to obtain money so that he may desert.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Under this provision, is there a possibility of the recovery in our port of wages already paid under the contract?

Mr. BURTON. The main object of the statute is that the wages earned shall be paid, whether part or all have been already paid. I do not think anyone will deny that. In a bill on this subject drawn two or three years ago he could recover only wages which had accrued.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But suppose the wages earned had already been paid.

Mr. BURTON. That makes no difference. Such a contract is made illegal. The sailor may, nevertheless, receive the amount, as the Senator from Wyoming can clearly see. The provision would be futile for the purpose intended, namely, to give to the sailor some money on this side, if it could be nullified by the allotment of all his wages in advance before the vessel departs from its home port.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It seems rather a novel proposition that a man could go into court and sue to recover wages that had already been paid. I can not conceive of any court rendering a judgment under such circumstances.

Mr. BURTON. The sole object of this section is to provide for that very case.

Now, let me call attention to the treaty we have, say, with the German Empire, found on page 554 of the Treaties and Conventions, volume 1:

Consuls generals, consuls, vice consuls, or consular agents shall have exclusive charge of the internal order of the merchant vessels of their nation, and shall have the exclusive power to take cognizance of and to determine differences of every kind which may arise, either at sea or in port, between the captains, officers and crews, and especially in reference to wages and the execution of mutual contracts. Neither any court or authority shall, on any pretext, interfere in these differences, except in cases where the differences on board ship are of a nature to disturb the peace and public order in port or on shore or when persons other than the officers and crew of the vessel are parties to the disturbance.

Except as aforesaid the local authorities shall confine themselves to the rendering of efficient aid to the consuls.

Such a provision is to be found in practically all our commercial treaties with foreign countries.

One with Austria-Hungary, concluded July 11, 1870; one with Belgium, concluded March 9, 1880; one with Bolivia, with Colombia, even with the Independent State of the Kongo; one with Denmark, concluded July 11, 1861; one with France, June 24, 1822; another one with France, concluded February 23, 1853; the one with the German Empire was concluded December 11, 1871; I have already read the treaty concluded June 3, 1882, with Great Britain; with Greece, November 19, 1902; with Italy, May 8, 1878; with the Netherlands, May 23, 1878; with Roumania, June 17, 1881; with Spain, July 3, 1902; with Sweden and Norway, July 4, 1827; a new treaty with Sweden June 1, 1910; and with Japan February 21, 1911. Every one of these treaties provides that the sole control in wage disputes between the master or owner of a vessel and the seaman shall be vested in the consul or in their own authorities. The basis for this is that a ship is regarded as the soil of the country to which it belongs. A French ship in New York Harbor is French soil and is under French jurisdiction, except in case of some crime or violence.

On this subject a decision by our own Supreme Court very elaborately sets forth the law. I have an immediate reference to it in Mr. James Brown Scott's Cases on International Law, or I will read a reference to it, which is found on page 5747 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for October 22, 1913. Chief Justice Waite, in the case of Wildenhus (120 U. S., 11), says:

From experience, however, it was found long ago that it would be beneficial to commerce if the local government would abstain from interfering with the internal discipline of the ship and the general regulations of the rights and duties of the officers and crew toward the vessel or among themselves. And so by comity it came to be generally understood among the civilized nations that all matters of discipline and all things done on board which affected only the vessel or those belonging to her, and did not involve the peace or dignity of the country or the tranquillity of the port should be left by the local government to be dealt with by the authorities of the nation to which the vessel belonged, as the laws of that nation or the interest of its commerce should require.

I have called attention to all these treaties. A provision in this bill declares that the President shall give notice within 90 days for the revocation of such portions of treaties as conflict with this proposed act. The revocation of a part of a treaty carries with it the right of the other party to the treaty to revoke the whole. If we revoke this provision which gives them control of wages in our ports it means that the whole question of the commercial treaties between Germany, Great Britain, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, and all the rest is thrown open for treaty negotiation, and that, too, by demanding a concession, which is peculiarly obnoxious to every one of them and contrary to the general custom and usage of nations, and no one can suppose for a moment that such a demand can be made without retaliation or at least a demand for very substantial concessions in return. That is one section of this conference report.

Another feature is found on page 12 with reference to allotments, and I wish especially to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to this. It is found on page 12, well toward the bottom of the third column:

SEC. 10 (a). That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order, or note, or other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages.

The Senator from Wyoming remarked that he could not conceive how any court after an advance payment had been made to a seaman could render a judgment against his employer; but the point is that this bill makes that advance payment illegal. There is an evil against which this section is aimed which should awaken our attention, and that is the danger that the sailor may be imposed upon; the danger that some go-between, a class of persons known by the name of "crimps," may obtain an assignment of his wages, and in that manner gain a great advantage over him.

While it seems to me that this is a very strong provision, there is at least some justification for the law. An exception is made in the bill for the payment to certain classes of relatives. The seaman can make payment to them; but, generally speaking, an advance payment is absolutely unlawful.

Let me now call attention to a very ambiguous provision about which I have already questioned the Senators from Massachusetts and New York. I will read at the top of page 14:

(e) That this section—

That is, the one forbidding allotments—

(e) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels while in waters of the United States as to vessels of the United States, and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provision shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

I think before we vote on this conference report that subsection should be clearly explained. What does it mean? Does it mean that an allotment made in France or England or Germany or Italy by the owner or master of a foreign steamship subjects him to a penalty here in the courts of the United States, or is it limited to a case in which the allotment or advance payment is made in the ports of the United States? As this was drawn in the bill that was before the Senate early in March of 1913, I think it clearly related only to allotments made in ports of the United States; but let us notice the language; let us notice particularly the tense of one auxiliary verb, beginning with line 4:

And any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

You have the broad, general provision forbidding allotments, providing a penalty in case they are made, and then this statement that it shall apply to foreign vessels and to anyone who has violated its terms. Then, in the next, or really in the same, subsection it is provided:

The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel of the United States, or of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States, shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance, and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

What is the object of that provision if it does not mean that an allotment made in a foreign country is a violation of the law? And, Mr. President, when we are speaking of this subject, I may say that this is the almost universal custom in other countries. I do not say whether it is a good or a bad practice and it is possibly open to abuse. We have taken a more advanced position in forbidding these allotments. Conditions may exist here so that abuses are more likely to arise, but our custom in that regard and our laws are radically different from those of other countries, and by this act we are seeking to penalize a contract which is entirely legal and customary in the other commercial nations with which we are dealing.

Here is another provision following the one just alluded to, showing the extent to which we are adopting a new policy and how far we are going toward taking away from foreign countries their control over their own shipping and making laws and regulations to control that which they have left to us and which we have left to them from time immemorial. I call attention further to the fact that on page 14 the conference committee has of its own accord stricken out a provision which was in the House bill. The words "employed on a vessel of the United States" are stricken out, so that it reads:

SEC. 12. That no wages due or accruing to any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and every payment of wages to a seaman or apprentice shall be valid in law, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment of wages or of any attachment, encumbrance, or arrestment thereon; and no assignment or sale of wages or of salvage made prior to the accruing thereof shall bind the party making the same, except such allotments as are authorized by this title.

Mr. President, there may be good reasons for that; and as regards our own shipping, I am not going to stand here and oppose this very severe law, although it interferes with the freedom of contract. Many men who are familiar with conditions relating to seamen say that the degree to which they are subject to imposition is such as to justify relieving them from these assignments and imposing a penalty, even, for the making of any agreement for allotment. That is one thing, and imposing that law on foreign vessels coming to our own ports is altogether another thing.

I call attention next to the provision in regard to the language test on page 15. This is a new provision which appeared first—at any rate, first during my term in the Senate—in an act which passed the House in 1912. It was stricken out in the Senate and the House concurred in the bill as it passed the Senate. The bill was presented to President Taft only an hour before the expiration of his term, and he declined to approve it. It is provided by section 13:

SEC. 13. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, are of a rating not less than able seamen.

Then it goes on to define what is an able seaman.

In the first place I should like to have an explanation of what is meant by this language:

Unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which in each department thereof are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel.

Does that mean that everyone in the cook's department, everyone in the steward's department, everyone in the firemen's department, every member of the crew must understand the language of the captain and the mate; that is, those who have charge of the navigation of the vessel?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, it may mean that the mate must speak their language.

Mr. BURTON. Now, let me suggest to the Senator from Michigan a concrete case. Suppose a vessel has a crew of whom the seamen, strictly so called—that is, those who are on the deck and have to do with the navigation of the vessel—are English, the captain is English, the firemen are Chinese, the cooks are Italians, and the stewards are Swiss; what does this provision as applied to them mean? Does it mean that 75 per cent of those in the cook's department must understand the captain's language; that 75 per cent of those in the steward's department and in the firemen's department must understand English, or what does it mean?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it does. I think it means that they must be able to comprehend the orders that are given. Surely this is essential to proper discipline.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Indiana if he does not think we have done a pretty good day's work to-day?

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, we had expected to take a recess at 11 o'clock. We may make it five minutes before 11 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will be agreeable.

Mr. KERN. It may depend upon whether the Senator from Ohio is in the midst of a flight or not.

Mr. BURTON. I think, Mr. President, it is very desirable to have these matters explained.

So far as the men who have to do immediately with the navigation are concerned I do not believe this provision would be wrong. As to the men on deck handling appliances that pertain to the navigation of the ship, it is all right; but if you require that all the firemen and all the cooks and all the stewards shall understand the language of the navigation officers, it is a very severe provision, and one that you will find will not work well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will suggest that I think it would certainly be very necessary for cooks to understand the language.

Mr. BURTON. They should understand the language of somebody. There is no doubt of that. So far as those who immediately have to do with the safeguarding of life is concerned, it would be very well to require that they understand, and understand well, the language of the officers. The place where this question arises more than anywhere else is on the Pacific coast, at least so far as regards our own shipping. We have had an experience ourselves. The Government of the United States runs Army transports from San Francisco to Manila. It was thought desirable to have Caucasians in the fireroom, and so they displaced the Chinese firemen who had been in service for years and put Caucasians in their place. What was the result? In the frightful heat of a good share of the journey the Caucasians gave out, and it became necessary to replace them with orientals. Under this law 75 per cent of all who are on board—it matters not whether they have to do with the safety of human life or not—must understand any order given by the officers of the vessel. Although the language is ambiguous, I take it this is the real meaning.

The next provision is in regard to able seamen. I have already discussed that matter at such length before the Senate that I hardly feel like talking longer upon it at this time. There was for a time a requirement in England, as to a certain class of ships, that they must carry a certain number of able seamen. In the maritime law of Australia there is a provision of this kind, but there is so much discretion left to the marine department that it is by no means as severe as this, and in addition to that it is made applicable only to domestic vessels, according to the present regulations.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just stated that in several other countries they require a certain number of able seamen.

Mr. BURTON. In England.

Mr. POMERENE. In England. Can the Senator tell us what constitutes an able seaman in England?

Mr. BURTON. The exact requirements I am not able to state. Perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] can state that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. By statute, three years' service at sea.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the question whether a man is an able seaman in those countries depend only on the length of service?

Mr. BURTON. I so understand—three years of service. In the great majority of the mercantile marines, however, no such rule is enforced, none whatever.

I want to call attention now to the fact that the question of the language and the question of the number of able seamen are left, respectively, to the collectors of customs and to the inspectors. The collectors of customs are under the Treasury Department, and the inspectors are under the Department of Commerce. Now, what is the number of seamen coming to the United States in the course of a year? There certainly would be in the aggregate, from foreign countries, 250,000 or 300,000. Some of them would come and go on numerous voyages. Does anyone believe that our collectors of customs, with all the varied nationalities of the shipping with which they have to deal, are going to be able to examine all of those men on a language test—Chinese, Japanese, and all these other languages? Then, again, it is left to the inspectors to determine who shall be rated as able seamen; and I want to give some of the requirements in regard to that.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I suppose it would be possible to find enough men who would be willing to fill those offices to get enough collectors of customs to examine all of these men, if they had an administration that was ready to appoint them.

Mr. BURTON. I presume so; but it would be adding a class of duties quite alien to those which they now perform, and I fear there would be necessity for engaging a great many new officials.

Now, let me call attention to another provision in this bill. I call attention to this to show the impracticability of it. After the provision in regard to able seamen it goes on:

Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit and examination, under rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality and age of the applicant and the vessel or vessels on which he has had service and that he is entitled to such certificates under the provisions of this section, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued and shall keep on file the affidavits upon which said certificates are issued.

Every boat that comes from the four quarters of the globe must have this quota of able seamen before the boat can leave our ports. Every sailor on every boat must file his affidavit, must make a showing that he is entitled to this rating of able seaman, must obtain a certificate. And that is not all. Every time that boat departs, whether the sailor has been here once or ten times, it must be shown to the satisfaction of the authorities that the required quota of able seamen is present. The task is simply impossible.

Let me call attention to another provision in the bill right here. It seems as if it were drawn to make it impossible. Every seaman that departs from the United States must have a certificate of this kind from our officials, and must afford proof that he is entitled to the prescribed rating, otherwise the boat on which he sails is liable to be detained and refused a clearance.

The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs or is scheduled to depart.

That is, a passenger boat carrying 2,000 or 4,000 passengers may be preparing for departure, and six hours before the time it is scheduled to sail any reputable citizen of the United States may file an affidavit stating that he does not believe the law has been complied with; that there are not a sufficient number of able seamen on board, or that the language requirement has not been complied with. Then that boat must be held for a muster, in which case perhaps 600 or 700 persons on board that boat must be examined. Does anyone here believe that foreign ships will comply with such a requirement as that without not only resistance but even retaliation?

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, in order that there may be ample time for the Members of the Senate to consider as to the proper answer to be given to the question just asked, I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Friday, February 26, 1915) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 27, 1915, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 26, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, look, we beseech Thee, with compassion upon our infirmities; when we are weak impart unto us strength, when we are perplexed impart unto us wisdom, when we falter impart unto us courage, that with true devotion to duty we may press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God, in Christ Jesus. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in the Post-Intelligencer, Seattle, Thursday, February 18, 1915, there appeared an article purporting to be by Ashmun Brown. I send a copy of it to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Post-Intelligencer, Seattle, Thursday, February 18, 1915.]

(By Ashmun Brown.)

When the Navy bill was under discussion in the House, and the item providing for the construction of six torpedo-boat destroyers was reached, Representative HUMPHREY, as previously told in these dispatches, secured an amendment for building three of them on the Pacific coast.

For a member of the minority to secure the adoption of an amendment to an appropriation bill on the floor of the House, especially when that amendment has not been considered by the committee, is a most unusual thing. For him to do it without a word of protest from any member of the committee is still more unusual.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that when Mr. HUMPHREY, without explanation, offered his amendment, Mr. PADGETT, chairman of the Naval Committee, said, "I have no objection to that," and instantly the amendment was agreed to.

Every student of legislative affairs knew that there was some mystery about it all. But Representative MANN, of Illinois, has cleared it up. He explains that Mr. PADGETT found out that Mr. HUMPHREY was prepared to use that amendment, if it were opposed, as a means of making an attack on Secretary Daniels in the debate. Mr. HUMPHREY had with him a sheaf of papers, including a letter from Secretary Daniels admitting that in letting contracts for torpedo-boat destroyers last December the Secretary awarded one boat to a Maine firm of shipbuilders at a price of $10,000 higher than a Seattle firm offered to do the work, and including also other papers indicating that politics had something to do with the award.

Now, the Democratic leaders in the House, Mr. PADGETT among them, have no stomach for further attacks on Democratic executive officers. So when Mr. HUMPHREY offered his amendment and laid out his papers Mr. PADGETT took one look at them, hastily accepted the amendment, gave Mr. HUMPHREY a meaning look, and Mr. HUMPHREY nodded his acceptance.

Mr. HUMPHREY got his amendment and kept still.

Molasses catches flies sometimes; at other times swatters get a lot.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I reported from the Naval Committee a year ago the naval appropriation bill making provision for building a portion of the submarines on the Pacific coast. In the bill reported at the present session of Congress a like provision was carried. I had not received any notice from Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington or from anyone else of his intention to offer said amendment. I had no knowledge, information, notice, or expectation that any amendment was going to be offered for a portion of the torpedo destroyers to be built upon the Pacific until Mr. HUMPHREY made the motion upon the floor, and then, believing that it was a fair proposition, I stated upon the floor that I had no objection to it. I had no knowledge and did not know and it never occurred to me that Mr. HUMPHREY was contemplating making an attack upon the Secretary of the Navy or anyone else, nor that anyone else was going to make such an attack. With the single exception that I stated that I had no objection to the amendment, I want to say that all the rest of this article, with its innuendoes and its insinuations, is without any basis of fact and is utterly devoid of truth and is an absolute falsehood, a baseless fabrication by the writer. Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not make further comment upon the matter, except I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Navy which I shall ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 24, 1915.

Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PADGETT: My attention has been invited to an article from the Post-Intelligencer, of Seattle, Wash., of Thursday, February 18, 1915, by Ashmun Brown—copy appended—relative to the award of contracts for destroyers Nos. 63 to 68. The fact is that I awarded two boats to a Maine firm of shipbuilders, namely, the Bath Iron Works, at a price $10,000 lower, not higher, than the final price of the Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Co.

When these bids were opened I regarded them all as too high. The Seattle company was among the highest. I invited the bidders to reduce their figures. The Seattle company reduced its figure from $873,000 to $810,000. The Bath Iron Works reduced its figure from $850,500 each for two boats to $800,000 each, and the contract was awarded to the Bath Co. upon this basis.

The Cramp Co., to which one boat was awarded, reduced its figure from $845,000 to $812,309. What I really did, then, was to award a boat to a Pennsylvania firm of shipbuilders, which had originally bid lower than the Seattle company, for $2,309 more than the revised figure of the Seattle company. In view of the inexperience of the Seattle company in this class of construction I could not have done otherwise, having in view the interests of the Government.

I may remark that by insisting upon the reduction of the prices originally bid I saved the Government something like $135,000 on this transaction alone.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as my name was mentioned in reference to the article I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks leave to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, so far as the statements of the gentleman from Tennessee are concerned I do not intend to refer to those in any way. I am perfectly willing to take his statements as correct. He has always been fair to the Pacific coast; never so far as known have we had any right to complain of his action. But the statement made by the Secretary of the Navy in the letter read at the desk should not go unchallenged. Now, I happen to know something personally about the facts in regard to that transaction referred to, and when the Secretary of the Navy attempts to create an impression upon this House, the letter now having been brought before it by the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that he acted in the interest of the public in rejecting the bid offered by the Seattle Construction Co., I take issue with him upon the statement of facts. Now here is what transpired: The department called for bids for the construction of certain torpedo-boat destroyers. The Seattle Construction Co. bid. After that bid was submitted they sent a man all the way from Seattle down here to talk with the Secretary in regard to the construction of one or more of those vessels, at a cost probably of $1,000 to that company. All bids were held up.

The Secretary of the Navy was jockeying back and forth with different parties to see whether or not he could get a reduction in the bids, a practice that is at least open to question. After I came here last fall I went to see the Secretary myself in company with Senator JONES, and we were given to understand that he would like for the Seattle Construction Co. to submit an additional bid. I went to the attorney of the Seattle Construction Co. here in the city, and he wired for the authority and received it to reduce the bid, and I took it myself and placed it in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy. I have here a letter that the Secretary wrote to Senator JONES, a copy of which I shall put in the RECORD, which shows at the time that bid was submitted and the contract let, according to his own statement. William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co. bid for construction of one boat at $820,000; that the Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Co. offered to construct one for $810,000; so that at that time—the time of letting the contract—the Seattle Construction Co. was $10,000 below the Cramp Co. Afterwards the Cramp Co. modified their bid, as I was informed by the Secretary, until it was only some $2,500 above the Seattle Construction Co.; but even in that event the Seattle Construction Co. was still the lowest bidder. But this last reduction took place after the company had secured the contract and the Seattle Co. had no opportunity to meet it. While the Secretary was giving them an opportunity to again reduce their bid, why did he not give the Seattle Co. an opportunity to meet it? If it was his desire to save money, why did he not keep up his policy of jockeying with the different companies?

We need these vessels upon the Pacific coast, and we have always been given to understand when our bids were no higher, in order to get vessels on that coast and to save the cost of freight in taking material out there, we might expect to get that contract. But now we on the Pacific are denied this when we are $10,000 lower, and even $2,500 lower after the modification, which we had no opportunity to meet. Now he attempts to escape from the responsibility in awarding the bid to the higher bidder by making the statement "that it was in the interest of the public," and that is what I resent. It was not in the interest of the public for him to make a reduction and give that bid to the party who bid higher than the Seattle Construction Co. His excuse was that he did not know whether or not the Seattle Construction Co. was competent to build that boat and get it in time.

The Seattle Construction Co. is one of the strongest shipbuilding firms in the United States. It stands ready to give a bond in any amount to carry out those contracts. If the Seattle Construction Co. was not competent to carry out its contracts, why did the Secretary let one of the men come across the continent and take up the question and dicker with him here for several days? Why, then, did he take up the question again with me and permit me to go there and file this additional bid? Just when did his so-called experts doubt the ability of the Seattle Construction Co. to carry out their contract? What happened after the last bid—and the lowest of all—was submitted? It was time for him——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency bill. The gentleman from Washington can get the time in general debate. I can not permit the public business to be interrupted.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman had best give me five minutes more now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not yield a minute under a threat.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. All right. I make the point that there is no quorum present, and I will make it every time until I get those five minutes if you do not have a quorum here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will not get five minutes at any time while I am here, if I can help it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count in order to see if there is a quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and four gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 20415. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 6631. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poison in the consular districts of the United States in China; and

S. 5734. An act to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to the State of Kansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 20688. An act to place Barrow County, Ga., in the eastern division of the northern district of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 20814. An act to place Candler, Jenkins, and Evans Counties, Ga., in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 19906) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PENROSE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCKELLAR, on request of Mr. SLEMP, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days, beginning February 25 and inclusive therefrom, on account of sickness.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, on account of sickness.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. EDWARDS. To submit a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] withhold his motion or not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not withhold the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the House resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency bill, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS].

THE REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Chairman, in asking the indulgence and attention of the membership of this House my purpose is not only to avail myself of the privilege which is afforded me to discuss a question of such vast importance, but it is to perform a duty which I owe to the House and to the committee which this subject concerns. My topic is the codification and revision of the Federal Statutes; its importance, its progress, and its value.

During my legislative career in this House it has been my pleasure and good fortune to have been associated officially and socially with one of the ablest personnels constituting a committee of this body. I have reference to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, which has as its chairman as hard working, as sincere, as conscientious, and as liberal a man as any whose name appears on the membership roll of this House, Judge WATKINS, of Louisiana, who, beginning in the Sixty-fourth Congress, becomes the dean of the Louisiana delegation in the House of Representatives.

Section 35 of Rule XI of this House, Mr. Chairman, charges the Committee on Revision of the Laws with the codification and revision of the statutes of the United States. The committee was created on July 25, 1868, and has been a standing committee of the House since that time. On June 4, 1897, Congress authorized the appointment by the President of three commissioners at an annual salary of $5,000 each, whose duties were specified to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States, under the direction of the Attorney General. These commissioners were supplied with adequate assistance and had appropriated for them by Congress money with which to defray the expenses which they incurred in the discharge of their official duties. These commissioners constituted what was known as the Commission to Codify and Revise the Criminal and Penal Laws of the United States. By the act of March 3, 1899, Congress further extended the duties of the commission by requiring a revision and codification of the laws concerning the jurisdiction and practice of the courts of the United States, including the judiciary act, the acts in amendment thereof and supplementary thereto, and all acts providing for the removal, appeal, and transfer of causes. On March 3, 1901, Congress again extended the duties of the commission by directing it to revise and codify all the laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature in force at the time the same shall be reported. The same act made it the duty of the commission to bring together all statutes and parts of statutes relating to the same subjects and directed the commission to omit all redundant and obsolete enactments. The commission was required to make such alterations as may be necessary to reconcile the contradictions, supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text. The commission was given authority to propose and embody in the revision changes in the substance of the existing law, but it was required to set forth clearly all such changes in an accompanying report. Congress required the commission to arrange the revision under titles, chapters, and sections, or other suitable divisions and subdivision, with headnotes briefly expressive of the matter contained in such division, and with marginal notes so drawn as to point to the contents of the text, and with references to the original text from which each section of the revision was compiled, and to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States explaining or construing the same. These duties just enumerated constitute the duties of the Committee on Revision of the Laws of this House, the accurate and efficient performance of which our committee has industriously striven to accomplish. Our entire work, before going into a detailed analysis of it, is based on the final report of the commission made to the Congress on December 15, 1906.

After the work of the commission was well under way, on the 12th day of December, 1902, a report by the commission was made to the Attorney General detailing the progress of its labors, in which I find a statement which, in my opinion, should have long since been called to the attention of every Member of this House during the struggle of the Committee on Revision of the Laws to obtain the cooperation of the individual Members of this body. The statement is as follows:

It is due that there should be an understanding of the magnitude of the task assigned to us, but as to this it is difficult to convey an adequate conception.

That statement was made by the eminent men composing the commission, and was briefly, but solemnly, expressive of the tremendous undertaking which they had assumed as presidential appointees for the execution of the work of codifying and revising the laws.

I have often wondered in amazement how the individual Members of this the greatest legislative body in the world could undertake to belittle the work of the Committee on Revision of the Laws and antagonize and stultify it on the floor of this House; but, nevertheless, this has been the case in many instances, and especially is this true since Congress deprived the committee of the services of its coterie of assistants, who acted as attachés to the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws from March, 1907, to the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress in 1911.

At the very time I entered service as a Member of this body the Committee on Revision of the Laws, just being made to stand alone and perform in the same accurate and expeditious manner the work imposed upon it by the rules of this House, was placed under the supervision of the distinguished gentleman and jurist from Louisiana, Judge J. T. WATKINS. I recall the organization meeting of that committee. The nature of the work was reviewed and the explanation made by the chairman that the performance of the work would fall upon the shoulders of the chairman and members of the committee, with the clerical aid of the clerk of the committee, and warning us of the task we had before us to perform. Fortunately, Judge WATKINS had with him a young man with several years' training and experience in legislative and legal work. This young man was his son; and it was decided by the committee to select him as the clerk, to do the best he could, unassisted, in continuing the work of the committee. Being a student of the legal profession, he seized upon the work and earnestly and diligently began to equip himself for service to the committee which had selected him. Having no one to aid him, he, by his untiring efforts and perseverance, finally mastered the intricate work with which the committee is charged. The committee would meet and review and criticize his work, and, finally, when he had in code form the unfinished part of the judiciary title of the Revised Statutes and subsequent laws, we presented to this body what was called "The Judicial Code, Part II," and after consideration of it on ten consecutive Calendar Wednesdays the bill was passed by this House without a dissenting vote. This was on June 17, 1914, and the bill went to the Senate and was referred to the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws of that body. After several days had elapsed the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] arose in the Senate and explained that there did not then exist a Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws, and moved that in view of that fact the Judicial Code, Part II, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, in order that consideration of it might be had. This was done, and a subcommittee from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate was appointed to consider it. This was at a time when the Clayton antitrust bill was being considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and it was impossible to begin consideration of the Judicial Code, Part II, at that time.

The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate is one of the hardest worked committees of Congress, and every effort has been made by the committee to consider and report out this important proposed legislation, but so far without success. I am glad to be able to state to this House that it now appears the time has come when it seems that we are about to have the right kind of cooperation on the part of the Senate in this work, for there is now pending in the Committee on Rules of that body a proposed amendment to the rules of the Senate providing for the creation of a standing committee on revision of the laws, which gives the committee power to act jointly with the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House. This proposed amendment to the rules is embodied in Senate resolution 534, submitted by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON, and I congratulate the Senator on having taken this important step.

Let us briefly review the contents of the Judicial Code, part 2, the immediate passage of which the American Bar Association, through the good offices of the Hon. Thomas W. Shelton, of Norfolk, Va., chairman of the committee on uniform judicial procedure, is earnestly advocating: The appointment of the United States attorneys, marshals, clerks, commissioners, and stenographers, their duties and salaries; the compensation of jurors and witnesses; the laws on evidence; civil procedure; criminal procedure; procedure on error and appeal; judgments, costs, and executions; limitations, habeas corpus, and extradition; all of which is based on that part of the judiciary title of the Revised Statutes which was not embraced in the Judicial Code of March 3, 1911. I desire to refer briefly to some of the important changes proposed in the Judicial Code, part 2, which were adopted by the House during the consideration of that measure: The clerks of the United States district courts are taken from the fee system, as the present mode of their payment, and placed on a graduated scale of salaries; a provision is in the bill prohibiting judges of the Federal courts from expressing opinion on the facts or making any comment on the weight of evidence in jury trials, and also a provision which prohibits judges from taking from the jury the determination of the issues of fact arising under the evidence. The bill contains a provision correcting the evil of allowing clerks of the courts in certain States to charge double the fees and retain double the maximum compensation; but since the bill has been in the Senate another act of Congress has been passed putting an end to this discrimination. The Judicial Code, part 2, also contains an amendment vesting authority in the circuit court of appeals to issue writs of habeas corpus. It contains other important changes too numerous to be enumerated.

Besides the active support which the American Bar Association has given the Committee on Revision of the Laws, through Mr. Shelton, our committee has had the warm support of the clerks of the United States district courts, through Hon. Edwin M. Keatley, clerk of the United States district court for the southern district of West Virginia, who was designated by the clerks to represent them before the committees of Congress. In support of this work Hon. Thomas W. Shelton, chairman of the committee on uniform judicial procedure of the American Bar Association, has written me:

It is most desirable that the bill known as H. R. 15578, the result of extensive and intelligent labor, be considered during the coming vacation preparatory to its passage during the next session of Congress. It is gratifying to observe the progress reported in the proposed creation of a joint Senate and House committee on revision of the laws.

The following is what Hon. Edwin M. Keatley has to say of our work:

Referring to the work on revision of the laws, which has been going on for some time, and H. R. 15578, which passed the House of Representatives at the last session and is now pending before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, I am taking the liberty of addressing you in reference to this subject. The writer has had occasion to examine the work done by your reviser, and too much can not be said in praise of the work that has been done. The writer feels competent to speak on this subject for the reason that he is close in touch with the work of the Federal courts, and has occasion from day to day to use the Federal Statutes, and it is almost impossible for one not familiar with the same to find our civil laws. The work of revision should by all means be carried forward, and I trust that you will not consider it a presumption upon my part in urging upon you the importance of this great work, and I trust it will be your pleasure to assist in any way you can the continuance of the same.

During the consideration of the Judicial Code, part 2, in this House, I recall numerous suggestions offered by the minority leader [Mr. MANN] which the chairman and members of the Committee on Revision of the Laws gladly accepted. I recall the impartial conduct of our chairman of the committee, Judge WATKINS, throughout the entire time of the consideration of the bill. I noted at the time with genuine pleasure the very high regard which our chairman entertained for the opinion and suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I remember well, too, the praise which the minority leader of this House saw fit to extend to the chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws for his able management of the bill during its consideration and his impartiality on each day's proceeding. I remember also the commendatory remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the work which was done in preparing the bill for presentation to this House. After recalling the very pleasant termination of the proceedings had on that bill, it is very unpleasant to have to recall the fact that the minority leader on this floor has endeavored to oppose the progress of our work and express himself in opposition to the creation of the position of the reviser of the statutes for our committee, the only additional competent assistance we have. To my utter surprise, he did this on July 3, 1914, when a resolution was reported from the Committee on Accounts authorizing the Committee on Revision of the Laws to employ this person. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] based his opposition on the fact that the salary to be paid this person was in excess of any salary paid to a clerk of a committee, with one exception. He was generous enough, however, to state that he recognized the efficiency of the young man who had prepared this revision of the judiciary title. He undertook to make a comparison of the duties of the contemplated reviser with those of the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary, which was very unfair. Before enumerating the duties of this reviser, for the purpose of seeing how they compare with the duties of the clerk of any committee of this House—including, of course, the duties of the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary, the clerk of the Appropriations Committee, the clerk of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, or any other clerk—I desire to make an observation which touches the Committee on Appropriations of this House: I notice in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, as in other sundry civil acts of recent years, an item paying to whatever persons who shall be designated by the chairmen of the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate the sum of $4,000 for preparing statements showing what appropriations were made, new offices created; offices the salaries of which have been omitted, increased, or reduced; indefinite appropriations; and contracts authorized, together with a chronological history of the regular appropriation bills. I am far from wanting to offer any criticism of the necessity for this appropriation of $4,000 to be paid those persons; but I do feel that my high appreciation of the services which the reviser for our committee is required to render makes it incumbent upon me to direct attention to items of this kind, especially in view of the fact that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations now receives $5,000 per annum, and at the same time has one assistant clerk and stenographer at $2,500 per annum, one assistant clerk at $1,900, and one assistant clerk at $1,800, and a messenger to that committee, whose salary is $1,000 per annum.

The last assistant clerk I have just mentioned for this committee was provided for in the deficiency appropriation act of March 4, 1913—quite recent, Mr. Chairman. The item was taking care, and permanent care, of a resolution adopted by this House providing for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations. The item in the deficiency bill carried the salary of this employee from January 21, 1913, to the end of the fiscal year 1914, and I find that this employee has gone on the statutory rolls and is being annually provided for by Congress. This is right if the committee needs the services of this person, which it no doubt does. But the Committee on Revision of the Laws of this House is deserving of the same consideration, respect, and attention at the hands of our Appropriations Committee.

I desire now to make a few comparisons concerning the duties of the reviser of the statutes for our committee with those of the clerks of the Judiciary and Appropriations Committees of the House. The reviser of the statutes for our committee is first required to procure in volume form all the laws enacted by Congress on whatever title is assigned to him for codification and revision. He then extracts from these volumes a copy of these laws by typewriting them, and if too voluminous to take a typewritten copy, is forced to purchase paper bound volumes from the Superintendent of Documents at the Government Printing Office, as our committee is no longer supplied with these volumes for this purpose. He then proceeds to codify them in the order of the dates of their approval, and when he has completed his compilation of these enactments he proceeds to revise them by blending them together and omitting all repealed, redundant, and obsolete laws, noting these changes to be incorporated in his report and the report of the committee to this House. He then procures the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, which, parenthetically speaking, we are forced to borrow from the Library of the House, being no longer supplied with them, although required under the rules of this House to cite the decisions of the Supreme Court beside the sections of law which they construe. The reviser is required to study each decision before he is able to intelligently and properly place it. He then proceeds to write his report not only on every act with which he deals in the revision, but on every section of the act, showing when and where changed, either by statute or by himself, the reason therefor, and the effect it will have. After this report is completed he proceeds to the preparation of a reference index to the acts of Congress concerning the particular title with which he is dealing and designates the section of the proposed code in which appears the particular section or sections of the act or acts therein codified and revised. When this is completed, he prepares a table to accompany his report, specifying the omissions of acts and parts of acts and reasons therefor. Last, but not least by any means, he enters upon his duties of preparing a complete double index to accompany the code in the House of Representatives, which means a saving of approximately a thousand dollars, and often more, to the Government, which has been the usual approximated amount paid by Congress to persons making these indices. This was the case in the Criminal Code of 1909 and the Judicial Code of 1911. Although the commission, the final report of which our work is based on, was required by the act of March 3, 1901, to "provide by an index for an easy reference to every portion of such revision," the commission only submitted a reference index to all the statutes with which it dealt and did not supply an index to the subject matter. The reviser of the statutes, although burdened with duties, has advised our committee that he considers it his duty to prepare these indices and that in his opinion the act of March 3, 1901, contemplated such an index, and not merely a reference index to the statutes.

Aside from the arduous duties which the reviser has to perform under the direction and supervision of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, he is required by the committee to lend these same services to whatever committee of the Senate these codification bills may be referred, and in this connection, I invite attention to his report to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate on the Judcial Code, part two, made on July 29, 1914, showing not only the status of these sections up to the time consideration was begun by the House, but pointing out specifically every change made by the House, and what the change meant.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Revision of the Laws of this House is now in the midst of the preparation and consideration of a code of laws governing common carriers of interstate and foreign commerce and combinations in restraint of trade. The demand for copies of the tentative print of this code bespeaks for it a vast amount of popularity. Our committee is receiving calls for it from every direction, but of course has no authority to make a gratuitous distribution of it. But I feel that from the number of requests from Members of this House, which we have endeavored to comply with, you must be familiar with the work we are doing and the status of our work. However, I want to take the attention of the House long enough to refer briefly to what the proposed common carriers and antitrust code contains: In the code we have dealt with regulations of transportation, Interstate Commerce Commission, safety appliances on railroad cars, locomotive safety appliances, boiler inspectors, care of animals in transit, liability for injuries to employees, arbitration between carriers and employees, hours of service of employees, Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, combinations in restraint of trade, and the Federal Trade Commission. This proposed code bids fair to become one of the most useful, if not the most useful, compilation of laws on any subject which we find on our statute books. No one but the members of the Committee on Revision of the Laws and the employees associated with this work is expected to be able to appreciate the magnitude of the work. I only wish it were so that every Member of this body could find the time to inspect personally the work which is being done in the committee room of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, for I feel sure that it would be the means of having the earnest support of each of you. Congress now is being charged with total inability to keep its laws even in codified form, much less in revised form. I for one resent any such accusation when it is directed at the Committee on Revision of the Laws, but I can not as conscientiously play the part of a staunch defender when this accusation is leveled at the House of Representatives, for it is, indeed, a subject which has almost constantly been called to the attention of this body during the past several months.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose that the laws regulating common carriers of interstate and foreign commerce are the most tedious, most difficult, and most complicated statutes with which we have to deal. When the reviser for this committee completed his tentative work on this proposed code, it was submitted by the Committee on Revision of the Laws to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the most careful scrutiny by the members of the commission, and on December 19, 1914, the Hon. Joseph W. Folk, chief counsel for the Interstate Commerce Commission, in his report made the following statement:

> I have examined the proposed code of laws governing common carriers of interstate and foreign commerce. The compilation shows careful research and deep study, and an intricate and difficult subject is handled remarkably well.

On December 18, 1914, Hon. P. J. Farrell, solicitor, division of valuation, Interstate Commerce Commission, in making his report on the proposed common carriers' code to the commission uses the following language:

> I find that the work of the Committee on Revision has been carefully and thoroughly done.

I quote from the reports of these gentlemen for the purpose of showing the Members of this House the high class of work which the reviser of the statutes is doing, and especially for the purpose of refuting the statement made on July 3, 1914, by the minority leader [Mr. MANN] that the clerks of the Committee on the Judiciary, of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and of the Committee on the Public Lands had more difficult work to perform than the then contemplated reviser of the statutes. If it is a fact that the clerks of the committees I have just referred to have the same intricate and difficult work imposed upon them as the reviser of the statutes, this House should feel ashamed of itself for not adequately compensating these men for the work they have to perform.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House points with a great deal of pride to the work which has been done, and which is now being done, by Mr. W. K. Watkins, the reviser of the statutes. Mr. Watkins is a typical gentleman in every respect. I am glad of the opportunity to pay tribute to his sterling qualities; he is a sober, moral, intelligent, highly efficient, and ambitious gentleman, and possesses most agreeable manners. For month in and month out, even prior to his appointment as reviser, he has been found at his work on an average of from 14 to 16 hours a day. Some Members of this House have had the temerity to refer to the fact that he is the son of the chairman of the committee. That is true, and I join with others in congratulating our genial chairman and associate, Judge WATKINS, that he has such a son. I remember well the day in last July, after the resolution creating the position of reviser had been passed by this House, the Committee on Revision of the Laws met to make its selection of the appointee. The chairman of the committee stated to us that a resolution of the House had been passed authorizing the employment of a competent person to assist the committee in codifying and revising the statutes, and said that he himself had no recommendation nor nomination to make for the place, but would leave the matter entirely to the pleasure of the membership of the committee. I at once arose in my place at the meeting and discussed the qualifications of the present reviser and nominated him for the position under the resolution. I was followed by other members of the committee, Republicans and Democrats alike. He was unanimously chosen to fill the place. I remember also that our distinguished colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE] moved that the committee offer expressions of appreciation and thanks to Mr. Watkins, the outgoing clerk of the committee, for his successful efforts on the general work of codification and revision. I merely rehearse what transpired at this meeting for the purpose of showing the membership of this House in what high regard the son of our chairman is held and to lay stress on the fact that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] took no part in the designation of his son for the position of reviser. I have wanted for a long time to speak these words of praise of my young friend from Louisiana, but opportunity was not afforded me, and I feel sure that the members of the Committee on Revision of the Laws join with me in what I have had to say of him.

Mr. Chairman, my services in this body are soon to terminate. I regret that I must part company with the associates and friends I have in this House, and I am equally sorry that I must sever connection, socially and officially, with a committee of this House the duties of which are just getting well under way, and the faithful discharge of which is causing the committee to ripen into the prominence to which its work entitles it. I dare say that no committee of this House has attached to it harder work and greater responsibility than the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and it is earnestly hoped that instead of meeting with opposition on the part of a few Members of this body they will all join in aiding the committee in its tremendous undertaking of bringing up and keeping up the laws which we enact, especially in view of the fact that it is now incumbent upon us to save some several hundred thousands of dollars which the maintenance of the commission from June 4, 1897, to December 15, 1906, and the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws from March 2, 1907, to the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress, in 1911, a period of about 13 years, aggregating an annual outlay of about $21,000, has cost the Government of the United States. This is what is now being accomplished on $4,000 per annum, as the salary of the assistant which we now have.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to say that while the Committee on Revision of the Laws has selected certain important titles to deal with first, we still have numerous titles just as important with which to deal, such as the laws governing the departments of our Government—the Army; the Navy; immigration; naturalization; collection of duties upon imports; internal revenue; coinage, weights, and measures; appropriations; public printing, advertisements, and public documents; the Postal Service; foreign relations; commerce and navigation; regulation of vessels in foreign commerce; regulation of vessels in domestic commerce; rivers and harbors; neutrality; the slave trade; bankruptcy; the coast survey; the public debt; regulation of steam vessels; pensions; prize; national banks; the Congress; the President; and others, all which constitute the Revised Statutes which have not been brought up to date in an authentic manner since 1878. I want to again express the hope that every Member of this House will aid us to accomplish our work well. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FRANCIS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a short address by former Secretary of War Stimson on our national defenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by former Secretary of War Stimson. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Agricultural bill on the subject of farm-extension work.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Agricultural bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of rural credits.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of rural credits. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONNOLLY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting an address by the Hon. Joseph E. Davies.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address by Hon. Joseph E. Davies. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, in these days of world-wide turmoil, in these days when great nations are in what may be a death grapple, in these days when the United States stands almost alone as the one conspicuous example of peace, in these days when on various subjects recently discussed there is frequent reference in the press and in the Congress to the constitutional rights of States and of individuals, in these days when every agency that makes for the best citizenship should be employed, it appears to me that no more effective means can be used to make the people of this country, native and foreign born, understand why this great Republic of the western world stands supreme than to place in their hands in convenient form the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Many people appear to have an idea that the Constitution is some mysterious sacred thing kept locked up in a big safe and guarded night and day, and that it is a rare favor to be allowed to get a peep at it. This is partly true, but not in that sense. It is sacred but should not be mysterious. It is kept in a big safe, but the strong box is the loyal heart of the people. It is guarded night and day by a jealous army of nearly 100,000,000 patriotic men and women, gathered here from all corners of the earth.

Let us place in the hands of these people the Constitution and the Declaration in concise form, that they may read and respect them. With that end in view, so far as it applies to the district I have the honor to represent, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, "lest we forget." [Applause.]

THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE—1776.*

(* The delegates of the United Colonies of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, in Congress assembled at Philadelphia, Resolved, on the 10th of May, 1776, to recommend to the respective assemblies and conventions of the United Colonies, where no government sufficient to the exigencies of their affairs had been established, to adopt such a government as should, in the opinion of the representatives of the people, best conduce to the happiness and safety of their constituents in particular, and of America in general. A preamble to this resolution, agreed to on the 15th of May, stated the intention to be totally to suppress the exercise of every kind of authority under the British Crown. On the 7th of June, certain resolutions respecting independency were moved and seconded. On the 10th of June it was resolved that a committee should be appointed to prepare a declaration to the following effect: "That the United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown; and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved." On the preceding day it was determined that the committee for preparing the declaration should consist of five, and they were chosen accordingly, in the following order: Mr. Jefferson, Mr. J. Adams, Mr. Franklin, Mr. Sherman, Mr. R. R. Livingston. On the 11th of June a resolution was passed to appoint a committee to prepare and digest the form of a confederation to be entered into between the colonies, and another committee to prepare a plan of treaties to be proposed to foreign powers. On the 12th of June, it was resolved that a committee of Congress should be appointed by the name of a board of war and ordnance, to consist of five members. On the 25th of June, a declaration of the deputies of Pennsylvania, met in provincial conference, expressing their willingness to concur in a vote declaring the United Colonies free and independent States, was laid before Congress and read. On the 28th of June, the committee appointed to prepare a declaration of independence brought in a draught, which was read and ordered to lie on the table. On the 1st of July, a resolution of the convention of Maryland, passed the 28th of June, authorizing the deputies of that colony to concur in declaring the United Colonies free and independent States, was laid before Congress and read. On the same day Congress resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, to take into consideration the resolution respecting independency. On the 2d of July, a resolution declaring the Colonies free and independent States was adopted. A declaration to that effect was, on the same and the following days, taken into further consideration. Finally, on the 4th of July, the Declaration of Independence was agreed to, engrossed on paper, signed by John Hancock as President, and directed to be sent to the several assemblies, conventions, and committees, or councils of safety, and to the several commanding officers of the Continental troops, and to be proclaimed in each of the United States, and at the head of the Army. It was also ordered to be entered upon the Journals of Congress, and on the 2d of August, a copy engrossed on parchment was signed by all but one of the 56 signers whose names are appended to it. That one was Matthew Thornton, of New Hampshire, who on taking his seat in November asked and obtained the privilege of signing it. Several who signed it on the 2d of August were absent when it was adopted on the 4th of July, but, approving of it, they thus signified their approbation.

NOTE.—The proof of this document, as published above, was read by Mr. Ferdinand Jefferson, the keeper of the rolls at the Department of State, at Washington, who compared it with the fac simile of the original in his custody. He says: "In the fac simile, as in the original, the whole instrument runs on without a break, but dashes are mostly inserted. I have, in this copy, followed the arrangement of paragraphs adopted in the publication of the Declaration in the newspaper of John Dunlap, and as printed by him for the Congress, which printed copy is inserted in the original Journal of the old Congress. The same paragraphs are also made by the author, in the original draught preserved in the Department of State.")

IN CONGRESS, JULY 4, 1776.

The unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen United States of America.

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty to throw off such Government and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has refused his assent to laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his governors to pass laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his assent should be obtained, and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

He has refused to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected, whereby the legislative powers, incapable of annihilation, have returned to the people at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the meantime exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without and convulsions within.

He has endeavoured to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

He has obstructed the administration of justice by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers.

He has made judges dependent on his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, standing armies without the consent of our legislature.

He has affected to render the military independent of and superior to the civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our Constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation:

For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us.

For protecting them, by a mock trial, from punishment for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these States.

For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world.

For imposing taxes on us without our consent.

For depriving us in many cases of the benefits of trial by jury.

For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offences.

For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighbouring Province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies.

For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering fundamentally the forms of our Government.

For suspending our own legislature, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated Government here by declaring us out of his protection and waging war against us.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large armies of foreign mercenaries to compleat the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow citizens taken captive on the high seas to bear arms against their country, to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavoured to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes, and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms; our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have we been wanting in attention to our Brittish brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They, too, have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must therefore acquiesce in the necessity which denounces our separation and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends.

We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by authority of the good people of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as free and independent States, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

[Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.]

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 30,000, but each State shall have at least 1 Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose 3, Massachusetts 8, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 1, Connecticut 5, New York 6, New Jersey 4, Pennsylvania 8, Delaware 1, Maryland 6, Virginia 10, North Carolina, 5, South Carolina 5, and Georgia 3.

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers, and shall have the sole power of impeachment.

SEC. 3. [The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.]

Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year; and if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments [until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies].

No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years and been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a president pro tempore in the absence of the Vice President or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried the Chief Justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law.

SEC. 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day

SEC. 5. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House during the session of Congress shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

SEC. 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House they shall not be questioned in any other place.

No Senator or Representative shall during the time for which he was elected be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office.

SEC. 7. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve, he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within 10 days (Sunday excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States, and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him, or, being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

SEC. 8. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excise to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes;

To establish a uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;

To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States;

To establish post offices and post roads;

To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries;

To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court.

To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations.

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

To provide and maintain a navy.

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

SEC. 9. The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation not exceeding $10 for each person.

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless, when in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it.

No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another, nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by laws, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States, and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign State.

SEC. 10. No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation; grant letters of marque and reprisal; coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts; pass any bills of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility.

No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any State on imports or exports shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign power, or engage in war unless actually invaded or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President chosen for the same term, be elected as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.

The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a list of all the persons voted for and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify and transmit sealed to the seat of the Government of the United States directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such majority and have an equal number of votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by ballot one of them for President; and if no person have a majority, then from the five highest on the list the said House shall in like manner choose the President. But in choosing the President the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote. A quorum for this purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. In every case, after the choice of the President, the person having the greatest number of votes of the electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal votes, the Senate shall choose from them by ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes, which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No person except a natural-born citizen or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of 35 years and been 14 years a resident within the United States.

In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

The President shall at stated times receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States or any of them.

Before he enter on the execution of his office he shall take the following oath or affirmation: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

SEC. 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States. He may require the opinion in writing of the principal officer in each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment.

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur, and he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law, but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Seante by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

SEC. 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may on extraordinary occasions convene both Houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them with respect to the time of adjournment he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper; he shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

SEC. 4. The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

SEC. 2. The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls and those in which a State shall be party the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

SEC. 3. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act or on confession in open court.

The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1. Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof.

SEC. 2. The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime who shall flee from justice and be found in another State shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

No person held to service or labor in one State under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due.

SEC. 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union, but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

SEC. 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion and, on application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

ARTICLE V.

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE VI.

All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

ARTICLE VII.

The ratification of the conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same.

Done in convention by the unanimous consent of the States present the 17th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1787, and of the independence of the United States of America the twelfth. In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names.

ARTICLES IN ADDITION TO, AND AMENDMENT OF, THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PROPOSED BY CONGRESS, AND RATIFIED BY THE LEGISLATURES OF THE SEVERAL STATES, PURSUANT TO THE FIFTH ARTICLE OF THE ORIGINAL CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

ARTICLE II.

A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

ARTICLE III.

No soldier shall in time of peace be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE IV.

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

ARTICLE V.

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

ARTICLE VI.

In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the acusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

ARTICLE VII.

In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

ARTICLE VIII.

Excessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

ARTICLE IX.

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

ARTICLE X.

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

ARTICLE XI.

The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State.

ARTICLE XII.

The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President and of all persons voted for as Vice President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify and transmit sealed to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately by ballot the President. But in choosing the President the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice President shall act as President as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice President shall be the Vice President if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list the Senate shall choose the Vice President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice President of the United States.

ARTICLE XIII.

SECTION 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XIV.

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress or elector of President and Vice President or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States or under any State who having previously taken an oath as a Member of Congress or as an officer of the United States or as a member of any State legislature or as an executive or judicial officer of any State to support the Constitution of the United States shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof; but Congress may be a vote of two-thirds of each House remove such disability.

SEC. 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

SEC. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE XV.

SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XVI.

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

ARTICLE XVII.

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, Mr. Chairman, but I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we are now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very well. I will take time later.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course, I do not object, and I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] if he desires to afford his colleague some time.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me to use some time now, I will yield to the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, on the night of the 10th of September last the following article appeared in the Fall River Daily Globe, of the city of Fall River, Mass., where I reside, which city was then the headquarters of the United Textile Workers of America:

[From Fall River Daily Globe, Thursday, September 10, 1914.]

DEPLORABLE TEXTILE CONDITIONS.

(From yesterday's latest edition.)

The emergency committee of the United Textile Workers of America met yesterday and President Golden reported on his visit to the scene of the strike of textile workers of the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co., in Atlanta, Ga., and the deplorable conditions found among the strikers. An abstract from his report follows:
